School is actually very bad for teens. They force them to wake up really early, and when they say that to their parents, they tell them to go to bed earlier. And the way school is structured today is extremely bad for anyone's mental health. 1 like = 1 less sleepy teen!	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/52	1.923
2. If a parent is awake in the morning but we are not(the teens)and is a day for school is not good to just stand and do nothing ,when they can't wake up or don't won't to wake up because it feels like...that we aren't anything in this world,we aren't needed and no one cares about us...THAT'S JUST HOW I FEEL WHENEVER I SEE MY MUM ON HER PHONE DOING NOTHING AND MY ALARM IS ON AND I HAVEN'T GOT UP YET. AND IT HAS BEEN RINGING FOR 5-10 MINUTES! it really hurts...	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/92	2.174

Well I like to pour everything to my mother,mostly about my friends she starts scolding me when I hangout with boys from my class but nothing to my little sister ,I don't even touch them in any other way and when I say how close my friendship is with them she is like u shouldn't be that close even for talking I feel like I shouldn't tell her about my friends after all I didn't do anything illegal ,when I try to justify my action she is like why did u touch him on the shoulder ?why would you make fun of him etc ,I feel so bad as if I am the bad guy,finally she says this is why I hate talking to u, u cry over small things she wants me to be close with girls but if they r not worth my time, why should I waste my time and energy in I do have girls as my best friends and it's not like I don't love them or anything now they r in different schools but I still keep contacts and text them most of the days but I just seem to have a much better and happier time with the boys in my class	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/209	0.478

Parents: never compare your teen to others as in, "(insert older sibling's name) was doing this at your age ," or, "you're just like Uncle (insert name)." Early teen here."Don't ask questions!"This one hurts. It makes us feel like our questions don't matter/are too insignificant. "I'm just looking out for you."NO, this DOESN'T make us feel good or protected. We want to feel independent. When parents say this to us, it makes us feel like little children that need to be watched over."Because I said so."This ties into "Don't ask questions". We're at the age where we always want to know what's going on. Unless it's particularly sensitive, please tell us."Stop complaining!"Now, we all complain sometimes. This is perfectly valid when we are specifically trying to complain and aggravate parents. When we're simply voicing our concern, and not rudely? We don't like our concerns brushed off as complaints. Ugh when im sad or crying over a small thing, because I've had a stressful week and am on edge, my mom either ignores me or is like why are you crying ? I tell her whats wrong and she'l just brush it off like : it will be okay or its almost week end or its no big deal. And I hate that, my mom is a very generous and caring person but she is a bit of a tomboy and I cant really talk with her about problems or my feelings. Sometimes when I cry over a small thing, she can be really mad at me. For example, we had an argument about school and I start crying because of all the pressure and stress and she will be hella mad at me for crying, because why would you cry. And because of that I really bottle up my emotions and don't like to open up about my feelings...	Tomboy	Sexual Identity - Female homosexuality	1/161	0.621

Never ever say to your child, "You're just like your dad." My eldest son is 44 years old , and when he was really young, his father and I got divorced. My son remembers the abuse my ex- put me through. But he is the spitting image of his father. I have always done my best to never use that phrase. I married another man about 10 years later, and one day my son was acting out, being silly trying to get me to laugh, my husband came in the door and misread the situation, He got angry and told my son to stop acting out, he was acting like his dad. My son got so angry, worse then I have ever seen him. He started yelling, most of what he said was not understandable because he was crying so hard. My husband just got angrier, so I grabbed him by the arm and we went out to the front porch and I explained the situation, then I asked him to apologize to him he did not see the need, so I said would you do it for me? So he apologized to my son. And they got along better after I spent the night telling my husband about my first husband. He got up in the morning and woke up my son and really apologized to him for real.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/229	0.437

Once I told my mom that I was depressed , she told me ” Stop complaining ! There’s nothing to feel this way. You’re just feeling this way because you have been doing nothing and just sitting at a corner and crying for no reason. Stop making excuses and stop crying for no reason at all ”. And then I was like ” WHATTTT ?! ”. Tbh , that made me feel more depressed than usual. I wish if she would have just hugged me , instead. Cause at that time I was just so lost and helpless and yeah I guess, that’s what I needed the most. And now , I don’t tell about this to anyone out there cause i feel like no one really listens to you , you know. Uddipana Das my parents say ‘you can tell us anything’. i feel like i can’t though. i know more than im supposed to. (inappropriate stuff for a nine year old ) im pansexual and like stuff im not supposed to. (music)they want to know the real me but, i always say to myself ‘they won’t accept it. im too young. i need to wait till im older’. they also always wanna know what I’m doing. i get really paranoid. im cyber bullied by random people online. i hide my emotions. im really scared of a lot of things. very paranoid. i want to cry a lot. i kinda have social anxiety. (i don’t really like to talk to people) im also depressed. ive never confessed anything. (besides being depressed) my parents give me ‘inspirational speeches’. be yourself, you’re beautiful, blah blah blah. i don’t feel the prettiness. i can’t be myself. i don’t know what to do. my life is often yelling because my mom is bipolar and my sister also is. i always get afraid of everything. i feel like something bad is always gonna happen. im starting school soon. (i was homeschooled) i feel like im gonna be bullied. my mom says ‘be yourself, don’t take their word to heart’. im very sensitive. i can’t really change that.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/221	0.452

One idea for the hurry up thing is just to save up your money so you can take a cab to school if you miss the bus. Might help you hurry up a bit of money is involved, but it also takes the pressure off the parents. So maybe everybody will stay a bit calmer in the morning.I don't think parents should be responsible for getting their teenagers up and to the bus at that age . Really. I was setting my own alarm and getting my own breakfast by the time I was nine or younger. it's a life skill, people.	Age	Age - General	1/102	0.98

I'm not a parent but guys, remember to respect your parents. Sometimes, they scream at, yell at, ground, punish you only because they care about you. Don't ever think you're not loved by your parents. Who paid for your school, who guided you while you were young, who fed and bathed you, who loved you when no one else did? I used to be so angry at my parents because they always took the blame on me for my younger brother's doing and treated me unfairly. I always criticised them since I was so filled with anger but really they were looking out for me when I did things wrong and wanted the best for me. In the real world, nothing is perfect and happy go lucky. This world is full of trials and tests and once our parents let us go, we're responsible for what happens next.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/148	0.676
Ugh, I always hated the phrase "you guys," it's just so annoying when you weren't involved in whatever it was that your sibling(s) did! My mom follows like 99 of these traits alongside all the other videos.I think to myself that I was raised properly, but now I think I was raised as poorly as possible with the exception that my family "cares" if I did drugs or crimes. Aside from that, they basically did everything wrong judging by this videos list.Also doesn't help the fact that my parents also have NO Patience, if they ask me to help with something and I'm not there in exactly 0.1 seconds they're like "NEVERMIND I'LL DO IT!"My mom also yells every little thing to me as if my hearing wasn't bad enough. Due to that I've been yelled at most of my life, which must be why I like staying with my grandparents more. They don't yell at me, they're....somewhat on board with what I plan to do in the future, but nobody in my family aside from my dad has any sense of privacy. Sometimes not even him. My family just thinks I'm some tool they can control and use whenever they want to. That I'm not WORTHY to keep secrets. That I'm not WORTHY to pick my friends.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/197	0.508

If only parents could remember how hard being a teen was... it almost seems like their childhood never happened. If only parents could understand the way kids feel. But they don't and they won't so there's no reason to get your hopes up. If your parents love you, they'll tell you. Most of this stuff I'm okay with, but when my parents act like they understand it just really ticks me off. It's so obvious that they don't get your emotions. Hello, Mum and Dad if you see this. I'm too afraid to tell my parents how hard my life is, even over summer break (when nobody from your school can directly or indirectly hurt your feelings). Like this if you feel the same way.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/125	0.8
I agree completely.For example, here they say it's bad to tell your children "good job", "you're incredible", or "I'm proud of you". Well, in my experience, those three phrases were really encouraging for me as a child. I'd say having my parents praise me like this played an important role in me developing a healthy self-esteem. It's much better than having parents that trash talk their children and end up destroying their self-esteem.Also, I'd argue I'd be a lot less social if my parents hadn't taught me to be affectionate with my relatives, to say hello to people and stuff. I know I'm just one person, and that my example doesn't apple to everyone, but that's the point. These "no-no" phrases don't apply to everyone.	Apple	Ethnicity - Native-American	1/127	0.787

Instead of saying - "I'm proud of you" - which motivates and encourage kids to try even harder and of course get recognition, because kids want to be acknowledged for their good choices and actions - you should say - "your effort was not good enough" - " you disappoint me " - this is crazy ... THIS TYPE OF "" EDUCATIONAL VIDEOS "" ARE ONLY MAKING KIDS QUESTION THEIR INNER- STRENGTH AND SELF-SUFICIENCY ... ANY POSITIVE FEED BACK HELPS THE KID HAVE A POSITIVE BEHAVIOR AND WILL WANT TO ENGAGE MORE... I DISAGREE WITH IT... IF THERE'S NO MANUAL FOR HOW TO BE A PARENT, HOW IS THERE GONNA BE A WRONG POSITIVE PRASE ??? Talking about breaking negative habit ... because no one is perfect ... I MEAN THIS IS ABSURD... The one where you said you should say "Good for you" isn't really true (for me personally) because I take it as more of a "I don't care what you just did good for you" Rather than what you said. Also something parents should never do is compare their teens to their older siblings. I got my grades for school back recently and I thought I did really well (and all my friends were encouraging me too) BUT my parents (mainly my mum) was just like "Why didn't you get grade 9? Your brothers did much better than you did when they were your age " and I confronted her and directly told her that if she was trying to get me to do better than comparing me to my brothers wasn't the way to do that and all I really wanted to hear was more of a "Oh well done! Maybe you could've done better but I'm sure you tried your hardest and that's all that matters." (btw I got a grade 7 which is equivalent to an A in the old GCSE grades and I'm in yr 9 moving to yr 10 now). So yh... There's the story of my life right there XD. Well. for me , as a teenager . Parents would really hurt my feelings especially criticising either my physical or mental appearance by making a sarcastic conclusion based on their opinion idea.Example : "You are so weak, weak enough to handle a bucket full of water.* Besides that , it always hurts me when parents say : "Even your cousins/friends/relative can do better than you."Comparing your weakness among other people that had more "talent" than us. Sometimes , when they get too busy or during school , they less likely to see a postive side on us instead pushing negativity among us. Also, never tell a child or an adolescent that they don't FEEL something, or KNOW a certain feeling. I see SO many parents, including my own who tell their children, and these are often children suffering through hardships or even depression/anxiety that "you don't even know what that is, so stop saying you have it." you DON'T KNOW what someone else feels, you don't KNOW what they go through so STOP telling them they don't know or feel something. Look into it and keep a closer eye on them instead of denying their feelings or emotions, if they tell you they feel like that or have those experiences then they TRUST YOU, they think you'll care or try to help them, don't write it off, laugh at them or tell them to get over it or that they're just sad, or even that it'll pass by eventually. So many people blame video games and other media for their children committing suicide or acts of criminal offences but this is usually because their parent's don't care enough about them, ad say things like this to them. It gives a child the idea and mental image that they're alone and you don't care enough to try helping them, it brings on a sense of hopelessness and fear and that can cause a wide variety of bad actions to happen because of that.. Don't do that to your children, don't ruin their lives because you couldn't be bothered to care for them, to show them that you love and care for them. should be "I already had a/did [insert achievement here] when I was your age . You need to step it up and take charge of your life as an adult." idc what specialist say, saying "I'm proud of you!" wont harm a child's emotional health! personally, i never heard it enough while i was a teen and, due to bullying back in middle school and lack of praise (getting more, usually harsh, criticism instead), my self-esteem shot so far down that i'm to the point that hearing the words "I'm proud of you" causes me to be stunned i even received praise. i felt like i could never please my parents no matter what i did, and my grades and performance suffered for it. on the other hand, saying "I did/I had [blank] when I was your age ", puts unnecessary pressure on the teen to push themselves when they may not be ready to take on the challenge. your kids arent YOU, so don't force them to keep up w what u believe is "normal". things changed since u were a kid/teen, and nowadays some ppl tend to do things at their own pace when theyre good and ready. instead of reprimanding the teen for not doing or achieving something, praise them for what they HAVE accomplished even if it does seem insignificant to u. maybe it's a small deed for u, but for your kid it may feel like a big deal. ignoring their accomplishments and instead shaming them for things theyve yet to accomplish may develop resentment in your teen because he/she may feel u want them to be perfect or follow in their parent(s)'s footsteps when they dont want to, or theyll not bother trying to achieve anything because, what's the point?, they wont get recognition for it unless it's an accomplishment the parent wants/will recognize. i have also gone through this and i'm still going through this even at the age of 23, and i'll tell u it gets really infuriating when my parents keep pushing and pushing for me to accomplish things when i hardly get recognition for what i do accomplish. ah, speaking of, heres another thing u should never say to a teen or young adult: "Now that you've done [insert achievement here], you should try to aim for [insert higher achievement here]"! both that and the "I already had a/did [insert achievement here] when I was your age . You need to step it up and take charge of your life as an adult." r two of the worst things u can say to a child of any age , especially a teen. stop forcing your standards and agenda on your child and let them live life as they want to	Age	Age - General	5/456	1.096

Parents don't get it all right...ever, but if you know that they love you and they take time to praise you any way it comes out, please don't worry about the wording!! "Good Job" "Way to go" "I knew you could do it" "You Rock", it's all good! Respect your parent no matter what. IMO, a lot of kids these days have lost respect for their parents because they think we don't have a clue. Society tells them that, discrediting our credentials as the upper hand or the final say. My now 22 yr old son thought that too as a teen, But today he gets it and understands he didn't have all the answers back then and he's doing really well now!! We always told him we were proud of him...even when he messed up because it's not what you do that makes us proud, it's who you are that were proud of. Nothing wrong with saying "you're ok" Life isn't going to cater to kids as adults and give them everything they want. Parents have to be tough at times because life is a circus and hard at times. "This too shall pass" It's prep for later. IMO, kids are not as sensitive as this list seems to say they are. Kids are strong and resilient with tender hearts yes and seem to love a good " I messed up too when I was your age " story..haha.I agree with validating their feelings and emotions all the time, (adults need that too) Kids should always show some respect and love to family. Time goes fast and you never know what that hug or smile means to the older generation. It makes their whole day. I agree that older siblings are an example but that's pressure they don't need. Each child is responsible for their own actions and should be held accountable. Bottom line, being a parent is not easy and neither is being a kid, but if you know they are trying and respect that, give them a break and don't sweat the small stuff. It's tricky to get it right every time you want to relay that you really are proud of your child. I try to think of how what I say will sound to her. I am specific on what I am referring to, and try not to make a blanket statement. It is something that you really have to put yourself in their shoes and remember how it felt to be their age . I try. I think I did something right, because my oldest kids that are on their own call me every day. I don't expect it, I'm just thrilled that they want to talk to me on their own accord. My youngest is 17, and it's so hard to see her go through heartbreak... and often she doesn't want to share why she's so upset. I just let her know I'm there. They don't necessarily want unsolicited advice when they are in emotional pain. When she's come and thrown herself in my arms, howling from heartbreak, I just hold her. Whether or not she chooses to tell me what's up is of little importance. Knowing that she can just be comforted by her mom without being questioned is very important I think. I may be right, because she does still come to me and it's ok to not have to talk. I THINK I'm giving her what she needs from me. I know that is what I'm trying to do with every ounce of my being. Not a phrase but when my/parents talk about their problems, it makes me uncomfortable and worse, it makes me feel like I was the cause of it. Since parents work to support their children, it makes me feel like "maybe they wouldn't have as much problems if I didn't come along".Also, it's understandable that parents have struggles like us teenagers/children, but randomly saying things like that instantly put down a good mood. As well as mistaking a joyful little moment in their life as getting a negative response (I made a nice drawing in my style and my parent first complained that the eyes were too big).Also saying that you're overreacting can damage mental health and behavior, it makes me love my quiet and solitude, 'cause then I wouldn't be bothered and be judged or pressured or asked abOUT EVERYTHING I DO (sorry) and this is why I'm pretty much only awake at night.Last, unappreciatednessUsually smart teens are constantly pressured in school once their talents show, they are expected to be the best, they don't care about how well you did in one subject, it becomes so common it isn't impressive anymore. They just care and complain about what you did wrong, not only does it unnecessarily pressure and damage mental health, it made me stop showing my success.Two reasons:Fear of negativity because style and subject is barely understoodNot being noticed enough because, always busy and because they are already familiar with this talentSo in conclusion:Appreciate your kids more	Common, Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Social Class - Working class	3/258	1.163

Some of these apply to every age . Like the first one. Most adults have to worry about bills and work, but there are people out there who have to deal with worse things. My personal favourite is when you constantly get compared to your older sibling and get told how much better they were at your age , and even if they're shown absolute incompetence many times in the years you've spent together, you'll never feel like you're anything compared to them, and look, if they've only achieved this much and you're that much worse at everything than them, then how do you want to achieve anything at all in life? And here's the best part; even if they do tell you that you're "pretty great" when they're in the mood to like you and be nice to you and aren't ranting about how much of a mistake you are, you can't take the compliment/encouragement because you don't believe they're being sincere, or your own self-esteem has gotten so low that you believe it's a complete lie, and that's how you develop impostor syndrome, among other things. Red Fork 2000 - Agree, too often we overlook the child who is capable of accomplishing more in favor of not offending the child who needs more time or simply learns in a different way. They should all be encouraged to reach their potentials.I think maybe a better statement than "I'm so proud of you" might be "I'm so proud of the way you thought this out!" or "I'm so proud of the way you made this happen!" That still conveys parental pride but keeps the focus on the child's effort and leaves the door open for a different assessment next time, so no undue pressure for the next task. Radheya Salmeen Radheya Salmeen thats a good policy to have in a religion. A lot of people twist religion into a mind control rather than a way of life and redemption from sins for the soul. I grew up always being told "the bible says you have to respect me because im older/your parent" but people who quote religious texts for their own good tend to dismiss the parts they dislike. There's a verse in the bible that says parents do not trouble your children (not quoted kinda pataphrased). My older brother printed it out at school and taped it on our fridge. He got grounded for 2 months for being disrespectful enough to question authority. Which totally misses the entire point of Christianity. And same goes for any other religion. Study your book if you're going to quote it. Because if you dont you ruin your own image and the image of your religion. I dont know much about the muslim religion but i do believe that there's a lot more to it then what media says and that a mutual respect of all people regardless of age shouldn't be just specific to your beliefs religious or not but rather an act of human decency that shouldnt have to be stated. Here are some things that I think about a lot. That make me feel not so confident about myself. -when my parents compare me to other people-make me try to explain my emotions. I don't like it when they expect me to explain my emotions because emotions are complicated and they are messy and hard to explain. -call other people my age beautiful/cute/gorgeous/etc. It's fine if they are just complimenting them like my friends or such but like when we are out for dinner and they would say "oh look that girl looks about your age ! Look how absolutely stunning she is!" Because it makes me feel like they wish I looked better -im not sure how to explain this one but I was talking about possible career options with my mom and she would say things like "No that's not a good job choice it doesn't pay well and you'll live on the streets" I think you should instead support them on their interests and don't discourage them about making it as an adult if you wouldn't want them in a certain career for absolute certain then lightly ask about other interests and don't directly state that their choice is bad because everyone changes careers and it's normal to want to explore what you want to do in life and plan your future	Age	Age - General	2/225	0.889

As an 18 year old , I disagree with steering parents away from encouraging their child? I would LOVE to hear my parents say they're proud of me. And telling me good job, or saying I'm incredible or whatever wouldn't add to my stress level. As a teenager, I definitely can say this stuff does hurt people in my age group! Especially the "I'm so proud of you" one. "Proud of what, what did I do that made you proud?" and "You don't mean that" are instantly things that go off in my sister and I's heads when we hear that from our parents. (Actually, our parents have said all these things on the Never Say List. They're not bad parents by any means, but I'm reaching that age where they're less Mom and Dad and more like friends, they aren't super good friends by the looks of it and based on how I've felt about it recently. I've also had a similar experience that was extremely painful and still is that's associated with "be the good role model for siblings" thing. I draw to entertain myself, and the way I learn is to imitate what other people have done by adding some of their technique to my style. My mom stumbled across one of my old school notebooks that I draw like this in and she confronted me and told me to slow down and wait for my sister to catch up- I interpreted this as "stop because you can't be better than her, so don't try to be"). These phrases on the list honestly hurt and I've asked kids at school about how they feel about stuff like those empty responses and they've had the same response as my sister and I did- "they don't care, they're not listening, they're not paying attention, they dont mean it." So, really, DON'T say stuff like this to your teenager. This list is pure honesty and I'm glad our opinions are getting out there. These psychologists know what they're talking about when they say we'll feel a certain way when someone else takes control, when we're put in uncomfortable situations, when our feelings are tossed aside. Raging hormones are enough to drive us crazy , we don't need insecurities added to the mix. So, yeah, don't say the things on the list to your kids and teenagers- it has a negative impact. Take it from a teen.	Age, Crazy, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/360	1.111

Power Twin Theorists- chat edition , as a person who was once a teenager and now is a grown up working with teens, I can tell you that parents do the best they can. As you grow up, you'll understand - being a parent is a really nasty 24/7 job- no shortcuts and no hiding places. Teenagers are incredibly difficult to work with because- simply put - they know nothing , but think they know everything. They have no life experience , but their personality is forming and they somehow think they are the centre of the universe - so their problems are bigger than everyone else's. It's not their fault at all - it's just the way things are. In childhood they were sheltered by their parents and didn't experience hardships- now they are becoming independent and terribly sensitive about everything. (" Don't hug me, mom, my friends will see me and laugh at me!" - you've no idea how hurtful these words can be to a parent- suddenly realising that his her child is ashamed of his her sign of affection. But, all that matters to a teenager is that some kids will laugh at him her). You see, things are difficult on both sides. Still, both parents and kids need to be wise. Wisdom comes with age , though, and nobody's perfect.	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	2/224	0.893

naly202 thanks! I'll definitely consider at looking at proko! I've already subscribed to Jazza and I'm thrilled to have met another viewer of his, or at least someone who's researched him! I also really like your suggestion of posting myself in videos on YouTube. I like to draw, theorize, and I'm into the other arts like singing, gaming (It's a skill as much as it can be a pain), dancing (for fun) and playing instruments, and while those are things that are great for my self esteem and effectively keep boredom at bay, it makes it very difficult to know what my channel would be centered around. If anyone has opinions, you can leave a comment...There are already some videos of my sister and I online, if you search for Dana and Morgan piano recitals, the little brunette girls in front of the white keyboard on the right are my sister and I about four years ago. Also on Matt Mullin ALS ice Bucket Challenge, my sister and I did the intro for that closer to five years ago or something, all I know is it happened before we moved. So, I'll definitely see if I can enter the community. I have a microphone set at home I could start with for audio and I don't know where I could get a camera... If anybody wants to be helpful in locating video cameras, if they could comment it'd be appreciated. So, Thanks naly202!As for the parent subject, again, I understand they work as hard as they can (my mom gets a teacher's salary as a paraprofessional teacher's assistant in the school Library and my dad was jobless for a year after First National Bank cut off half of their programing department in my city and I've seen how hard the two of them still work to put a roof over their daughters' heads. I mean absolutely no disrespect towards them- they're my heroes). It's just sometimes I feel there's a disconnect between myself and them, and that phrases like the ones seen in the video this comment's connected to, are definitely a great source of confusion. I don't often feel like people are insincere, much less my parents, I just feel like they could elaborate on what they mean by "proud" and stuff like that, like, explain why or what we're doing right so my sister and I, and my high school classes, can keep that in mind when we face something difficult and stressful, because then we can think "at least you're good at , they're proud of you for . They love you, you can do this." They shouldn't have to protect me if I need to learn a bit on my own to get by. I feel like some conversations can be difficult because of the sides that you pointed out. Like you said, teenagers are in their own little world, for some it might be collapsing around them and others might be only just finding out what the outside works wants from them, and those pressures can be difficult to handle of there isn't a proper emotional support system in place for us. And while some teenagers might seem at a loss for words about what they think about the world, its because the works is crazy and will keep on spinning on its axis like it always does and with all the stuff going on at times, it seems daunting that another day, a harder day, will always keep coming! But adults know that what life throws at you, you have to make something great of it, and to work even when you're scared of it, whether it's to get by, keep your jobs, support a family, etc, you're on it. But that's because you learned all this, or at least, many did, when you were a teenager, too. I think the problem is that	Crazy, Race	Ethnicity - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/914	0.328

Well... the hurry up thing...My mom everyday wakes me up screaming and sometimes I even fall asleep in class because I dont sleep well... And even worse I have a little sister and if we get late in school she starts to cry and my mom just screams to me more...And with the little sister... She does not tell me that... she just screams to me when I critisize myself and my sister starts crying (I know it is just for attention of making my life horrible because she is 9 years old) and then my mom gives my sister the ”attention” she wantsAnd finally when I get to school my classmates yell all the day and I go home with a strong headache and stress in my life		Old	Age - Over 65s	1/132	0.758

anonymous singer Why are you making all of these assumptions about me? If it counts for anything, I'm not a parent, I'm a 22 year old adult that has studied (formally) things such as these, I take an interest in them.I know this video wasn't specifically made to throw parents under the bus, but I still believe things could have been shown/told differently because look at the comments section... It's full of children claiming "abuse" and stuff like that.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/80	1.25

Question: when a teen is emotionally stressed out about something and the parent asks them what is wrong, the teen usually says something like " nothing " or "leave me alone" and then the parent will leave them alone. Is it the child's fault for saying those things and not telling the parent about their problem in the first place?	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/58	1.724

As I see it even at 18 your still somewhat a child. Studies show that Males(Not sure about females, probably sooner) aren't fully matured until around mid 25. As a 25 year old I agree. In the past few years my way of thinking has changed for the better. I guess it depends on the individual.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/56	1.786

Sabina Samad I know right? It sounds classic but just replace with the version it would with your life. And Jemma J, I completely agree, I always relate to this. Just today I was thinking how overly competitive I get whenever somebody in my school or anyone my age or younger than I may know plays a more well known song or plays it better than I can on piano. I feel bad for them that I dont let them shine above. But I also feel like I just cant stop the habit. I just have gotten used to being compared with others (even though it doesnt happen anymore, or that often). As a result i am more unnecessarily "competitive." Although i am also happy to say i am overcoming this slowly.	Age	Age - General	1/133	0.752
Wish it actually was like that, teachers do it to, for example " your doing so well! " says the teacher working with s kid, I get a question right and don't miss anything "... Aziz Quadri , they might have a point though, kids nowadays start watching Disney channel-( lots of teenager targeted TV shows) at an early age -7-8. That's because for some people (some women, in particular) adolescence started at age 10, others between 11 and 13. The "teen years" are marked as being between 10 and 19 years old , and it's within this second decade of life that brains and bodies start changing. Katelou Mathieson what's a "teem?" NO, adolescence starts at 13 and ends at 19. Teen years, ("teen" meaning "to add ten") don't begin until one turns 10 years old and ends when that same individual turns 19. That's why ages 10-12 years are considered "tween" or the misnomer "pre-teen". Understand?	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/50	2.0
