Most of the comments are self proclaimed depressed teens who think they know everythingThis is just a phase in life no matter how much you dont wanna hear it. As a gen X'er, I feel for the gen z's. My niece and nephew (my sister's kids) and my daughter are gen z. My son is born after them in 2008 so I don't know what he'd be. I'm reading some comments on how social media may not be causing anxiety or depression, but rather it's the state of the world that is, and I totally agree. The kids are REALLY scared for the future but feel powerless so they escape thru electronics, they feel super timid about social rules being and not being offensive and are insecure and super sensitive in a crippling way. It makes me shake my head that people want to blame something else rather than look at the world they're leaving to them as a major cause. Especially the boomers. My mom is a boomer. She divorced three times. My brothers are millennials and never married and one still lives in my moms basement. They're scared of relationships. They're screwed up. She does not fully understand how hard it is for the other generations. My daughter just started high school and last year she had to pick her courses. What do you tell a kid who may not even see half the jobs existing by the time she graduates? When my son graduates, will university even exist? Already it's becoming obsolete and too expensive. It's a dinosaur and behind the times. Many companies will train directly because many degrees will mean nothing. Education is still stuck in rural farming culture. The biggest fears are the economy, and climate change. It's not encouraging to see boomers so selfish and critical of younger generations even denying climate change altogether because they don't want to change their lifestyle or give up comfort.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/294	0.34
It's so weird how the vast majority of Gen Z kids (10 - 13) have depression or anxiety...Like damn who hurt you? I'm also 13 but I have never felt depressed or felt anxiety from what iv'e seen is that we are actually pretty optimistic but somehow we have a STRANGE obsession with sexuality? TBH from what I heard before the 90s like I guess kids had more freedom like they could literally stay outside until the light flickers or go to the movies by themselves. I want that experience while I am still young cause I'm practically a teen now and tbh I want more time.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/107	0.935
bruh huge difference betwee younger genz and older genz younger genz age 7-12 are closer to gen alpha and older genz 13-18 are closer to the actual definiton of Genz and 19-24 closer to millennials as genz: i can sure tell you that we never had a smart phone growing up nor did we spend our time watching youtube like the younger kids gen alpha is a joke because of millennials look at the most subscribes YouTubersrn theres isn't much to group us all together as Genz and most of the time people get Genz mix up with alpha and gen y (millennials....) like hello we are gen z...	Age	Age - General	1/112	0.893

Do NOT call is igen, Gen Z, post-millennials, Homeland Generation (I prefer this one), The Sisu Generation, or Gen Delta. It hurts knowing that the other generations take us for living on our smartphones. But your the ones who created it. We are just the result of the creation. We dont get depressed because of our smartphones, iPads, tablets, or computers. We get depressed because we are the only generation that accepts nothing matters and that the world is practically a shattered vase. We are depressed because we know the pain. I have Replied on this Post for a while now, But this is my final one. Generation Z is a Young but not the Youngest generation out there. There is Gen Alpha, Whom literally always finds ways to Play with the Tech available to them. Gen Z is a Multi-Personality Generation, So you obviously can't speak for all of us. I'm currently in 7th Grade, but tbh, Me and MILLIONS of Gen Z feel as though they are Cheated or Ignored by the School System, and put as a Puppet. When most of us go to explain it to our Parents or Family, Many of them above the Age of 20 say "your generation is just lazy" or "we did much more work than you ever did". In a way, They are right, But mostly no. Millennials are the Generation just above us, and who still believe we are apart of them or a Puppet. Back in 2009, I used to see that the Millennials in my Family treated me and my Fellow Gen Z Family members like utter Dirt, While the Millennials were treated (not like angels but similar). 10 years later, In 2019, Me and my Gen Z family members are Grown as they were 10 years Earlier, But we are treated like Children, Even though we qualify as Teenagers. Moving on, Gen Y is VERY Similar to Millennials, So similar in fact, They are often being Joined into the Generation. Gen X, The Generation above Gen Y/Millennials is a very different Generation. They are very Organic and Nature going and often believe the 1950's/1940's are some of the Best decades in American History. Like almost all Generations before and after, You cannot Speak for all. Most of Gen X is the way the Stereotype is, The Nature going/Natural Organic/Angered at literally Everything wrong kind. Baby Boomers, Baby Boomers are one of the most "different" Generations out there, Simply because they were Hippies while most of their Children became Hipsters and their Parents being the Average 1950's Kind. Baby Boomers are the ones who do blame us for being messed up due to "social media" and Iphone use, But in reality, They were the ones who made it after all, Apple, Microsoft.. Etc.. Going deeper, The Silent Generation is one of the few, Very "antique" Generations. They are in fact (Different but not Different). They are the Reason Factories were able to bring up Economic Growth for Gen X, But ultimately failing to Help other Generations due to their motto for Kids/Teens: "To be Seen, But not to Speak" Or something like that. I would continue this, But time matters, so I will end this with one, Very simple Signing to my Fellow Gen Z, and also Gen Alpha: Pls fricken make this world greater and end the corrupt school system pls ;-;, the school system is a failure, and we should all learn via online (from tuesday to thursday), if this happens for workplaces as well, depression and stress make go down a bit, so pls do it :)	Age, Apple	Age - General, Ethnicity - Native-American	2/512	0.391

Why can't there be a single video on youtube about genertion z given by generation z. It's always old people thinking they know who we are and who we will become. It's ridiculous.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/33	3.03
Previous generations, if you do not understand our Intellect then do not study us, technology completely changed us to smarter people, we search all kinds of things on google and we become more curious we learn and use the knowledge, you cant just say that were laziest generation looking at our phone screens on 24/7 doing nothing , while " nothing " is actually learning something new, if computer didn't exist I would have been a casual guy, now I stand out from most of the people and my personality definetly changed after the internet, I'm proud of myself and us, there are many Gen Z kids who wanna change the world to positive place and do not care about money at all, alot of Gen Z are smart and willing to change world, education system will be terminated completely after few decades because the way of it treat us is just horrible, they're forcing us to do something that we don't want to and that is a crime, however we might want to find alternative resources for further knowledge investments of the society.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/181	1.105
Anna Mireault no we didn't. We had absolutely no millennial experiences at the age of 3 or 5 wtf aside from the fact that although technology was present none of us got to use it, we're still pretty gen z. Definitely better than 2005 and beyond but accept you're a gen z.	Age	Age - General	1/52	1.923

This makes me more depressed knowing that us gen zs are looked down upon. Nobody think that one day we will be the future, nobody knows past generations have given us so much problems to solve.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	2/36	5.556

I'd say genZ should be described as 'planners' I have been exploring potential career paths from age seven, now at thirteen I'm using the sjwness of millennials to my advantage, toget in to an early college program called peg by sayin pg that my gender dysphoria is me being non-binary rather than actually trans(ftm). I'm going in to biology, and going on to a good graduate school to get my doctorate in biomedical engineering to design devices that actually make a difference for people who were injured or lost limbs fighting for our country. I plan to double major in art and design so that I can design appealing advertisement by myself, independently. Maybe the I in igen stands for independent, because most of my classmates are also planning to make it on the world on their own. If you want something done you have to do it yourself, but leave room for passion. I'm passionate about art and biology, and I want to help people who serve in the armed forces, to be a support to lean on. GenZ will be successful, using the shortcomings of previous generations to their advantage, helping each other because no one else will, seeking out facts for them selves because every other source has an agenda, this is genZ, and we're here to stay, until we inevitably fail and die. Having readily available knowledge helps us, the Gen Z, to be realistic, to improve and change. Like sure, mental illness is on the rise (has been for a while), but heck that's why we bring it out because we want to be honest with ourselves and help each other out. We all have our struggles, and it's those struggles and relating to others that might actually leave a better world for the generation after us. Why does no one mention the fact that the vast majority of gen z aren't sexist, homophobic , or racist we accept so many different types of people without being obnoxious about it like the millenials. We take time to get to know people before smacking labels on them like all the older generations and refusing to give them a chance. No one talks about the fact that we have reached the point where we consider homophobia , racism , and sexism to be idiotic and illogical. This video is liberal media prapaganda. Gen Z and even more as you get older continuing into what the most accurate polls can predict, the next years of voters will be more and more and more conservative than the last years of voters with exceptions for typical party intervals. They are expected when they are all of voting age to be solidly conservative politically and extremely entrepreneural similar to gen Xer's but the degree to how socially liberal+conservative will be surprising. The ONLY thing confusing those media talking about Gen Z/iGen that aren't making propaganda pieces is that they seem socially "liberal" and conservative on punishment as well as economically conservative/liberal, except liberal in this sense refers to the laws while conservative refers to society's responsibility to people while liberal also refers to it's traditional political meaning and not it's reversed leftist meaning of "authoritarian progressive social laws that criminalizes all traditions and things older generations value," into meaning they are very liberal with the law with regards to social issues but very traditional with regards to expectations and the expression of those expectations (that fall under liberal social laws that allow expression for and against mainstream), economically traditionally american and conservative, both in their spending and the government's. Can we stop hating on generations that are mainly comprised of children? Every generation has had serious issues, whether you like to address it or not, for example, (racism, slavery, sexism, normalised abuse, homophobia, freaking WW1 and 2..)And yet, with all the other far more major problems that have occurred, what will be the most tolerant and advanced people that will likely accomplish so many wonderful things, are being criticized for spending too much time on their phones.. A very minor issue compared to the rest of human history if you ask me..May I add that criticising children and calling them stupid for technology overuse has a sort of sick and twisted feeling to it? It's almost as if saying that they're already predestined to be moronic druggies that can't do anything useful for anyone.Mocking the younger generations has always existed and different generations just have different cultures than you do,criticising it doesn't make you better than anyone.Anyway, those are just my views, have a nice day to whoever is reading.	Homophobia, Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Sexual Identity - General	3/176	1.705
Millennialist: 80s-90s Gen Z: late 90s-Late 00sGen Alpha: 2010-2020s The generation being surrounded with technology and phones is gen alpha. My cousin is only 8 and has never been seen without a tablet in her hand. As a gen Z member, I remember how everyone was amazed by the iPhone. It was kind of unfathomable to have a phone like that. Our house had only one computer which everyone in the house used. Eventually everyone got a laptop or desktop but that's because they became easier to purchase. Also, there was an increase for them in childhood education. Sure, I learned how to work a computer at school, and I've learned the proper way you should be surfing the web; it wasn't a big of a thing to use technology until I was in middle school. Advances in phones, tablets, and computers made it easy for anyone to communicate, research, and veg out however they wanted.What I think that is forgotten is that now, the teenagers who are constantly on their phones, are seen more as introverted losers. When in fact, this is the opposite. We go through the same social experiences as the older generations. We aren't unable to relate to others. We go through break ups, fall outs, drama, gain friends, build international relationships, learn about various cultures, keep up with family all using our phones. Sure it's not pen and paper, or face to face, but at it's core it is still considered communicating. It's the same as sending a letter and waiting for a response, but only quicker. Most people have mental disorders because there is no barrier from the real world, the thousands of ads we receive in one hour, and the pressure that we have to be better than our predecessors simply because we can type things fast. We process so much that it's hard to put it down when almost every thing you see is designed to prey on the weakest parts of your mind.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/334	0.299

When baby boomers are too scared to recognize it as a problem. Social media isn't only dividing us as age groups it's uniting us. I hate that everyone keeps saying the reason we are depressed us because of technology. First of all most people are self diagnosing themselves and don't even know what depression actually is and!! Mental health is almost never fucking talked especially stuff other than depression. I root from a very toxic family and life and I think things like these are never talked about. Children who have dealt with trama at a young age are just treated like it never happened. There's alot of shit going on in families that everyone likes to pretend doesn't exist. I have issues that root from a very bad past. Lots of gen z are realizing the stuff they went through might have been toxic emotional abuse or manipulation. THESE STUFF NEED TO BE TALKED ABOUT. the reasoning isn't like being there's more tech it's because alot more people are speaking up about what they have been going through. It's interesting that this video didn't talk at all about how much this generation cares about the environment. There is a movement to reduce consumerism, go vegetarian/vegan, compost, recycle, buy less, have a smaller carbon footprint, stop fast fashion, etc. This generation also values travel quite a bit. The self-help and body positivity movement is thriving, as is minimalism, zero-waste, and nomadic lifestyles. This generation will not be known as "iGen" in fifty years..... my dad uses his iPhone and Facebook way more than I do, and I'm 20 years old .	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/91	1.099

Why's everyone bursting at this? This video is actually quite hopeful and positive compared to the usual yet everyone is focusing on the little tidbit of social media. It always comes back to 'oh woe me, the bitter old people think we are losers because of what THEY did smh' but we fail to realize that we shouldn't take what we don't agree with to heart and instead use it to better ourselves. Social Media makes us connected but ofc it has its own cons, so what we can do is to emphasise the pros.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/95	1.053

I was born in 1997 (22) and I absolutely HATE when older talk about our generation, grouping all of us in a box, and talking about us like were some odd species. I honestly have so much hope for the future. What I see in my peers and the change that is happening right now because of young people is inspiring. I think the internet forces you to become more open minded. Now don't get my wrong, the internet can be a dark place and there are negatives to it, but at the end of the day would you choose living in the age where there were radios and no TV or just simply appreciate how far we've come? Personally as a 16 year old female, I struggled so much with depression and the anxieties from social media. So for my 2019, I decided to remove social media from my life. For the two months I've been doing it thus far, I have had so much more perspective. It's good to take a break, and now I get to study my imbecile peers up close and personal. Born 1996. I definitely knew a world without smart phones and the internet. Granted, the internet existed when I was a kid but it was nowhere near as commonly used in households. I grew up with a Nintendo, PlayStation 1, and CD players. When we did actually get the internet we had aol dial up. Smart phones were not a common thing until late into my teen years, and I didn't even actually have one until college. I have never considered myself Gen Z. I definitely have more in common with my older millennial sisters (80s) than Gen Z.	Common	Social Class - Working class	2/99	2.02

What is key to keep in mind is that age we were when the digitalisation happened heavily depends on where we live. For myself, growing up in central-eastern Europe, the Internet didn't really happen until around 2007, so it is far from true that everybody born in the "western world" after 1995 grew up with Internet at home from birth.	Age	Age - General	1/60	1.667
Honestly, I wouldn't say I'm born in the wrong generation but I feel as if there is a lot of pressure growing up in these times. And as accepting as a lot of us are of things that weren't accepted years ago, if you wanna set your phone down and not text back for awhile, people act like you die or don't care about them at all. Over a simple conversation. It's like everyone feels entitled to attention 24/7 and they blame you in some way of being a problem. Start something out of nothing . Of course someone of this generation can go outside and get away from technology but it gets lonely sometimes. Almost like it's weird behavior for an average kid/teenager. Inviting a friend is a hit or miss. They could either be on the same page as you or most likely, bring their phone to snap a selfie. But at the same time, I understand bringing your phone for safety reasons. That was the intention of phones in the beginning. Contact. Emergency. But I almost feel as if that leads to someone eventually going on their phone out of habit. If you have little self control... of course you'll check every 10 minutes. Now it seems the amount of followers and appreciation you get, determines self worth. Technology is amazing, I just wish that people could embrace both life and technology and important and not. This is just my thoughts on this. I just turned 19 this year and I feel as if it's hard to keep contact with people who have (so far) lived the majority of their lives online. No one can really say how this will turn out as kids will get older but I just hope my kids get a choice or can get balance between the real world and the online world. I just want them to be able to have a choice and be happy.	Nothing, Weird	Age - Youngsters, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/324	0.617

I was born in 1996, and I feel like I can relate to both early gen z's and late millennials. Like, my childhood was playing outside with friends and family. I watched cartoons on a box tv with an antenna. I grew up with more VHS than DVD movies, and even when I got DVD's, they were normal ones cause Blu-ray wasn't really a thing yet. I didn't get an actual working phone until 8th grade, and that was only because I had after school clubs. If I wanted to use a real cellphone, I could... but there'd be no battery or no SIM card in it. And I was fine with that. My family didn't alway have cable. For half of my life, we'd have cable for Maybe a couple of years before it got shut off because we couldn't afford to pay it. I remember dial-up somewhat because we had a super old computer, and I clearly remember using a landline until I was about 14 or 15. But, what I don't get is why my parents, the same ones who wouldn't buy me my own phone until I was almost in high school, have gotten my 11 year old sister an iPhone, 2 ipads, and a kindle. She's 11. She only needs the iPad cause it's for school, and that's it.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/224	0.893

I think that generations should be grouped up into short time frames. I was born in '98 and I have very little in common with the kids born post 2005. I didn't grow up with the internet on tap, and I was in secondary school by the time I actually saw and used an iphone in real life. The decades of generations works for older gens as they had slower advancements in technology and society. what i'm worried the most is that our parents and the old generation is gonna leave the society facing new problems such as the dependability with social media to get through any occassion. Seriously we really dont need the internet and social media because it. is. ruining. us. And it's for generation z and the next generation's problem to face in the future as well as with global warming and unsustainability with pollution -ehem-plastic pollution. But we must realize that as early as now we need to solve it. The old generation would leave the future with something they started that they didnt know could create a problem and the generation z are left to solve it which is very inconsiderate. 1995 Internet commercialised world wide Gen Z startGen Z: it should be way after 9/11 (Tragic American event)Let's ignore a major events that changed every country for the better, of 1 tragic event in one country. By that logic Japan, certain parts of Africa, UK, Germany, Poland and more should change. Some countries went through huge changes while others didn't.The idea of basing a generation on tragic events mainly from the US is ridiculous.If we go by a tragedy that messed up every country all Generations would have to change and some unchanged.You can correct me on this opinion.To those using personal experience, everyone is different with some similarities due to riches (poor, middle class or rich), ethnic background, religious or no beliefs, and how you were brought up.You can be 30, 20 and 8 but be brought up by the same generation with similar things within the household and values but only differ due to changes in neighbourhood and background.Some of the newest gens alpha Z and oldest Gen Y were raised by Gen X, thanks to egg freezing, surrogates and....single mothers doing their thing.If we add changes to education, gaming systems and apps (some are using as change of generation) that would make generations ridiculously small. People in the 80's had games and cartoons that still being made so I wouldn't use that as a generational difference since those things started earlier.Just a cusp opinion generation 5years before 2000. I understand that social media has pros and cons. But people seem to focus on the cons way more. I also understand that social media can bring unhappiness to people but social media isn't the only reason that people have depression or anxiety. Lots of people act like 'social media is the devil and it's the only thing that causes mental health problems' but that's not right. Personally, I have depression but I don't use social media Social media at all. Sorry I wasted your time reading this, but a lot of people don't like the internet and I just needed to vent. I definitely remember having a landline, then flip phones, keyboard phones, THEN smart phones.Technology has changed so much from my childhood to now in just a few short years. Thinking about it makes me sick with nostalgia. Just a few examples:Music: Tapes to CDs to iPods to Limewire to Apple Music to Spotify streaming. Movies: VHS to DVDs to Netflix Nintendo: Gameboy to DS to Wii to Switch The Internet: Only html pages that were extremely basic and slow to load versus what we have now that is lightning quick and cluttered with ads everywhere. I hate how people assume I use the internet and social media to compare myself and to play around all the time. Yeah, I'm Gen-Z by technicality, I use technology to write and communicate because I have anxiety and depression, but that depression came later on in life when people started telling me I was going to fail because of my career ideas. I didn't grow up using computers. I grew up running around in the backyard and wanting to be a cowgirl with a big truck. Then I learned about writing and dance and I have to use the internet for some of the connections with that and help because people hear "I want to be a dancer" or "I want to be a writer" and then bam! "You're going to be a failure". But I go online to research how I can make it possible and bam! "You rely on the internet too much, why don't you ask people around you for help" like... bitch. Nobody around me knew how to dance or thought I should be a dancer. Did you want me to run away to the city, possibly end up on the streets alone hating myself everyday or killed? They blame social media and comparing themselves to others for gen z being higher in depression and anxiety rates, it's true but in the way that this generation is wildly more aware of what's going on in the world at a younger age , they don't get the filter of the local news station or paper to see what's going on in the world, they have easy access to every angle of everything going on. Living in the moment isn't as easy of a choice anymore with having to deal with the fact that things like global warming aren't jokes anymore like they were 20 years ago and that fossil fuels are running out because some rich people wanted more money, they're left to deal with real life consequences of the generations before us and well if that doesn't give you anxiety I'm not sure what would	Age	Age - General	1/146	0.685
Older gen Z's aren't as obsessed with technology as young ones. Kids born in like 2008 were using iPads as soon as they were like 12. Yeah I always had the internet and computer games, but smart phones weren't common until I was in 6th or 7th grade. We'll really see how gen Z is in 10 years. I'm currently in 8th grade, so I would like to inform some adults what goes on in a Gen Z's day to day life. I would like to inform you that we are not what we think. In my school, I can't speak for others, the kids are pessimistic, tired, sad, and opinionated. "See Something, Say Something"(an initiative based on preventing violent acts and improving student mental health through student awareness of problems and learning to see signs of depression in and outside of school, mostly based on social media) is shoved down our throats, teaching us do something most of us refuse to do, not for our sake, but for others. Almost all of us know what it is like to be in a dark place, and we know that adults knowing that you don't want help from does nothing but hurt you. We are too sympathetic to do something before they try to handle it themselves, but no adult understands that, and rather sees mental illness as something that they could prevent by forcing the child to talk. In my school, we talk about what a wreck the school system is. State testing gives us anxiety that we can't afford. We retain very little of what we learn, a result of being taught to learn for a test, and not to learn for ourselves. We find our interests outside of school and have intelligent discussions about these interests with our friends. We pressure ourselves to succeed in school, even though we find most of it pointless, because if we don't do well our failure will be on the news, mocking us for being the "worst generation yet." In my favorite class, English, we have class political discussions and have Socratic Circles, a learning form borrowed from Socrates, in which we teach each other based on what we already in an organized and polite discussion. That is the only class I have ever taken in which the teacher encouraged us to be free thinkers, further our learning by ourselves, and to pursue our interests. In fact, we once had a debate on whether Fantastic Beasts was racist or sexist because of an article that a student read. Our teacher assigned homework that night was to research the issue, form an educated response, and be ready to discuss it with the class the following day. Our generation believes that learning like that furthers us, and learning based on a test hinders us. In my school kids consistently get an unhealthy 4 to 8 hours of sleep. Studies show that this effects our ability to learn immensely, as well as our mental health, and physical growth. Not only are we physically tired, we are mentally tired. Tired of having to break down walls adults have thrown up, tired of putting up walls around adults because we are scared of our beliefs getting out. We just want it to stop. In my school, although we are depressed and sleep deprived and annoyed, we want to change the world. We have lofty goals and would do so much to accomplish them. I don't know what career I want, but I want to change the world. I want to make someone's life better, to put a smile on their face. I don't know what that is yet, but it might end up having something to do with the psychology field. I find it incredibly interesting. I know other kids do too, but none of us say anything, because when we do, people are concerned that we are depressed or need a therapist our self. Every kid I know has a passion for something. Every kid I know wants to change the world, to fix what the adults messed up. So yeah, we're a wreck. Millenial here. Dont you think the sleep deprivation thing is a common teenager thing? In my highschool and university years everyone was sleep deprived (and some at work even). My generation also suffers from general anxiety, i dont get how it became such an epidemic. Just yesterday we were almost 10 people between 25-30 and suddenly we realized almost all of us had major anxiety.And about depression for the future, i actually think things in some countries are going to shit but on the bright side i see people becoming more tolerant, more accepting, more united. So just give it time. Right now my generation is (or is becoming) the main work force and we are changing how we work, what is expected. Older people in businesses are being forced to change cause they need to retain young talent and we dont care about the corner office or that dumb stuff, we care about life quality. So yeah, basically, we still have hope :)I think we are going on the right direction. I just hope that when my generation gets into politics and become the presidents of our countries they will do things better. I still worry about how in some countries (mine included) people praise such dumb political figures. But idk, maybe the educated group of my generation will be the future presidents and your generation, that is more concerned about the world in general, will vote for them and we will see a brighter future :)Hope this helped somehow! Becca, I'm going to 8th grade in about two weeks and I hope that I can be as clever as you. This is the truest and most thoughtful thing I've read on Gen Z. I recently got into it and I'm terrified about the world that is given to us. So many adults in my life and on the news (of which I've seen) talk about the bad and the only thing I think of is 'Ok, how the hell can I change this?!' I have had many conversations about college, my main problem is not 'What do I want to do with my life?' rather, 'What can I do that will help?' I am willing to learn and do whatever I possibly can to help the future of the world. I hope you become some sort of leader when you become of age . You should be going to 9th grade, right? I think the cut off point for gen z (as a gen zer) should be between 2006 to 08 because those born after that didn't experience the economic depression of 2008/9 and therefore will act quite differently from those born 1995 to 2006. Right now for a lot of the world, the economy is looking up and those kids who are between 10 and 6 rn will only know a childhood where their parents could afford to, say, buy the more expensive options in the store. Plus, as a sixteen year old , I would find it a little hard to believe that that a child born the same year that the iPhone 5 released will have a similar childhood to me (b.2002). Just gonna shout out that the speed at which technology developed between 1995-2012 was astronomical and there are very, very few similarities between the children born at each end of that spectrum. 1995-2003, and then 2004-2012+, would be much more appropriate. I was born in 2000, and am currently in university, and every encounter I've had with someone born after 2005 has shown how different our childhoods were. Obviously, those born closer to 2010 are still in their childhood, but there are some very fundamental differences in upbringing that make it impossible to compare our age groups. I distinctly remember a time when iPhones didn't exist. When the iPod nano was the greatest technology. When blackberries were the backbone of our nation , and how much the iPod Touch changed everything for kids. I burned CD's, my main "technological" form of entertainment was CD computer games, my family did weekly Friday trips to blockbuster for movie night, and I memorized the days and times my favorite shows would come on TV. Yes, using Word and Powerpoint and being able to do online research was integral to my schooling, but that was something we had to teach ourselves because adults were still learning too. Social media didn't exist; those without strict parents had MySpace, and then in late childhood had FaceBook (not me), but "Youtubers" didn't exist, "Instagram personalities" didn't exist. Technology was not integral to our social environment. Kids born in 2010 have phones at the age of 8, because that's what's normal. I see 10 year olds on Instagram, completely exposed to current celebrity culture and fashion and crazy representation of the ideal body/lifestyle, born in 2008; Instagram didn't even exist when I was 10, and the idealization of celebrities was not nearly as big, with the only way to keep updated being TigerBeat and Seventeen (magazines). Kids born in 2012 were given iPads to entertain them as babies. It bothers me to have my year get grouped in with 2004+ because we really don't have anything in common , yet experts who study generations have never recognized this. What gets me mad is the fact that most adults think they know so much about technology, that "it's bad and will negatively affect our future generations". In some ways, yes it will. We can become more self-centered and their are bad uses to tech. But if you choose to use it properly, you can help create a better world for yourself and others. We now have access to things they didn't teach in school, we can work on any skill, anytime, and have a lot of opinions and things to see. We can change our views, and not just believe the things the people around us do. Before technology, we never really knew the consequences of our actions and people who haven't been traveling in the sea might not have noticed the trash that's washing up all over it. With our technology we can create positive change and influence others around us to do the same. We can communicate with people we might never would've been able to without tech. It has many bad sides such as cyberbullying, hate, and can be used for doing the opposite as mentioned in the good side.You can also share much media and this tremendously helps develop small companies (which also helps the economy). I think the world has been made into better place with technology, and we're finally starting to care more about solving world issues and fixing the environment. We've helped clean up what the last generation has left and are helping people and ecosystems worldwide through the use of technology. And hopefully our future generations will continue to do the same. Sorry for the very long comment, I just had to rant about this common misconception.EDIT: And yes, I do consider it unhealthy if you're on your phone too often. It can lead to depression and anxiety, and we need to balance it. I'm just saying that technology is a very useful tool if you use it properly and responsibly.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/331	0.302

The world is a really shitty place. I've learned that already at a young age . We have to watch what to say, be careful to not insult anyone. Parents teach us that if you don't study well, nothing will happen in your life. We see bodies of water filled with trash, landfills that extend for miles, plastic everywhere. As a part of gen-z I see that kids end up on our phones and social media a lot just because it's really the only option we have to connect. I and plenty of others I know prefer to meet and talk in person but with the increased paranoia of millenial and late gen-x parents we end up being stuck at home and away from other people making us have to turn to the internet for social interactions. I am a 95 baby, so the beginning of the gen it's. But I have spent most of my life hanging out with the baby boomers and was homeschooled. So here is my view.My generation is to much into the phones. They can't live without them. They don't have a good work ethic. The eant to do nothing and get paid for it. They are to quick to yell "I'm offended". We are to accepting. Anything goes.No morals. Marriage doesn't matter, just move in, etc.I thing the baby boomers were they best also the greatest generation.I do not have high expectations for the future.Remember, I am one so I can say this without "offending" anyone.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/120	0.833
Maybe we don't like marriage because we don't want the government involved in our relationships. Maybe before you comment on someone's living situation, get off your high horse. You were deprived of a proper education, free of religious bias. You were robbed of your right to learn how to think freely. You had to hang around a generation that has persecuted people based on who they love and what they believe. A generation that has polluted this earth near its breaking point. A generation that is incapable of taking responsibility. Lack of morality? That doesn't affect you. Since when does the sex life of others affect you?Best generation? Honey, they didn't do shit. They coasted off the fact that they were the children of the Greatest Generation (look them up), and then when it was their turn to lead, they messed almost everything up.Bad work ethic? Most of us throw away our youth and focus almost all our time and energy on school and employment, to the point where we don't have many friends, if any. Phones are useless? Do you know what we do on them? We read the news, make our planners, do our homework, research, get what social interaction we can, etc. Stop believing that you're better than us - because you've clearly had your view tinted by ideologies that have worn themselves thin, and have become what holds us back as a society. We don't live in an Archie comic. Get over it.	Sex, Thin	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical Features	2/249	0.803

We are Generation Z, We are a generation of Conquers. So you have this generation, a generation of easily offended crybaby snowflakes known as Millennials who kind of made it to college who had been told that they're amazing and they're perfect every way that they were,when in reality none of them actually are. They went to college, accumulated thousands in student loans and then there was a reality check in the real world, and we have seen all kinds of problems with Millennials in the real world. They bitch, whine, and cry about getting paid low wages and not being able to get a job with their gender studies degree, after that they blame the system and vote Democrat in an attempt to create an impossible utopia. Where as Generation Z has been told the most horrendous things that you could possibly imagine due to the internet, a uncensored and unfiltered flow of information. Generation Z was the first generation to be born into the internet age , socially our parents or guardians were not able to protect us from the harsh reality of getting offended as so many parents of Millenials did. And as a result we have the outrage culture perpetuated by Millennial snowflakes, while Generation Z learned to be self reliant, and resilient. And this has many positive results on our generation, while Millennials tend to be optimists, Generation Z tends to be realist, Millennials want to be discovered while Generation Z want to work hard for success, In the realm of maturity Millennials tend to have a prolonged adolescence while Generation Z is "up-ageing". Gen z kids are majorily young kids and they're as young as 8-9 years old I myself am 16 and my brother is 9 so I happen to think that is not the older generation of gen z that's going to change the world ,but the younger generation because they were born in the middle of the new technologically advanced time.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/61	1.639
Gen Z has been really screwed over. I love branding 'no work life balance' as a 'work life blend'. Way to brand the degradation of employment benefits as a positive. Gen Z and Millennials don't work 7 days a week because of their 'better work ethic'. They/we work 7 days a week because we hold more debt at a younger age than any other generation in American history and have been brought up in an economy with stagnant wages that can't pay for city rent prices without working more than one job. It's called hustling because we're all getting hustled.	Age	Age - General	1/100	1.0

As someone from Gen Z i feel like it's not the phones or new technology that's making us depressed or have mental health problems. A phone or Internet is just a device which makes our lives easier. When older generations say that we spend too much time on our phones i wonder if they realize all the things we actually do with a phone. Talking to friends, reading a book, doing reserch, making our planners, reading articles, watching videos and learning new things everyday. We are not just doing useless things or simply wasting our time. Lots of us do use our phones for a lot of good. I don't see why phones can make people depressed. If anything it can help a lot of people having mental health issues as there are many things online which help you go through some of the things you go through. You can talk to someone who had gone through similar things that you are dealing with. And trust me i know that it's helpful. However, i think that many of us have mwntal health problems is because we are more open about it. I bet other generations also had lots of people with mental health issues but due to circumstances they didn't really believe it could happen or they weren't so open about it. So basically just stop blaming everything bad that happens to Gen Z on phones.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/236	1.271

Crazando anonymous They weren't scared of WW2 yet they were scared of the cold war. They had drills where they'd hide under a desk at school to keep cover from an atomic blast, after realising that you basically can't defend that without a bunker, they stopped. And no, if you're poor you don't just automatically have the greatest opportunity to be rich. Calling us wealkings is the equivalent of calling a 3 yo unintelligent because they're unable to speak properly or even at all. This is because a majority of iGen are teens. Also, calling us wealkings is still quite dumb because we can't do much at our ages. And America is also a place where you have to be afraid of shootings anywhere you go. During the first 21 weeks of 2018 there were 23 school shootings. Winston Salem Shooting, Italy Texas shooting, Benton Kentucky, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Oxon Hill, Maryland shooting, Nashville Shooting, Parkland shooting, Savannah Georgia, Itta Bena, Norfolk Virginia, Mount Pleasant, Jackson shooting, Birmingham shooting, Mobile shooting, Seaside shooting, Lexington Park, Gloversville, Raytown, Ocala, Palmdale, Santa Fe, Noblesville, Thousand Oaks, Watertown, must I keep going? Yes? OkayLong Beach, Tallahassee, Springfield, Minneapolis, Detroit, Vallejo, LA, Riverside 2x, El Dorado, and many more. Being pessimistic is more reasonable than thinking everything is a-okay in the United States. Being the smartest or most popular brings competitiveness. Oh, you want us to be philosophical? Sorry, that's not how the world works. Not everyone has experienced what you have. You're merely speaking off of how you see the world rather than looking at your own generation's panic. You want us to all be philosophical as if it's the answer to everything. Not everyone was born in the same conditioning as you. Empathy is basically the most you could give someone as most of us are too scared to speak to others about our true intentions and/or feelings. Let's take someone who was abused as a child and currently is still abused, tell them to not be pessimistic and tell them to be philosophical, how would that play out?Oh, you're afraid of your father beating you? I'm sure you're just being pessimistic. Someone just threaten your school with a picture of a gun on Snapchat saying, "Don't go to school tomorrow" and no one arrives and you think what pessimistic idiots. You just got done hearing of the Syria bombings and watching a couple of children dying, oh, just pessimism. Real ARMYkid I agree with your statement. However, other generations tend to belittle our own for these types of issues. They act as if our lives are perfect and we have nothing to complain about while they have that privilege. We are seen as inferior to them cause we are advanced and ‘have it easy.’ It’s just not correct for others to treat us that way when we are only being human. While Gen Z doesn't seem like the best generation to many, I (being apart of GenZ) believe we will surprise many. We grew up in a world that's more connected than ever before, which means it's easier for people to be hurtful, but it also means many kids and teens are more aware what the world is like. We grew up in a world where being different is normal and is often celebrated and discrimination is seen as something awful. We grew up in a world where mental health messages are spread better so more people are aware of it and know they are not struggling alone. Sure there's a lot of violence happening but lots of that is caused by people from generations before us, and sure not everyone will grow up to be good, but I know many people my age and younger who want to make a difference in the future and hopefully change this sometimes scary, ugly world into something beautiful and loving. I don't think GenZ should be 1995-2012. So much has happened, and so much is different in the way kids born at each end of the range grew up. When I was kindergarten age , (2007-2008) it was rare to see things like smartphones everywhere, sure, there was a lot of technology, but it wasn't used to the degree that it is used today. My cousin, however, was born in 2011. She's already using iPads for everything in school. She doesn't know a world where everybody doesn't have the latest iPhone or tablet. There are children in first and second grade that have smartphones. A child born in 1995 has a way different experience growing up than one in 2010 or 2012.	Age	Age - General	1/121	0.826
Everybody in this video keeps saying all this stuff about how my generation is too addicted to phones, but that's not really the case in my experience. We are all able to disconnect from our phones, and even when on our phones we are able to socialize. For example, I was at a gift exchange a few days ago, and nobody was on their phone, except to look something up, to share a video, or to listen to music.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/79	1.266

I was born in 2004 but didnt remember having internet until this year. And i got my first phone on April 3rd 2018. So I was kinda late to the game of the whole internet thing. I used internet at school for educational purposes but nothing else. And I think this video just talked about use and the technology not really our future/fate on society as a whole when we grow up. Im 14 so I still got a few years left and we will see what happens next...	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/89	1.124

This is so out of touch with reality it's depressing. There is nothing good about this generation, they are horrible. They may have been growing up with the technology but they got no idea how anything works or how it even got to that point. They are just consumer zombies that are already responsible for the regression of most mediums/franchises we loved. Of course their parents are to blame too.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/70	1.429
I value equality and change for the better. I have my career figured out for the most part and I'm 17. I work and I'm already starting on my career before college. We are the generation that grew up in a tough world. We know we have to work hard to get where we want to be and that life is very complicated. Generation Z are complainers but we're also do-ers. We fight for what we want. We are the first to endure school shooter lockdowns. We know what's been going on politically, we know our world is dying and by the time our children are grown, they will live in a hotter, much less environmental friendly world than we have. That's why we push for changes because the generations before us screwed us over. We were exposed to a lot at an early age and you can bet that when we become adults, change will happen. Damn I hate when they say we don't interact w other ppl our age and that we just sit on our phones because in my experience that's really not it at all people my age are very social and we do interact in real life more than we're on our phones when we're around each other. maybe our parents just see us come home after a long day and forget about everything we do and assume that we're always online because the only time they see us is in our downtime	Age	Age - General	2/91	2.198

Even though I can classified as gen z cause I'm 17 I think that society is advancing at such a rapid rate that kids even a few years younger than me are completely different. I grew up with a leap frog and still had mostly vhs types I played with LEGOs and outside with my brother's a lot. However, kids that are age 6 now have iPhones iPads and almost never go out side I see a big difference. I think a generation should not be classified by just time but by technical advancement. I think generation z is gonna change the world . We act and think diffrently to the other generations . I dont wanna say were most ambitious but i think we use our words and we speak up to things more and we wanna make a difference. Like look at march for our lives and how that changed the thoughts of teens and stuff and how we wanna get involved more . I dont wanna say every single teenager out there is like that because there are still some people out there who need to act there age and stuff but if you ask most of the teens questions about society and politics and stuff they always have a saying to it and i know that for a fact because i am a teenager myself and i know how my age groups act in class and in school and there is messing around and stuff but when someone has something to say about the world we live in we all can agree that things needs to change . We all have eachothers backs nomatter what and even tho we dont act like that by teasing eachother or getting in fights or whatever, i know that we all care for eachother deep down and we wanna make a difference together. I'm a part of Generation Z (born in 2000) and I think that you should not label a whole generation without even knowing about them. I'm not unempathetic, materialistic or narcissist. I'm completely opposite of that. And I've seen many people of my own generation who are kind and caring. Well I'm not saying that everyone is kind or caring, but to say that everyone from Generation Z is materialistic, unempathetic or narcissist is wrong. On the contrary, I would say that Generation Z is more diverse and accepting regardless of someone's race , gender or sexual orientation than most of the people from previous generations. In the end I would like to say that there are good people and bad people in every generation.	Gender, Race, Sexual	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/124	2.419
I agree born 2000, I grew up with my Wii, N64 and DS. In no way do I even associate with my sister born in 2008 who was basically since the age of 7 has used an iPad since. I can rest assure you my future kids will not be getting iPads or iPhones or personal computers until at least 10 maybe 12. Kids just don't get the roaming around they used too. What also builds on this is the helicopter parents decide to help keep their kids inside with iPads. I mean until I was age 12 I was all over but then I was in a small town and didn't roam much because there wasn't anywhere to go. When I was 17 I roamed in my first city and rode the bus. Oh my, if you could hear my thoughts they were flying as if were crashing a plane. Why is she a fully fledged millennial but I'm a gen z? What about working class families who didn't have access to the internet until wayyyy after their middle class peers? Idek I think it's weird to not have a grey area between millennial and gen z because so many of us have a unique experience of going from absolutely no internet access to complete immersion in social media etc... I can't relate to people whose first phone was a smart phone. I can't relate to people who don't know what video tapes are etc... but then I know I can't relate to going my entire adolescence without having made an msn turned Facebook account etc.. idk I feel like with these 2 generations in particular there has to be a grey area between millennial and gen z because literally SO much changed in such a short period of time. On a cultural level, I hope Gen Z continues to revitalise the ideas of free speech and individualism. Economics is another issue and more about adaptation to technological changes. Anxiety and depression, not to mention other mental illnesses (from what I've heard) were not talked about 20 or so years ago. People turned a blind eye and/or looked down upon those with these mental illnesses. It's easier to get help now, so I think this counterbalances the effects of social media. Also I find it's easier to open up your feelings for the first time behind a screen, because you feel you still have a guard up. However it's also easier to bully from behind a screen, so I hope that the next generation will be more able to expose cyberbullies, and more places will have real consequences and ways to prove that you or someone else is being cyberbullied. This whole "iGen" thing really gets under my skin. First of all, I was born in 2001 and find that I have nothing in common in my childhood with those born anywhere near 2012, because I was already in middle school. Also, continuing to say that social media and phones wreck our generation is so confusing, because "Gen Z-ers" did not invent all of these things. We were raised with millennials and Gen X giving us technology and social media. If people over the age of 40 want to continue to say we are "ruined", they should consider WHO RUINED US IN THE FIRST PLACE. Children don't have access to advanced technology without being enabled by their parental figures. Every generation is a product by those that came before them. We are raised in a world that has been changed by people who lived prior. It's not like our generation is obsessed with technology because we wanted to be. Parents now give their kids iPads so they don't have to worry about them, as opposed to giving them creative outlets or encouraging them to advance their talents or finding new passions or simply playing outside! I myself was not raised like that - I played outside every single day and didn't have a phone until I started high school. Same. I was born in 2000 and a lot of my friends are my age (and maybe a year younger) and older (by up to 7 years). I find that I relate better to someone in his early 20s than someone in his mid teens. I find it hard to relate to even my younger brother who was born in 2003. That's why even though I'm kind of in the gray area between millennials and Gen z, I identify slightly more as a millennial. Also, I didn't get a phone until I was 16, and I remember my parents using fax machines for their immigration documents. Same here. I was born in 2000 and I used to play outside as a kid. I got my first phone at the age of 17. I use my phone to find some information regarding my interest, hobbies or homework. I only watch You Tube and I use What's App only when I have to ask or tell something necessary. I don't play video games or use social media. I just listen to music from my phone while resting or doing some work. So it depends on the individual and not the technology. Technology is a blessing if we use it correctly. Today's generation is more diverse, open and accepting, thanks to the internet and technology. We should also not forget that because of the internet we are aware of the things happening around the world.	Age	Age - General	1/136	0.735

This is less about technology than it is about economics and social laws. Mellenials all were born and mostly raised in a time of plenty early and so feel entitled and also later in life or upon adulthood a time of economic hardship that was heavily blamed on corruption or the capitalist system failing and so either don't trust the current economic system or the politicians and so believe the mostly progressive media that was required to cite sources when they were younger and so along with their common economic beliefs, they believe that social liberty is gone/eroded by older generations moving far too traditional that they believe restrict them – often missing that currently politics have undergone a massive propaganda campaign for years and starting with mellenials is the first generation of people that mostly believe that part of each parties intent or principles aren't what they actually are, while baby boomers just have the highest amount of these people in a generation before, they confuse the two current parties when put into policy what the outcomes would be and sometimes even their principles, which is:The propaganda has tricked those into thinking only the government can provide services to all people and convinces people they lack rights. And with heavy economic regulation far beyond increasing competition, they stamp out the ability of most average people of having the ability to work on their own and then lower their wages while working for a company by increasing the labor force with third world immigrants that don't benefit americans currently. Creating a situation where even more americans become dependent on them. This is the short version,	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/276	0.362

For SOME people, social media is linked with mental illness, but I hate that people link the growing rate of anxiety and depression with solely just technology. I believe that a big reason there is much more anxiety and depression within the younger generations is because of how the education system is changing. College used to be a place you could go to FURTHER your education if you wanted to better yourself and to get a better job. Now, college has basically become a necessity: if you don't want to work at fast food forever and live in a shitty apartment and live in poverty, you HAVE to go to college. It's so much harder nowadays to find a steady job without a college education. Plus, on top of that, college puts people into a lot of debt, because it's becoming more expensive and they can't afford it, but they NEED it. I feel like because of this, the schooling systems as a whole have really amped things up, specifically high school, and that's why we are seeing a lot more teenagers who struggle with anxiety and depression: not because they're lazy conceited idiots who are on their phone all the time, but because, I don't know, maybe pressures are growing and growing. I hate when older generations just blame everything on younger generations, instead of looking at how they've changed the culture themselves. EVERY generation has changed things, for better AND for worse.Thanks for coming to my ted talk lol	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/252	0.397

to me, the strange part is how people presume that they can tell an entire generation what they're all about, even tho the oldest are only twenty-three and the youngest are six. it's a little soon to put Zers into a box.also strange: why 1995 and 2012? who gets to determine that boundary and why?the stereotyping of a generation comes more from defining events experienced during their formative years: great depression in 1930s, ww2 in 1940s, korean war, large scale prosperity and economic growth, vietnam, energy shortages, mariel boatlift, iraq vs kuwait, arrival of dial up internet + brick phones, later arrival of broadband + social media + smart devices, 9/11, 2008 crash, michelle obama school lunches, and so on. in the context of being in middle school during 2008 crash: a kid then would remember how their' parents were suddenly out of work or losing their homes. even if they were a "rich kid", they saw it happen to others. seeing entire neighborhoods of houses under construction become a no mans land after being suddenly abandoned. coming home famished after school cos the obama lunches were both tiny and disgusting.shit like that during the formative years is, well, formative. particularly when it's nationwide or worldwide. it's entirely too soon to "define generation Z", yet those middle schoolers i mention? as adults in 2038, they'll base their actions/decisions on finances/work/voting/schooling/house/their own children partly on that 08 crash + obama lunches. and someone of the same age, who is an otherwise complete stranger from across the country, will nod in agreement.that nationally formative commonality relating to specific years is how generations get their specific traits that we observe as 'stereotyping'.remember: stereotypes would not come about if they were not at least partly true	Age	Age - General	1/297	0.337

not this video specifically but im tired of hearing about everyone talking about how awful this generation is or how its going to save the world... in reality like every generation before us we are just going to try and live our lives with the cards we've been dealt ... we might have been given different cards than past generations but in my own personal opinion I wish the media would just leave us alone .. and while some generational stereotypes may fit me, many aren't the kind of person I am at all but the thousands of videos about my generations make older people think a certain way about me that isn't always true.. every person regardless of generation is raised differently and exposed to the greater culture in various amounts. the internet in my limited experience on earth seems to make it easy for stereotypes to spread since its easier for opinions to spread... not facts.. opinions... and all these videos about peoples opinions passing as news is driving me crazy ... if it were possible to live without the internet I would but today's society has integrated it so tightly into the daily fabric of our lives - and I know this video had statistics and various things that are more factual, sadly in today's world even facts can't always be trusted, and when I say today's world I mean a world made up of all generations and ages - people from all ages benefiting and negatively affected our world... so in closing please stop trying to fit everyone into nicely sorted boxes, I'm growing tired of all these convenient descriptivetitles & categories	Crazy	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/275	0.364

Same here. We're in the same situation as 1964-1967 born's (transition from Boomer to X) or 1979-1982 born's (transition from X to Y/millennials). We are in that transition from Y/millennials to Z. We're on the cusp or like hybrids. People don't understand that we're not part of either generation. We don't relate completely to millennials but we don't relate completely to Gen Z either. I would say that our childhoods felt more millennial like but since our teen years up to college when social media came up the culture has felt more Z like. My opinion though. A 1996 born with older cousins or older siblings might feel like they relate more to millennials, but a 1996 born with younger cousins or young siblings might feel like they relate more to Z. I think all the gen Z'ers who say they are fed up with PC culture (see comments) view Millennials as what I would call "Neo-Victorians" for lack of a better term. Ever uptight adults who freak out over what can seem like petty things. Different morals stemming from a different worldview than the Victorians, perhaps, but enforced just as sternly in an authoritarian manner. Kids love to rebel against adults like that, so it's not surprising if they're rejecting them in a way (mostly by poking fun at them), though thankfully they seem to still be embracing the good things our society has made progress in like tolerance and equality, just with a more positive, hopeful, grounded outlook."Table legs are offensive and must be covered up""Milk is racist "Yeah, objects are not the same as the things they remind you of. We have the actual, more serious things to worry about here, and that seems like a petty distraction from them. Jay Luis For a start we didn't have Netflix growing up either lol that's a really new thing. We also didn't have internet as it is today. What people don't understand is that you can't just draw lines between generations because every birth year will have slightly different experiences. You were born in 96 meaning most of your childhood and adolescence was in the 00s whereas I was born in 2002 meaning my early childhood was in the 00s. Therefore we will have similar experiences during that time period, not the same because we were different ages. It's important to clarify that I didn't have a smartphone growing up, we had internet but I hardly used it. Many people think our age group grew up with smartphones but that is not the case. Anyway, my point is that there will be differences between each age group but I have more in common with your childhood than other childhoods, they aren't the same but they aren't that different. I didn't hate this video, but they framed a lot of things as if Gen Z was doing it by choice, instead of by necessity.This video acts like work-life blend is by choice, and not forced upon us by gig economies that necessitate it for many. (Raise your hand if you'd rather not have a job with full benefits and a livable salary that's 9-5, and instead work two part-time jobs and drive for Uber, without benefits, job security, or a predictable schedule that you can fit hobbies and friends into? Anyone? No?)I also disagree with the "developmental trajectory" being slowed down for recent generations. We're not hitting the traditional milestones at the same pace of previous generations, but that doesn't mean we're more immature or inexperienced as a whole. I actually think that kids today are exposed to important and mature issues earlier than in the past. Younger generations are just prioritizing those traditional milestones at different times, due to preference or necessity. High schoolers not having part-time jobs probably has less to do with immaturity and more to do with the crazy high demands of college admissions. I think the definition of Gen Z rather different amongst countries, I was born right at the start of the year according to this video (which means I am technically a Gen Z) and from a different country but didn't really own a phone till I was 13 and even then for a few years, it wasn't really a huge part of our lives. I remember hanging out with friends at dinners, playing soccer sports in the early am, visiting families open house, working in warehouses etc. pretty vividly until the last few years of HS and then college. The U.S is pretty digitally driven amongst the youngsters and its pretty unhealthy at the way they consume it. Unnecessary conflicts arise through social media and then brought into real life. Talking about interconnection, yeah, teenagers are pretty connected in the realm of the internet but in real life, definitely not. A lot of teens 'fight/argue' online but in real life do nothing and want pretty much everything. Yes, with the recent news and everything, teens are definitely doing something, but those only represent the small percentages in the news and not the other large percentage of teens existing in the country. But then who knows, I may be wrong.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/208	0.481

I feel like the thought that GenZ is the most conservative since ww2 is bullshit, especially when it comes to race . To say that "O they're just angry white kids on the internet who can hide behind a screen is stupid. GenZ kids, such as myself (19 now) grew up in diverse groups. For the most of us, our immediate friend group (being where we see on the daily) consist of many ethnicities and sexes/sexualities. The only difference is that we're not dumb enough to believe all the race bait bullshit shoved down our throats on a daily basis by millennials. Born in 95 and cringing at this vid. Hate being compared to the kids today considering I know MY childhood was spent at least 90 outdoors camping, catching bugs and animals (i liked catching things as a kid), playing games like tag, 'kick the can', manhunt with my brother and neighbors, going on 'adventures', etc, all without even owning a cellphone. Sure we had the tv and old computer that we could occasionally use (after asking permission) for maybe an hr if we did our chores or homework, but you bet your ass if it was a nice day we'd get kicked off the tv or internet to go play outside. Or maybe someone would need to make a phone call and that awful dial-up would kick you off anyway. Not going to deny i'm gen z if that's a fact, but I still don't like being lumped in with the kids born in the 2010s or late 2000s who were literally born into technology, while in 95 the internet was still just getting its footing. It's refreshing to see such insight in someone from my own generation younger than myself. (2001). As a whole our generation is actually more liberal than millennial's but is less inclined to support social justice. You see when you look at the hard facts on paper women have the same rights and privileges as men do and minorities have the same rights as white people do in the developed world (United States, Great Britain, France, Japan, South Korea, etc.). The differences we see between men and women in the roles they play are partly genetic and partly learned and while to some people that may be looked down upon or outright denied I believe in many ways femininity is a good thing. In the case of minorities the differences we see in their behavior are almost exclusively caused by their cultural background. In some cases the tolerance and multiculturalism supported by the developed world has resulted in conflict as the customs and beliefs of one culture are not compatible with the culture that accepts them. Rather than focusing on multiculturalism I believe we should follow the analogy of a melting pot as the United States is often referred to. Rather than dividing people into separate groups the cultures of the people that live there whether born there or having immigrated there should slowly coalesce peacefully combining elements of many cultures with people trying new things while not forgetting old traditions. The true strongest divider in the world is wealth though and the amount of money you possess or your family possesses can determine a lot more. I would like to go on but I need some sleep. It would be interesting to see what your opinions are.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/287	0.348

Honestly, I know the lines are blurred, but kids born in 2000 kinda skirt the line. I have a lot in common with Millennials, and we did get told we could be whatever we wanted. We did know life before the smart phones, we remember flip phones and talking on a landline with the chord, meanwhile my little sister (born in 2009) has always known tablets and ipads and has always had access to that kind of technology. So, I'm not really sure where 00 kids would land, but I definitely don't think we all fit into the Gen Z mould, and I've definitely noticed I fit in a lot better with older people than younger (people born 2002 and up), especially when it comes to stuff like social media, politics, etc	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/132	0.758
Same. I was born in 2000 and a lot of my friends are my age (and maybe a year younger) and older (by up to 7 years). I find that I relate better to someone in his early 20s than someone in his mid teens. I find it hard to relate to even my younger brother who was born in 2003. It's not your fault but your generations and the generations that surround it have been ruining our world for years now. Unfortunately the generations effect each other. You kids rely to much on technology and your minds takes in to much information. And you soon come to realize nothing can be done to fix it.and you are but a mear Speke in this world. We are all mindless zombies blinded by money and material possessions.My belief is that if we take down governments and rid ourselves of a ridiculous currency system and rely on small communities to lead themselves with a trade based currency. We need to go back to living like natural humans. Hunting and tracking our food, instead of having to work a job to earn a price of paper that allows you to buy things that would normally come from the earth naturally. But all our natural resources have companies that control and run them now, and they make a killing off of selling what would normally be free. I want Gen Z to realize this and to fix it in the future. Or we will go down a long dark path of relying on the government and big business to keep us alive.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/226	0.442

We all strive to have money? Why? Because it's the key to happiness right? Wrong, it's what our society has made to be important. If you all can't see that we live unnaturally then I have no hope for gen Z. Because we will remain lost and slaved for the rest our lives. Break the system, raise an army to over throw government, why couldn't we do these things? Imagine a natural world where your entertainment is walking down to the lake to take in a real view, and not watch it on YouTube. I was born in 1995 and consider myself a millennial. as many will tell you the exact years for generations are not solid. I view gen Z as 2000-2020. even though the internet was commercialized in 1995 does not mean everyone had it. we didn't have internet in my home until 2010. we grew up playing with toys, going outside and watching VHS and later DVDs for entertainment. it was not until my teens that I got into computer technology. having time to be a kid without needing to be online I think was very helpful in teaching me not to become too attached to technology. I have concerns many other millennials and most of gen Z got into technology too soon in their development. the internet is a useful tool but the things it allows you to access are not always appropriate. it can destroy innocence and there is the danger of being brainwashed by media to think, act and be someone you're not. I'm sorry but yeah electronics really are the reason. Most of my good experiences come from my phone dying and making me live in the moment. It's a lot easier to think without being on your phone because at least for me, my thoughts become less cluttered. One time I was visiting my fathers old roommate and my phone died so I ended up talking to the guys son and we had a little fling. If my phone didn't die, I wouldn't have even bothered to talk to him. I went to the movies without my phone and became observant of what was around me. As much you might hate it, your mental health does get better when you get off your phone. You learn that the media blows everything up, you meet people, you learn more about the world. I'm not saying get rid of it, but spend less time then maybe you'd realize 'wow the world isn't too bad at all'. Social media influences us on what we should think and how we should act. In all falls into this toxicity of confusion and sadness since we practically have grown up with it.	Mental, Old	Age - Over 65s, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/195	1.026

Some people think that we're all just ungrateful, but that's not true. It's not our fault. It's not like we're the ones who made this world into, as she said, a 'hellhole'. Godd Howard Are you illiterate? He/she clearly said the world. As in political unrest and old farts in power licking the boots of oil tycoons—not giving a crap about our planet— because it makes them lots of money. As in drinkable water will become the new gold by 2050 (if not sooner). As in older generations will be making the decisions that affect humanity in the long run for a while and Gen Z will be too young to do anything about it. Also, the idea that there are enough nuclear weapons to wipe out entire countries and render the planet uninhabitable for humans is not very pretty either. Boomer96, you do realize the american population is increasing don't you? Wealthier people tend to have fewer children. This also is one of the reasons why places like sweden and Japan are having severe birth crisis. They're very homogeneous countries as well as prosperous. All this is to say is that the white race isn't coming to an end. It's a silly notion, and even hypothetically speaking, if it were coming to an end it's certainly wouldn't be by force or some global conspiracy. The fact that white families have fewer children isn't the fault of any other race . Nor is the fact many choose to marry interracially. Many of the world's most powerful countries are majority white ...i'd say it's one of the last races to worry about extinction. Many tribal races are definitely dying out. Is it possible that Depression among Gen Z is prevalent, because Gen Z has for the most part accepted science, and rejected Religion? Religion taught that people were put on Earth for a reason, and science says nope, everything is meaningless. This principle is called Nihilism, and it's the reason I fell into Depression. Just to clarify, it had NOTHING TO DO WITH SOCIAL MEDIA.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/65	1.538

As with every generation, there's a definite disconnect between how Gen Z operates and how other generations perceive it. For instance, I have a Catholic friend who gave up her social media for Lent. And halfway through this, I got a message from her telling me how difficult it was to give it up because she had to receive messages from other people through social media, particularly for school. She wanted to disconnect completely, but without accessing her social media she was missing out on a lot of important things in her life. And that's something I feel like other generations don't necessarily realize. In some ways, the new technology gets to a point where the youngest generation can't operate without it if they want to make and maintain connections in their age group.	Age	Age - General	1/134	0.746
Bruno your theory is badly flawed once economy collapses - nobody has internet or phone/computer to make the connections you are talking about- appears millenials don't know how to communicate one on one only online which they are about to lose	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/41	2.439
I remember "boomers" ridiculed millenials for carrying around "useless" cell phones (we could barely afford) in 1999. And even now they still barely understand the importance of global connectivity...The older generations never needed to actively learn how to manage their attention in the midst of all the 24/7-in-your-face advertisers. Or fake friends trying to rip you off online. :(They were also able to learn at their own pace (if at all) and their habits were already formed when the smartphones and tablets became common .To all you Gen-Z'ers: enjoy the praise. Won't be long before they start complaining about you. Probably after your first years in the workplace. :P	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/111	0.901

Brandon King sounds like you know nothing about economics - let me guess you are a millenial. Sorry buttercup but you aren't the voice of reason if you think technology is free. Predictions are easy when you know the design of the SYSTEMS- you might want to educate yourself on ALL systems like economics, government, justice systems they are all 100 designed to create specific results and they work perfectly so it's not really a prediction as it is a description of the designs of all systems silly. For someone who knows technology you sure no nothing about technology	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/99	2.02

Another thing to consider is that doubling the processing power does not necessarily double the value or utility of the device... software tends to take advantage of all that processing power and squander it on frivolous inefficiency. Windows 10 has a processing and memory footprint at least several times greater than Window XP... but how much MORE can I actually do with it than I did with XP? I had to upgrade from my 1st gen iPad mini because I couldn't even surf the internet with it anymore. Websites are so bloated with extraneous scripts and advertisements, my browser would frequently run out of memory and freeze or crash just trying to do routine business. Furthermore, many essential apps were barred from me because they did not support the old version of IOS. So all that extra processing power we love to praise isn't really improving our productivity at all - it is simply in an arms race with the software environment it needs to support.And no, technological advancement is NOT independent of the economy nor does technology inevitably improve. It is in fact DEPENDENT on a good economic environment and a a stable, prosperous society. Just ask the people living in political chaos and poverty for a thousand years after the economic and military collapse of Roman civilization if technology always improves. my mom gay the whole concept of generation is a very American creation. The Greatest Generation, the Silent Generation, the GI Generation, the Baby Boomers. The reason why the Baby Boomers are considered the whitest generation is because in America during the 1950s America was majority white. People say children are different now. They act differently, play differently, talk differently than previous generations. But remember, children aren't born with a smartphone in their hand. Children need parents to raise them and teach them how to act, so don't hand your kid a phone and complain about how they spend too much time on there phone. Not Politically Correct Well, an ideal economic system for me would involve complete laissez-faire and the abolishment of any and all government intervention when it comes to business practices and things of that nature. Such means no anti-trust laws, no anti-monopolistic laws, nothing , nada. Honestly, I couldn't care less in regards to the loss of blue collar jobs for, if anything, such would further hasten the shift towards a more service based economy which, in turn, will, in theory, make labor cheaper (we'll no longer have to hire Hispanics to do our landscaping).Also, in case you were curious, an ideal governmental system for me would involve immigration quotas and such. Basically the immigration/maybe partially??? domestic policies of the early 1900's.In short, I absolutely despise communism.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/127	0.787

Equality of opportunity is great, equality of outcome is terrible. When you have equality of opportunity, and everybody can freely choose how to live their lives, you will naturally have more male engineers , and more female nurses, based on personality trends between the sexes. When you push equality of outcome and demand there be more female engineers , you will realize there's a shortage, and you're turning down perfectly qualified men because diversity. The vast majority of dangerous/hard labor jobs are held by men and you don't see people demanding that the lumberjack industry hire more women. And that's a good thing because there are differences between the sexes and there's nothing wrong with that.	Engineers, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Nationality - General	3/114	2.632
Doesn't mean it's not opposed to equality, I think what the OP missed is that it's equality of opportunity people are for, which makes sense, because that'd mean all people regardless of race would have equal relationship opportunity as far as they're concerned.	Race	Ethnicity - General	1/43	2.326
Armand Castilla Equal opportunity is not a good goal. People are always going to have to work harder in some things, and get it easier in others things. That's the way it should be. You're right about the thing with more male engineers for example, but if a male is born with an IQ ten points lower than another guy, he will have to study more and work harder than the other guy. Or if the guy was born a bit more gifted in mathematics. That's not an equal chance. You have to work harder for your chance. It's ok though because I think most people who are for equal opportunity really aren't. I think they just mean everybody CAN do it IF you work harder than the guy who was born having to work less for it. But that's obviously not equal at all so I think conservatives' use of the word "equality" is pandering to how far left the political "center" has gone. There are only certain situations where money for example shouldn't matter as much and more equal chance would be nice (like in school or sports), but money will always matter and to say otherwise just means you have to stop valuing capitalism or money and its worth at all. Everyone has the chance to work hard to earn money so it works fine.	Engineers	Nationality - General	1/228	0.439
Abc Abc I think we're arguing about semantics here. When I say equality of opportunity I mean there's basically no discriminatory laws says you can't do something. Beyond that it's up to you to earn whatever you can. We already have equality of opportunity. Somebody with 10 less IQ points has no less opportunity than somebody smarter, they just have to work harder but they still have the same opportunity. You're talking about equality of outcome. Jordan Peterson always argues for equality of opportunity and against equality of outcome so you can debate him if you want	ABC	Nationality - Chinese	1/97	1.031

We hate PC and SJW behaviour. Because we don't expect equality of outcome we expect the equality of opportunity. While millennials tend blame others for their own failures, and sometimes themselves. College isn't obsolete, choosing dumb majors is obsolete. You can't expect to get a job from a bachelor's in psychology, since there are thousands of PhDs more qualified than you. However, you are guaranteed a decent future if you go into STEM or even business (for the most part). And to hate the archetypal SJW with blue hair, 15 piercings, and "no gender " is fine, but the problem arises when you think all liberals/all millennials are SJWs and thus hate all of them. All "atheism" channels of 2012-2015 suddenly converted into "SJW hate" channels, and that transition is very sad. The "SJW hate" phase is something that feeds perfectly into teenage angst/hormones as it feeds a need to put others down. This makes Gen Z currently a prime target for these videos. The dangerous biproduct of this is when some viewers associate the whole left with SJWs. Anyway, the words "SJW" and "PC" shouldn't even have a negative connotation, but the right wing internet successfully brainwashed those words to be insults. To advocate social justice is to advocate equality, no matter what a few whackjobs have you believe. abc alqadiri I honestly don't know much about American politics, but I don't think the details are that relevant here. Liberalism is bad, because it makes it hard to have an opinion of your own. Liberal thinking has become a necessary thing to be considered a decent person. Don't get me wrong, you can be a classical liberal or at least not a hardcore liberal, but if you look at the movement itself (a. k. a. SJWs) you'll see that it's highly illogical, depends on feelings alone and can actually become so intolerant and straight up aggressive, that the people don't seem liberal at all anymore. That certainly doesn't characterise every liberal, but that is what drives liberalism and every sub-movement it has, like feminism and LGBT+. The thing is, if you don't actually research the political or philosophical movement you identify with, you can end up being simply brainwashed and as a result say a lot of stupid stuff. Because every real movement is interested in adding new members, therefore it's not unbiased, it doesn't give you freedom. That's why calling yourself a feminist and reciting a bunch of repeated phrases doesn't do any real good for the world, only create an illusion that people are fighting for the right thing. But who said changing the world for the good is easy?Basically, modern liberal ideology makes you blind. Because any ideology makes you blind. And I actually never specified that the 'healthy thinking' part is about conservatism or republicanism. Liberalism is the opposite to healthy thinking nowadays because it is currently dominating mainstream media. These days if you want to be seen as progressive you absolutely have to be a liberal. Only, truly progressive thinking can never be dominant in society. You have to risk being offensive by saying new stuff, if you want to actually move society forward. I'd say what we are is apathetic, especially compared to millennials. Like the millennial teachers I have all really do seem to believe in that social justice warrior politically correct crap. Most of us Gen Z all realize that the political correctness has gone way overboard, and now we treat it like how people treated the social expectations of conservative etiquette a few decades ago. Essentially being politically correct is the new "show some manners" but now it's coming from the left instead of the right, and instead of being anti-rocknroll and anti-sex, its anti-cultural appropriation, and anti-microaggressions. They're all equally bullshit. We definitely are socially liberal, and our stance on gun issue seems to be pretty left (although since we also know nothing about guns that aren't on our xbox, our ideas for gun reform amount to banning the machine gun 1007 which killed about 3.5 people this year, while leaving machine gun 1-1006 as the same) we are more fiscally conservative however, and our attitude on foreign policy is basically1. Let's make friends with everyone through diplomacy and trade, always trying to avoid war.And 2. As long as no part of Mohammed Ahtmu lands on my shirt after the drone strike, the war on terror is just a part life (or death) And we don't seem to care/know too much about the constitution.We also aren't foaming at the mouth like Democrats are about Trump. Most of what Trump does we either laugh at, see as just some far away policy from D.C. that won't effect us, or don't know and don't care. And we don't seem to want Washington to be involved in our daily lives, we don't really trust them and see them as usually ineffective. Generally though you can still feel the inclination towards the left within Gen Z, but maybe that's more just me since I do live in silicon valley where everyone is already liberal. QUEEN TRISHA ok, I know my generation too. But do you know what are we going to be in the future? Conservative for our generation isn't the same as conservative for our parents or grandparents. The idea remains the same, but the world changes. Right now young conservatives are mostly a reaction to liberalism being overrated among "progressive" people. It only means that we chose to look at things from a more mature, experienced worldview. Of course, we are all trying to be smart, but it only makes sense to become more conservative when you see the world becoming too liberal. We are old enough to be interested in politics and young enough to be dissatisfied with the way our world is ruled. So, if you think about it, conservatives that we need today are not at all the conservatives we all know from childhood. And, the liberals, that we all consider ourselves to be, are not at all that progressive anymore. With that logic, "liberal" is the new conservative, and "conservative" is the new progressive. And, by the way, if you haven't thought about it, the world will always be devided into conservative and liberal. Our biggest priority is not to choose either side, but to seek balance between the two. We have to learn from each other and learn to compromise in order to preserve peace. Look, I don't care if you are a Millennial or Genz, Liberal or Conservative, if you have common sense, I can have you as a co-worker or peer/friend.I do support marriage equality, racial equality, gender equality, not because of being raised in a multicultural America, but that is important to me. What about the Native Americans who developed enough nationalism to get at least some land? Filipinos were suppressed there nationalism by the US due to them not wanting US control. Communists and Socialists both against nationalism killed way more people than nationalism ever did. For example, GULAGs killed about 3 million. This could be your advertisement! Not really. The most important thing about generations is technological advancement and world events within a certain time period and how your affected. Like i was 7 years old during 9/11 so i am old enough to remember where i was when it happened but i didnt comprehend it until years later. In 2 years the first kids who were born after 9/11, to whom it is only history they learned about, are gonna be turning 18 and becoming productive members of society. For Millennials 9/11 was a big historical event and had i just been a year younger i probably wouldnt have even been old enough to accurately remember where i was during 9/11. My 2nd grade classroom. The teacher had the lights off and the news on. We spent the day watching the twin towers falling on repeat. A couple kids were crying but i didnt really know what was happening. I dont think any of us did. All we knew was it wasnt good.	Old	Age - Over 65s	3/172	1.744

This video is total BS. First of all, historians are the main people who define which group of people is a "generation," and they can't do that until a generation has pretty much lived their lives, e.g. around retirement age . Second, a new generation needs to be birthed by the preceding generation. For example, the Baby Boomers are children of the Silent Generation. We can't call people born in 1995 and after as generation Z because most Millennials were in elementary school in 1995!!!!	Age	Age - General	1/86	1.163
Alright, yeah I was born when the Internet existed but everything changed after 2005 it seems. My childhood is much different from those born after 2005. I can see it with my own eyes. We were not centered around technology as kids, these kids are always on their technological devices. Life was different for us. Even the cartoons we watched, it's like everything has changed. Either 1995-2005 is a short generation of its own, or Generation Z itself has two different stages. In addition, both of my parents are Generation X. There is a flaw in the Generation timeline. I usually put those born before 2005 in the late Millenial stage. Though our experiences are still different from other Millenials, its closer to them than Generation Z. Comparing someone born in 1989 to someone born in 1999, there are noticable differences, but not that much. However, someone born in 1999 and someone born in 2009 have a much bigger gap. Significant differences where you can tell they aren't from the same generation. Therefor I go back to my original statement. Either 1995-2005 is another generation its own, or its some sort of transition stage between Millenials and Generation Z (which basically would make it another short generation).	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/207	0.483 i think 98-08 should be genZ BUT we should subdivide it into 98-04 and 05-08 since during the 2000s there was so much new technology that was created as well as old technology that became mainstream. I think that the defining characteristic of early genZ would be remembering the world before smartphones and tablets took over.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/56	1.786

oh yeah i'd definitely class 95-04 as a separate generation. i was born in 02 and not be one of those "bAcK iN mY dAy" arseholes but i certainly remember the transition over to a technology based childhood. i remember going out with my friends and playing football in the road, but i also remember being connected through club penguin at first (lol), kik later and soon instagram. it's only natural that generations begin to break down into smaller ones as time goes on, considering the speed of reality these days. society has evolved so much quicker than it has in the past few centuries in the last few decades alone, and every new child is born into a slightly different reality. okay im waffling now lol but i'm sure you get the point. I totally agree! I was born in 2002 and I can not relate to the kids born in 2005/2008 and afterwards. When I grew up I played with toys. All I see now is kids with their own ipads. I call them them the Ipad generation, at the age of two their parents gave them an ipad to keep them shut so that they themself can take photos for their instagram. While kids born before 05 had to use their imagination to keep them entertained and discover the world and people around them. It is sad to see.	Age	Age - General	1/98	1.02

The mistake in applying Scandinavian results to the US is that they are nothing alike. US has a much bigger economy (1 in the world actually) and a much bigger population. Welfare Capitalism (which is what you are referring to when you say "capitalist socialism") doesn't work nearly as well once you get to countries that are superpower-level. Ideologies like Socialism, Communism, and Anarchy work fine within small, tightly knit communities. But once you get to a worldwide scale they become far more detrimental. This is evident by the fact that the US is currently using (and has been using for some time) a Welfare Capitalist foundation, and the consequences of implementing this foundation can be seen everywhere. Okay, but heres the thing. In this whole reply section, no one has ONCE brought up the millennial job crisis. Why are you bringing it up? You suddenly got defensive, and totally forgot the context of the conversation. Also "By the way no one cares if generation z has made some products every generation does it's part of growing up.". Your english comprehension is HORRIBLE. That is NOT what it means. It means that GenZ has the tools, and currently are using them, to be entrepreneurial in a way no other generation has, and that they are ALREADY proving this prediction. They are selling products, as in an item, themselves, films, or etc, at a very young age in a successful matter that influences the social media landscape or etc. Are you jealous? GINNVNGAGAP Good points, but as it has had a negative impact on history it has had a positive one as well. Religion is good at least individually, Religion encourages good selfless acts like charity, and it gives people something to believe in and fills them with hope. Science and Religion do not have to disagree and I think they usually don't, the Big Bang theory was created by a catholic priest something many are unaware of. Religion should be allowed to continue for these reasons, but of course you are allowed to believe in whatever you want be it a spaghetti alien or absolutely nothing is fine with me. Roman Parisian You used the past as an example, are we living in medieval times? Where people could use religion to justify their atrocities? Religion through all it's flaws had a concrete basis, atheism never did, no such thing as a true secular country. You're naive, religion gave us more morals and humility than atheism every could, you owe religion quite a lot you know.Society is already established full of free thinkers, who take advantage of religion's progressiveness in society. Religion made you think outside the box, even though people did that long before you did. It's the 21st century and nobody can use religion as the reason why we have conflict. No its more like they blame us for the crap the Gen Xers did. Cause I got that stuff since I was in middle school (I was one of the early 80s born). Meaning that we were blamed for stuff even before we got into the working world. And the whole hippie generation we were blame for was actually caused by the younger baby boomers themselves (got that from my high school baby boomer born teacher). Of course, we were a whiny generation, I agree, but I call BS in that we didn't work as hard as other generations before. Your last sentence makes zero sense. We fell for their lies because those lies were true for them. Back in the day jobs did value their employees and they retain them. However, now a days they don't invest in their employees and want to save their dollars by downsizing. And having an education does mean you will get a job like you did back them. Yet they don't take the time to update their brains to this knowledge. All the debt that the country has accumulated was thanks to the baby boomer generation not wanting to boost the future generation up like the silent generation and the generation before that did. I have been paying for THEIR social security when I was previously working, but of course I will never get that social security when I retire. Yet Gen Z, assuming its your generation, will most likely be lucky in that you won't be paying into a system that won't be their anymore. First of all, Left wing Millennials in general tend to promote this unhealthy idea of "whoring" around due to the sexual liberation idea of the 3rd wave feminism. The feminizing of men and "machoing" of females will only deteriorate society since biologically, men tend to seek for young looking women (more fertile) and so, because of the multiplicity of partners and postponed marriage without settling down, the majority of Millennials today will find themselves "lonely" after their peak years pass away without a partner. Females tend to look for men who are confident due to the illusion that confidence correlates with power (better chance for protecting and providing for their children). So females tend to look for partners whom they think will be strong enough to raise their children. The feminization of males will only make men less "attractive" to females, thus reducing the number of successful relationships in the present. In addition, due to the late "waiting" of marriage and the probability of a female having already experienced multiple partners, the bonding effect caused by the release of chemicals after intercourse is severely reduced, making them less susceptible to successfully attract and keep men more often. In addition, the loss of production of testosterone in males due to the lack of physical activities (exercising increases the production of testosterone) will only make them more unattractive for females and lose pheromones to attract females. In other words, there will be a lack of children in the future which means less revenue in taxes to pay for social programs such as welfare (especially since more people will be retiring without dying, and thus there will be a lack of money to pay for the pensions and social security for these people). Underpopulation will be a severe crisis in the future in 1st world countries. Some people say that overpopulation is a problem... which indeed it is... in 3rd world countries, not in 1st world countries. So by not having children, these people in 1st world countries will eventually bring the demise of the US, Europe, and Asian countries (just look at Japan) while the nations with the most population will govern the world in politics, such as the Middle Eastern countries - Muslim nations - and India as well as other non-feminized men/non-machoed females nations. This defeats the whole purpose of progressive movement since those countries which will take the lead in the world tend to oppress minorities and hated opponents, such as in the Middle East (where rape is legal). Of course, some say China will take the place of US so maybe it will be influenced by it more, unless, of course, China's economy is unable to recuperate from the financial crisis they are about to experience (a future Real Estate crash in the chinese market due to the dependency on Chinese's real estate government laws).The point is that we need to act now if we want to prevent a catastrophe like this.	Sexual	Gender - General	1/495	0.202
---	--------	------------------	-------	-------

I admit, I over exaggerated the economic downfall of the world etc., but the unhealthy consequences done by today's "progressive" movement (I personally call it regressive) is a real problem. For example, due to them, they have achieved the reduction of time of "recess" in schools since they claim it is beneficial (more time in school) but it has been proven that recess time is actually very healthy for males since it gives them an opportunity to do physical activities and increase their production of testosterone in a healthy manner. Also, this helps "control" the children with ADHD more since it gives them a chance of exhausting that energy in playtime. Making them "sit" down for hours without breaks actually makes their symptoms worse. Females, on the other hand, are encouraged recently by modern way feminists to pursue powerful activities and "demonize" any past female activities since according to them it only "oppresses" them. They discourage them from accepting common courtesy manners and indoctrinate them to fear men (this is an irrational fear). In fact, there was a study made which found that the main reason that females tended to avoid STEM fields even though they liked it was not due to opportunities in the field (they are encouraged actually), instead, they refused to join due to an irrational fear that they would be discriminated even though in actuality, it does not happens. When asked where did they heard these fake news (since STEM is actually very welcoming to females) they answered that they heard it from feminist propaganda. When you continuously repeat a lie, eventually, you will start to believe it, and this is just what happened in STEM. Feminist propaganda is the reason why there is a lack of females in STEM fields. Also, the "machoing" of females only increases the testosterone in females which, by the way, a high level of testosterone in females gives them a higher risk for obesity, heart disease, and diabetes, thus, in the future, my prediction is that females will begin to die off younger than in previous generations. We still do not see this since today's older generation is composed of Baby Boomers which had, at least in the development in hormones, a healthy upbringing (not psychologically of course). krishna L rich kids depressed, poor kids depressed, we are all depressed. I think it's because of the unreal expectations put on us (my school is impossibly competitive, everyone's self medicating to deal with the stress). We are supposed to be the gen to make everything better, and yet I get told "Y'all teenagers are so self righteous. You don't have to work for anything. Entitled brats." We live in a world of contradictions. Be idealistic. Dream Big. But we see all of those ideas fail and watch our parents and our friends parents lose their jobs and such. That's why we're realistic. We are more intelligent (average SAT scores increase yearly), but are constantly being told that we are dumb . And we inherited a world destroyed by the mistakes of others. Racism, sexism, homophobia , terrorism, global warming, gun violence, political corruption, social upheaval. All of that is why we are more fluid and accepting in our beliefs . If somebody is homophobic , they'd be the one I'd stare at in disbelief. Recycling is a thing at my school, and we are concerned over the environment and the humanitarian crisis. My friend group consists of whites, blacks, latinos, Asians, and Indians, and all I care about are their personalities and interests. Skin color has never been a factor for my gen. My friends are girls and boys. Some girls hang out with just guys and vice versa. Gender isn't a thing (like literally with transgender people on the rise) when picking friends. For me when has terrorism not been something to be scared about? I'm just as likely to get that here in America as I am in other countries. My first concert, I prayed that what happened in Vegas or Manchester would not occur there. My point is we are depressed, but it's not totally our fault. We get bad reps, unrealistic expectations, and no support which is why I believe we are depressed, yes, but are more than anything, independent, strong, and are going to make a difference in the way the world works. Mosin Cieblene we need more deregulation not less. I'm part of generation Z living in one of the most regulated places in the country, Bay Area (Silicon Valley) California, and it fucking sucks. Everything is way overpriced, and much of the decisions to what risk we want to take or what we want to buy are made by some of the most privileged arrogant people. I've had multiple moments where my phone is about to die, so I decide to pick up a newspaper while I'm waiting for something and every fucking time there is a story about how after 10 years of construction, going through every hoop to pass all the regulation, getting the approval from multiple government officials from different agencies, using all the right material that meets the environmental standards, and spending millions of dollars on its construction, a building which was supposed to create dozens of new jobs and make things easier for the consumer or set of desperately needed new housing complex, gets blocked because some bitchy neighbor decided that he/she doesn't like the cars on the sidewalk or shape of the building, so complaints to the city counsel, and just like that, construction is put to a halt, and another 2 years are added to the time table, and when it does finally get completed, the business will often end up leaving because prices and taxes make more too expensive to make it less expensive to sell the place than actually trying to run the business. It took one year to build the empire state building, and now it takes 4-6 years just to build a new highway. The only businesses that thrive here are the tech companies, which have almost ZERO REGULATIONS. Meanwhile Housing is unaffordable here, and yet the state has rejected multiple bills to raise the height most our buildings are allowed to be, limiting the housing market even as our population grows and as a result, we have some of the worst homelessness problems in the nation. Inefficient Regulation is also the reason drugs in this country are so goddamn expensive, because it takes 10 years for a drug to pass through the FDA, making impossible for anyone except Big Pharma to fund drug testing and studies, and then they reap all of the benefits by claiming ownership and raising the prices so high that most people can't afford them, which they wouldn't be able to do if our laws allowed drugs from other countries to enter. Yeah but we are different from the millennial style of liberals, I can tell from talking to the older guys (and especially the women) including our very young teachers that the millennials are way more sincere and genuine about their liberal beliefs, always trying not to offend people, really believing that everyone is truly good and innocent, and thinking that all we need to do is be kind and independent and celebrate our diversity in order to make the world perfect for everyone. Generation Z is more apathetic, most of us are part of the politically correct culture only in the formal sense, I.E. we all know that the when your talking to the class, at serious work meeting with the boss, or on camera, you talk very superficially like a person on CNN, MSNBC, or a white house official from the Obama administration, making sure to note your tolerance and utmost desire to achieve whatever the goals are of the topic they are addressing at the mandatory presentation in the school auditorium - sexual abuse, alchohol, suicide. But once you leave you go back to your real self, swearing and with most students altering 0 of their attitude or beliefs, not even showing any signs that we just came from a presentation on a super depressing and serious topic except for the almost amused impressions at how we had to go to this lame assembly being led by people who actually think that they are going to change anything instead of just being some mandatory bureaucratic event that makes us (them) feel better and cover their asses. And for a noticable amount of people, there is even some resentment that we are basically being forced by our schools into an indoctrination assembly. This goes along with our rather low expectations of our current government (and I mean government in general, not just Trump) We also don't really feel invested in the successful ideal outcome of most movements. And even though most of generation Z naturally tilts left/liberal most of us are actually pretty accepting or at least used to of not very leftward policies and trends, like we don't get shocked or emotional about school shootings unlike our parents, we actually had a false alarm a month ago where the principal said someone with a gun was in our school, and to me at least it didn't seem particularly scary or dangerous, I figured it was most likely a false alarm, and even if it wasn't the chances of my class getting picked would be very small. Or the U.S war on terror and use of drones in Pakistan, most would probably say that we shouldn't be a as jumpy to launch a drone strike, and that it could do more damage than good in the long run;, but almost all of us seem to accept it as something that is part of life (or an end of life for some Pakistanis) which we rarely have to think about. It's not that we don't have morality, it's just that what goes on in the middle East is so far away and doesn't really effect our daily lives, so whatever happens to the life of Mohammed Ahtmu in Pakistan or one of the other countries we are bombing really isn't one of our priorities. And as for Trump, although most of udissaprove of him like the rest of the younger generations, most of us aren't seething at the mouth like Democrats, we look at his policies or statements and mostly just laugh. Even even though there is definitely a PC culture, there isn't really a feeling of being pulled into the democratic camp or Republican camp, both are pretty lame to most people. We don't really trust

Gourab Kundu I'm not sure that's an accurate statement. It's not that people get more conservative as they age , it's that people in general were more conservative (even Democrats) a few decades ago, and they are now all older. Modern liberalism is now asking us to accept things like multiple genders and abortion, whereas 40 years ago even Democrats weren't in favor of this. avinash tripathi logically, socialism does work. Take the Scandinavian countries for example. I definitely agree with you though. I'm really hoping that America pulls out of the capitalist roots, and abandons the soon-to-be relics that we call our elders. Conservatism has no place in a rapidly advancing world. Fajitahmed Social Democracy is democracy based from socialist ideals. A nation based upon socialist ideals is socialist.	Nation	Nationality - General	1/17	5.882

Fajitahmed I disagree with you. Based upon the structure of the term. Social Democracy is "democracy" (the noun) influenced by the term "social" (the adjective). Meaning that in any and all cases of social democracy, the nation or organization MUST be democratic. Democratic socialism is the opposite; "democratic" is the adjective and "socialism" is the noun which means that the system is in all aspects socialist, with the additional incorporation of democracy.	Nation	Nationality - General	1/72	1.389
Joey Cash I'm an immigrant, Muslim, a professional engineer (Hence why I love capitalism) and I agree with 100 of what you saidBut just some "provocative" ideas to think about, while I agree with your idea of nationalism, I think the entire north American continent is a land of immigrants, like who are you going to nationalize? Everyone who came to this peace of land of earth is on the same level, why not nationalize hard working professionals who want to seek the north American dream? Make it a place where only hardworking people deserve to live, those who put in the effort to make a good living, contribute to society, be a productive member of society, contribute to the overall betterment of the north American economy, where hard work, and only hard work is what defines the continent, away from religion and other stuff, and without pushing ideals and beliefs on others..... Lets face it, north America has no identity, it's not Europe, remember what Adolf Hitler tried to do, he wanted to nationalize the country and make it exclusive to the Aryan race in, while maybe the ways he took to achieve his goals were horrible, I kind of understand why he wanted to go this path, Europe is originally white, so it's only logical to put white people first..... It's not the same in North america.....I dunno just a thought, maybe people would look at things differently	Immigrant, Nationalism, Race	Ethnicity - General, Nationality - General	3/242	1.24
Osama Al-Humaimidi I agree with you however the sense of nationalism for the U.S. is the love of the country and its history, specifically the values that built this country. When I think of nationalism for the U.S. I think of our rights for everyone, being the most free country, and so on. It's just I minor disappointment but I thought I'd mention it. It's good to have people like you contributing to this great society by the way	Nationalism	Nationality - General	2/79	2.532

James Dutile I don't think you fully grasp it. I don't mean this in a rude or condescending way, but I think a lot of people in the western world don't understand it since we've been the freest in the world. Under socialism there is complete control over the economy, something that these "socialist" Scandinavian countries aren't doing. They allow elements of a free market, which isn't socialist. When people think of socialism the tend to think of social services really, and for the Scandinavian countries they do have more services, however they don't pay for a military because we are their protection. When you don't have to pay for your defence you can use a large amount of taxes for health care and etc. But these countries don't have nearly as good as health care as in the U.S. because of our free market companies must compete to get business, so they need to lower prices, provide the best service, and innovate to stay in business. Socialism doesn't take that into account. When there is 1 force controlling a service they don't have to compete or innovate because they're the only service. Why make something more affordable or better when people will have to go to you by default? In fact doctors are leaving these countries because there's no incentive to be a doctor when you don't get paid much by the government, so these countries are now losing doctors. One of the appeals to that career is the money and without it what's the point of going through med school and going through all that effort. Another problem is that the Scandinavian countries have a way smaller population. Truly socialist countries look like Venezuela, where the government took full control of their natural resources and made the prices extremely high, so no foreign people invested in it. There was no point in buying Venezuelan oil when you can get it somewhere else far cheaper. Also with a socialist government many people in the government don't understand economics. They spend way too much on social services. It's also harder for them to price things like food, because in a capitalist market the consumer sets the price based on demand, because of this companies try to meet the demand to get the customer. Thats what happened in China under Mao. Part of the 50 to 80 million deaths under his rule had to do with people starving to death for that reason. Another problem with socialism is that the government is pretty much the one making all decisions in your life. This greater good mentioned earlier sounds nice but it isn't. There isn't individuality. You may lose all your money because the government thinks its best going to someone else. That's theft. Taxes are government people coming to your house and taking money at gunpoint. If you refuse you go to jail or might be killed. So even in theory it's wrong because it isn't you deciding to give money for the good of humanity, it's the government stepping in and taking it from you whether you like it or not. Basically I could argue that me taking your hard earned money is for the greater good because I'm hungry, which wouldn't be moral because it's your money and I have no right to take it. Lastly, socialism is not like democracy. True democracy is mob rule which never works because the ever changing will of the majority take the rights away from the minority. Socialism is government control of the economy. Anyways I know this is a long comment	doctors	Nationality - General	2/633	0.316

1998 is millennial. They keep changing the range for generations this last decade. Millennials are 1981-1998. Gen Z is 2000-2018. The age of each generation is 18 years and then a new generation starts. Do you know why? Legal consent to sex . The generation that is breeding must be 18 or older by law in order to consent to sex . The average age of a new generation being created after the previous become adults is around 5 years (23 years old).Millennials gave birth to generation Z around the years of 2000-2008. Which would line up with the proper age of over 18 and younger than 25.Generation Z will create the next generation starting in 2018 at the earliest since they themselves have become 18 by then. The majority of millennials would have given birth by this point (peak female reproductive age below 30). The last of millennials to give birth before 30 years old were born in 1998, and become 30 by 2028.I just felt like typing all of this word salad for no reason. Suprajira Morakot haven't come of age yet, haven't had work experience/higher education/serious impact on economy. The oldest Gen Z is 23 right now, which mean only 5 years of Gen Z are adults who have experienced life in the fullest. Even at that, only a sliver of life has been experienced. Including children to speak for the generation, how they think and behave is wrong because they are still developing critical thinking skills and growing mentally and physically. You would need every gen Z to pass age 23-26 and average their overall contribution to actually make a good conclusion on who or what they are as a whole.	Age	Age - General	2/108	1.852
Why would you exclude them though, and only include the older end of the generation. Would that not still be limiting the voice of the generation? Something like this would need several age perspectives of the generation. Not just the adults. Also I wouldn't exclude teenagers on work experience and higher education.	Age	Age - General	1/52	1.923

Suprajira Morakot I just explained why you would exclude the younger generation in detail, why would you ask again? A generation can't be solidified based on actively changing variables, thus you ask people who are for the most part set in stone about their way of life (adults). While it is valuable to gather information about how kids behave, they do not represent the final product of the generation because they are constantly changing every aspect of their life until they enter adulthood and even until their mid twenties. Asking young kids questions they don't know how to answer realistically completely defeats the purpose when they don't have a grasp on the real world. That's not an insult it's just a part of growing up. The face of the generation is the workforce currently, 18+ they are making real world impacts and they are how people perceive the generation as a whole because it's well understood that kids develop for a long time before they can offer wisdom and confidence in themselves and their peers. These kids will get asked questions and for input when they reach the stage of their lives with they impact the world, which they don't do as mere children alone. Nobody is limiting their opinion or voice, but we will take it with a grain of salt because kids flip flop on topics all the time, and we need concrete answers when they are more mature. I am Gen Z in my twenties, I actively impact what others perceive of Gen Z because I am in the workforce with 3-4 other generations, THAT is what I am implying. Nobody will take you as you are as a kid because you change every year as you grow, but you remain relatively the same as an adult.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	2/300	0.667

Gen z marks - for want of a better term - the regression of the species; they have the worst working memory of any generation, have the shortest attention span, are the likeliest to have a mental disorder, have been indoctrinated but not educated, and have as much creativity as a brick. On a side note, 1995 seems far too early, unless you live in a vacuum and are talking only of a select part of the United States, or some other first world country. Most of the world didn't have the internet at home until the early 2000's - and even then it was from a PC; not mobiles, tablets etc., and the internet wasn't all consuming as it is now. I feel like Gen Z is probably the most self-conscious and self-aware generation because of the amount of access to news that we have. We realize how dumb the news is since we are able to compare the news to what is actually happening. For example, some news broadcast may say that LA is the best city ever while you might also receive information from a homeless person talking about the amount of issues LA has.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/76	1.316
Renzen in all seriousness though, I think gen z is going to be good overall. Studies have shown we tend to have a more conservative view, which the previous few generations haven't. With a new outlook through that we might make changes for the better. Not all of us have mental disorders or act fully stupid. Like someone mentioned before me, the internet just allows you to see us do more stupid stuff because we can post it wherever. Also I've seen studies and even had a psychology teacher explain that older generations use their phones more in a day. Also people born in the 50's had extra carbon in their DNA from all the nuclear bomb tests at the time, so there were problems with them mentally. Doesn't mean they're a terrible generation though. My argument seems more biased as someone born in generation z but I truly believe we aren't going to be much worse if at all worse than previous generations.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/164	0.61
i wonder what all the war propaganda did to previous generations? and also maybe its not the generations fault that they were indoctrinated, maybe that was the other generations choosing that for them. also, have you even seen deviantart and tumblr? like, if you want some creativity go there, ms. baby boomer. also, maybe we are just more aware of the mental disorders now.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/64	1.562

It's true that Gen Z has it's faults, but so does literally every generation. It's a well known phenomenon that older generations are generally of the opinion that the younger generations are useless, lazy, spoiled, etc. I think it's rather insensitive to blame Gen Z for our mental disorders. Blaming someone for their bad mental health is a lovely way to send them into a downward spiral of self destruction, and generally a shit idea. While obviously I don't want my generation to have these issues, we do, but calling us "the regression of the species" (nice college graduate lingo btw) is helping? how???This is especially ridiculous to me considering that this bad mental health is heavily influenced, in my experience, by the stress of inadequate education, which doesn't prepare us for the real world, and contributes to stress, and the events happening currently- the insane political division and general chaos in our halls of government, the ongoing occurrence of terror attacks and school shootings, the opioid crisis, etc. etc.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/171	1.754

Gen Z behaves the way it does because the world we live in makes us this way. Im 1998 and I kinda call BS on the work/life blend 7 days a week thing. Precarious work is a very real threat so I would say we are always in the process of advancing our credentials due to capitalistic competition. I also think with the advent of technology human work is becoming fabricated for the sake of the economy. Since the transition to the service industry, it seems technology is allowing us to pursue more intellectual work which naturally lends itself towards the hobby territory. My point is I think that this video credits too much individuality to Gen Z.	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/118	0.847

Im not entirely sure how the 24/7 work life blend goes against the advancing credentials, unless you're offering an explanation for it and say we work 24/7 because we're always in school or teaching ourselves something. Is that it? I 100 agree with the fabricating jobs for the economy, I've thought about that a bunch before. I also find it interesting how we fabricate jobs but outsource many jobs because capitalism has always relied on cheap/free/slave labor in America to function so that the rest can live in better conditions so it's like we're saying 'WE NEED JOBS' but also 'ooo but not those kinds of jobs (because then we'd have to pay a livable wage and increase the cost of common goods)'	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/123	0.813
Whether or not capitalism is "good" or has "worked" says nothing about its sustainability or how it will adapt to major changes in how the economy is driven, such as automation.Whatever you want to call it, I think we will see a move towards a shorter, more flexible working week with more job sharing and overall less consumption. People will become less hostile towards zero hours contracts and skills/labour will be pooled into a more fluid marketplace rather than individual companies. In other words, work will be based less on long term employment contracts and more on freelance or agency hiring.	Nothing, Zero	Age - Youngsters	2/102	1.961

Abhishek what positive changes could they possibly offer? they lack problem solving skills while massive problems coming our way? It's a selfish generation which was created by a previous selfish generation it's like selfishness on steroids now - not going to be pretty. It all started because of 1930's depression- growing up with nothing parents wanted to give their kids everything they never had- a few generations of that and you repeat the economic cycle of depression. Don't see how they will fair well in an economic collapse bigger and longer then 1930's was	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/94	1.064
Nekouls Fegeti Honestly, I hope races end up dying out or completely changing from the ones we have now in a few thousand years or so. Since keeping a certain race going, like Europeans, will have to involve inbreeding.Yuck.	Race	Ethnicity - General	1/40	2.5
