So they always talk about racism and feminism by combating men by calling the racist /being racist and being sexist or being called sexist	Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - General	2/23	8.696
YOU are being sexist and racist . You offend me I am a white male, I am deeply concerned with your mental status. It's not because you are a woman , no. I respect women. What I am saying is your FING insane! Stop being racist and sexist while trying to paint it as empowerment, trying to play a victim. You are ruining the peoples minds. PEOPLE. We are people. Stop setting ys in a mindset where were like "us white women" "us men" no. We are PEOPLE. Martin luther king said he wanted people judged by the content of there character, not race or gender . You goblin. The ads from today aren't sexist. They just have woman put on a shirt and look "hot" so that other women think that they'll look really "hot" when they wear that clothes. It's just good business lmfao.	Woman	Gender - General	1/37	2.703

Coral63I'm actually from 1997, I kinda hate this generation. It's so boring!!! All people do nowadays is complain how bad everything and everyone was in "the past".But aside from the " sexism " in the 50s, the great part about being a man was that he had authority of being in charge of everything in a marriage of his wife. Men have changed since the past, they really have. But only little has changed about men regularly being a superior gender to women. Yes, we have SOME fair laws and rules when it comes to gender , but we still haven't really changed much. I feel like men get cut slack for many things.The internet, society, etc. criticizes women for doing something wrong such as abortion or being a " thot ", yet when us women try to change, all we get is "No you have to do this not that" or "no no no no". We still haven't really had a female president yet.Take Cleopatra for example. She ruled Egypt surprisingly better than a male, and associated with Rome for power. With a low IQ. I'm not surprised the comments. What's a shame is you don't know your own history. Women were not in the workplace for the most part. The man went out and worked to support his family the wife stayed home took care of the house and raise the kids. When the guy was not working he took out the trash fix the toilets cut the lawn fix the car and anything else need to be done like paint the house change the oil to the car. The wife is expected to cook clean do laundry. But none of you would understand a partnership. Truthfully in this day and age and probably just past 30 years maybe even 40 it's taken both the man and the woman to make ends meet so the Dynamic has changed. I forgot to mention kids were expected to work to they had chores to do. And I'm not talking about growing up on a farm or Ranch. When you have the reading skills of a 5th Grader from the mid-fifties graduating college there's something wrong. Poor work ethics. Me first attitude. And a strong compensatory not to tell the truth more or less poor morality. it's a shame people produce this crap as some form of the truth without even knowing or understanding their own past. Instead promote more divisiveness. What a shame.	Age, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	2/231	0.866

I feel it's unfair to generalize white men as all wanting to go into the past. It is definitely untrue and holds racism in itself. If a white man generalized black men or women or anyone that isn't white, it would be chaos. We want equality not privilege. Being a race should never define you and to say that about white men can be hypocritical when complaining of other racial stereotypes and generalizations used. Go equality! (Unless it was a joke of course, which in that case, it was actually quite funny and though it may have not been, I still laughed at the comment made)	Black, Race, Racism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	3/106	2.83

First of all... not one of these things was being marketed to men. (except the Burger King one. That one's indefensible)Second of all, is Rihanna being "used" or being "worshipped" by all those men? Food for thought.Third of all, take a close look at the father figure in most modern ads and television shows. Notice... the father is always a dumshit that can't do anything right, and the woman is the gracious, beautiful, elegantly condescending and wise problem-solver that keeps the family from plunging into chaos (presumably because of the actions of the stupid fuckface she married).So who REALLY gets the short end of the sexism stick: 1. The underdeveloped maternal character (Marge Simpson, Lois Griffin, Francine Smith, Wilma Flintstone, Jane Jetson, Sharon Marsh, Cheryl David, Donna Tubbs OR Loretta Brown)or 2. the disrespected male character (Homer Simpson, Peter Griffin, Stan Smith, Fred Flinstone, George Jetson, Stan Marsh, Larry David, Cleveland Brown)? Nobody has any problem with depicting head of household males as barely functioning adults with a flare for epic failure and embarrassment... but the corresponding women are hermetically sealed from all humiliation.Female characters are kept in a safe little box in which they have trouble contributing to an episodic plot without risking sexism accusations. You have feminism to thank for badly written female characters, because it's hard to have a great character if the character is not allowed to fail in any meaningful way. You can't move the plot along in an episode without the setup... which always involves a catastrophic (usually boneheaded) derailment of everyone's plans. Let me be honest, people were sexist, chauvinist , racist etc. in the past. All this was basically normal for them. We've started progressing now, and we can't blame the older generation because it all depends on how they've been brought up. It would be a big problem if the future generation were sexist, chauvinist , racist , etc. We can blame them because this generation is progressing and we would give the same values to our children but the older generation was very different and all we can do is change their opinions and mindsets instead of blaming them. Pls talk to your grandparents or parents and make them understand about all this.	Chauvinist, Racist	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	4/111	3.604

Nandini Dhawan This is why it pisses me off when people claim that because the founding fathers were slaveowners, which wasn't frowned upon back then, all of the amazing things they have done and all of their achievements (like creating this country) don't matter, because they're apparently just racist old white men. Nandini Dhawan just because it was in a different time. Doesn't mean it was right. Thomas Jefferson knew slavery was getting pretty bad. But he allowed it because it helped him. Now don't get me wrong without some of those people we would be that advanced. But... your implying they can't tell right from wrong. Especially when what their doing is so black and white.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/65	1.538
Nandini Dhawan Faulty premise. There is historical precedent for the opposite, first computer was programmed by a woman in the 1840s (ada Lovelace) but this went largely unrecognized. As you can see women were considered as only good for looking good and doing chores in these vintage ads (probably from the 50s based on hair and clothing in the ads) even after many years of female inventors and innovators. Saying "they were brought up that way" doesn't excuse anything anyway. We appear to have made progress in the western world. But these sexist attitudes still exist, there are still women being told they are worthless because they are women. There is still more pressure on women to always be beautiful and thin and sexy than there is on men. Look at the end of the video where they show the ad for the unisex shirt. The pic of the guy is a guy standing there with the shirt buttoned up. The pic of the woman looks like something out of porn. This sends the message that guys can be casual and it's fine to look normal but women have to always be sexy. This is sexism ! Also let's ignore that in countries like Iran if a woman takes off her head scarf she can be arrested, or countries like Saudi Arabia where women are only now (since June this year) allowed to drive cars. To the males and females complaining about the sexism against men such as "men can't show their feelings" "men are forced to act like a man" to take attention off of sexism against women. I've been thinking about it a lot. Why do people call men who like to do things like dance ballet, drink fruity drinks, talk about their feelings, wear the color pink, avoid physical fights, wear skirts or heels etc. as being girly? Why do they use girly as an insult? Because for centuries, at least in western countries, being girly meant being feminine which meant being weaker which meant being inferior to manly qualities. It seems that even sexism against males mainly stem from sexism against females. It all leads back to viewing feminine qualities as the standard for being weak. If we can change this mentality against women then I think it would, as a result, change the mentality of what it is to be a man as well. Standing up to sexism against women would actually be beneficial for both sexes (& those in-between) in the end.	Sexism	Gender - General	5/183	2.732

This is the most sensible and logical comment I have read about sexism . Thank you so much for this. I agree completely.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/22	4.545

lala Chan You're absolutely right, and its not just your country.....Most cultures deem masculinity as superior, and this is REALLY harmful and prejudiced to both sexes. I apologize in advance for this annoyingly long comment: No single human being is only "masculine" or only "feminine." Men and Women are complex, because we are human beings that are "worth" equally: humans have depth and complexity. Men and Women are NOT the same, but that doesn't mean one is better than the other nor does it mean one cannot do the job generally attributed to the other. Society generally attributes leadership, engineering and mechanics with men because occupations pertaining to these areas are attributed with traditional "masculine" traits (logical, analytical etc) but it doesnt mean women can't do these just as well. we do have female leaders that proved themselves capable. Just because youre a woman doesnt mean you arent capable of logic and analysis: you can have those traits at the SAME time as kindness and welcoming (which are traditionally "feminine" traits). Same goes with men: childcaring and humanitarianism is often associated as being feminine because of its association with traits like kindness and nurturing but it doesnt mean men can't excel in these fields either. Men can be compassionate and gentle while having other traditionally masculine traits. More muscle mass (physical strength) and being able to give birth are UNIQUE traits that are given to men and women respectively, and I don't think one is necessarily "better" than the other. The idea that one trait is "above" the other is extremely harmful to both men and women. I'm sorry again for writing such a long comment, I'm just happy to see someone else seeing what is really going on.	Woman	Gender - General	1/289	0.346
I'm sure in your radical feminist utopia you'd love to believe that logic to be true. The reality is that people will discriminate against anyone who doesn't act like the majority of a group. Men who act like females are discriminated not because of "sexism against females," but rather because they go against the norms of most males. Here's some proof that debunks your entire argument: why are females who act like males discriminated against then? Girls who are tomboys, dress in male clothes, get short haircuts, are called lesbos, weirdos and discriminated against just as much as males acting like females. The truth is as much as you'd love for sexism to only be about women, sexism against males does exist and it's not rooted in female sexism. This is why feminists are a joke, is because they try to make everything about women.	Sexism	Gender - General	4/145	2.759

+ SenpaiLivYes and no... It seems to me that sexism is somewhat exclusive to culture; and in some cultures (e.g. Islam) it is prevalent as . (-read the koran, sira, hadith, etc.)People with similar worldviews i.e. cultures tend to flock together and build entire somewhat homogeneous and autonomous societies (e.g. your local china-town, etc.). Thus one can say that countries and religions are just that: huge societies consisting of groups of people with similar cultures i.e. worldviews living in relative close proximity together. Countries are by definition bound to certain places, so yeah... sexism "may" be "everywhere" but it is most certainly much more pronounced in certain societies i.e. countries, religions etc.. To all the people saying this is sexist towards men: when did they say that all men are sexist? Where in the video did they state that no one is sexist towards men?And if you think sexism doesn't exist today, watch until the end of the video. Sexism still exists, and even women are sexist towards women and men. Look at school dress coded, salary differences, the fact that men can be topless in public, but women can't. Look at sports, and the fact that at my school the only sports that both genders can do are cross country and track. If a girl wants to do football, too bad. If a boy wants to do volleyball, too bad. Not all men are sexist, and not everyone who's sexist is a man. This video was just pointing out cases of people being sexist towards women. Also I get that feminism has gotten a little extreme, with women freaking out every time women are associated with pink or makeup (I honestly don't care if someone thinks of a pink bedroom as a girls bedroom. I actually like the color pink.) but look at the actual definition of feminism. Feminism is wanting women to have EQUAL rights as men, so if you are against feminism, you are against equal rights. And that makes you sexist. So let that sink in.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/229	0.873

Even more so, the ad with all of those men around the singular woman was sexist in both ways. This video is no facts, just bigoted opinions by women who are either ignoring or not aware of the context towards other people's bigotry. You can't seriously argue that sexism is a 'white male' issue, and then DIRECTLY SAY that white men are the only conservative extremists in the world, in response I would like to point out that sexism is not discriminatory to race, and that black men can also hit women. That Buzzfeed, who has on multiple occasions spoken about bigotry in mainstream culture, starts their video on sexism with a bigoted statement, that in no way reflects reality and can't be backed up by facts and data. It is saddening to think that this is what the modern progressive movement is. I think of myself as a progressive, and I do think that there is still inequality in the western world about gender, but I also care about facts, statistics and data. Presenting bigoted opinions as facts is not the right way to sell the progressive movement in the western (educated) world, outsiders will look at video's like these, and stereotype the left wingers as being just as laughably STUPID based on the information (or non-info) that is presented in this video. One by one I could go down the list of mis-information that is happening in this video, but we live in a time where google excists. Look up facts, data and statistics to view the reality of society, and do not make assumptions based on your interpretation of the world around you. Also it would be good for buzzfeed to not have an echo chamber of people who agree with each other, it is pointless to hear 10 people echo each others opinions around, although based on youtube analytics I think that their audience might be looking to hear their own opinion echo in order to affirm their self righteousness, and that is an opinion based on facts and statistics. To close off, Buzzfeed needs to understand that in this video there was a feeling of arrogance spread troughout this video, and the message 'look how much better we are then them' was very prominent.	Black, Gender, Race, Sexism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	6/360	1.667

The Spartan women were well respected, but they didn't have any more rights than women in let's say 1800s France. The underlying fact is that men have thought of themselves superior throughout history; this still reflects in today's society. The point is we do not see sexism so prominent in today's culture, but it is still there. For example women over 65 are 50 percent more likely to live in poverty as shown in a study by NPR. How is this even close to true? For thousands of years black men reigned supreme in Africa and had empires. Asians in general, have had pretty decent lives. The double standards are very palpable, look how men are being portrayed in ads today, they're normally portrayed as daft, untidy, reliant on their spouse and are always doing something completely foolish till the wife catches them in the act which is depicted in multiple ads but nobody especially Feminists have an issue with that.Men can be portrayed as the Germs in ads for cleaning products, Mucus, Dirt or even Animals in ads with no public outrage, but if the gender were switched and women were depicted as those things the Feminists would probably get that advert banned before you can say " sexual discrimination!". EMI V I see, thanks for that, but the only thing is and I'm not bashing your decision to identify as a Feminist and I agree anybody should have the right to identify with whatever their comfortable with, I for instance would identify myself as an MRA, but by definition the word "Feminism" is not about equality as it only caters for one gender which is women, it is geared towards giving women equal rights as men, so essentially it's an organisation which is designed to only support women, I'm not making the statement that they may not consider men's issues, but that's very rarely were as an egalitarian caters for both genders.	Gender	Gender - General	1/113	0.885

+The Gadget Guy It may be different in other countries, but where I am from feminists always were for equality, fighting for woman to be percieved as equal to man, and the rights of Gay people, for them to be accepted. Feminism was never woman percieving to be better then men, but somehow that seems to have become the meaning. EMI V Fighting for equality for women to be equal to men is not equality, and it's not what the word equality means, it's actually means to be equal in status or rights, so if Feminism is fighting for equality then it simply means it's advocating that women are not yet or perceived as not equal to men.I don't think Feminism was originally intended for putting women on a pedestal to men, but I'm sure you do know how extreme some groups can get in which they can adopt ideologies of superiority which some Feminist groups seem to have adopted but that only opens the door to vindicate outward misandry and hatred towards men, take for instance Tumblr Feminists with their hash tag "kill all men", I mean can you imagine what outrage would entail if a group of MRA's came up with the hash tag "kill all women?", but for some reason, this gynocentric society we live in over looks anything bad Feminists do as women just trying to fight to overcome the Patriarchy , so they just get away with it. +The Gadget Guy Woman still are not percieved as equal to man, sadly. Woman get paid less then man for doing the same things, and there is still quite a lot of sexism in everyday situations. for the last paragraphs, may I refer you to the speech of Emma Watson? the part regarding the kill all man slogans, is NOT something a feminist would say. those people on Tumblr are a Form of extremists, who have gone so far that they are advocating the opposite of equal rights, and the opposite of feminism. There is a lot of movement trying to stimulate girls to choose these professions, but once they end up in the Field they will be faced with sexism , think of all the research relating Female scientists, or how Woman in politics are judged for their looks more then their Point of View. It is not that Easy to separate a faction of a movement for " tarnishing the name", since it is not a brand name, and not registered like that, Nor it belongs to one person who is personally having to deal with the consequences of this. ---	---------------	------------------	-------	-------

EMI V The thing you've got to understand is I wasn't making the claim women don't or can't do these jobs but it's pure victim mentality and intellectually dishonest to claim all women are not respected in these fields when alot of the "majority male" jobs are suited around women's needs, take for instance the Fire man job, believe it or not but it's the men who do most of the work while the women help with the ladders, but when it comes to lifting up people from burning buildings and carrying them down the ladders it's always the men's job, why?, because I don't think a lady can picture herself lifting a 200lb man from a burning window and helping him down the ladder, yet they get the same exact money for doing less work and that's not the only job where that happens.You have to understand women are more likely to take days off of work, they're more likely to work part time, and when it comes to labor intensive jobs like carrying heavy objects for example in a Factory, men are more likely to do those jobs, but women sill recieve the same pay.Also why would there be a movement trying to stimulate women into these professions?, why would there be a push for women to go into those fields anyway?, shouldn't that be their decision?, and if you're trying to encourage someone to go into a professional field, it can only mean one of the two things, either it wasn't originally their career option which you're trying to influence or you have an agenda to push higher statistics of achievements in those fields.Also you seem to be equating sexism with only one gender when it actually affects both, so sexism isn't only a women's issue, it also affects men, so if you are for equality like you claimed, why are you concentrating solely on women's issues only?.It's a myth which has been propagated by Feminists that women in Politics are judged only for their looks, so essentially you're saying Hillary Clinton has only been selected as a candidate to run for President in the general election purely because of her looks?, because I'm sure even alot of the Rublicans who are Feminists would definitely disagree with you.Feminism is not a brand name, so you're definitely right about that, but the excuse not to ban extreme Feminist groups and no offence, was really pathetic because if you can identify the extreme groups from the non extreme, shouldn't it be easy enough to get the bad apples banned?, wouldn't you agree that banning the trouble makers under the same name would save you time from having to explain the difference between you and them?.Anyway it's been a nice discussion, Goodbye!. And you should probably actually look up the legal superiority women have over men. I already gave a pretty decent list. Name 1 right men have that women don't. I agree that the media is unfair and discriminative towards women, but that model ad comparison was a bad choice. There are many males who are shot half naked or portrayed in an objectified, sexualized way. It happens way more often with females in general, though. What I dislike is when some females rejoice in a male being sexually harassed because now he knows how they feel. Maybe if that man was a molester it would be fair, but he probably had nothing to do with female oppression. Same thing when some black people celebrate and find it fitting when bad things happen to white people because they feel white people oppressed them. Those specific white people probably never did anything wrong to a black person due to their race and it is possible that their ancestors were oppressed by the same people that oppressed the black people's ancestors. +TheCreeperDownStairs To be honest I'm a woman but even I don't think we should so easily be trained for combat and sent out to war. Woman are just too much weaker than despite getting the same amount of training. Women are DANGEROUSLY weaker, slower, less fit... A study was taken where two groups of trainees were observed: an all male team, and he female integration team(which would have had a fair amount of women though less than men. let's say it was about 15-30 female). the study observed that team A(all male) proved to be a better team. They found the running easier, carrying the heavy weights easier and were generally slicker with less error. Team B's disadvantages became very apparent during the exercise the team was slowed down and weaker. The study noted that in the wall climbing excercise for example the women needed help throwing their bags over the wall so they could make the climb easily - they needed help in some aspect of the training. You might ask what this all means, here it is: the war zone is a very dangerous place to be. Teamwork is imperative and if anyone slips up or falls behind in physical straining the whole team is at risk when aiding these people it might even cost an entire team of soldiers their LIFE! It's like trying to take a knife to gun fight or how the saying goes.when a trans woman was allowed to continue her boxing career with other women she absolutely destroyed every opponent and admitted testosterone was definitely a force to be regarded. If I remember correctly she was getting female hormones and had had the surgery being almost completely female now she was beating the elites with pure testosterone. I believe that women on the very elitist and strongest can actually join the army or carnage will ensue.Another point you brought up about women being better distance runners I have heard something along those lines about bigger gluteous maximi , which is often a trait attributed to women, helping to extend running time and since you are yet to bring up an actual study you have read I will fight your argument assuming it is about a natural ability women have over men despite testosterone. I believe you been misinformed or twisted the truth. If you go out on the internet you can find anything you're actively looking for like 'do injections cause autism' and many old studies that say they do but if you don't actively look for 'injections don't cause autism you won't anything. it's a bit like the wage gap feminist always bring up. if they are always actively looking for studies that show it's real then they won't find the studies that prove that it's fake and made up. so in the same way I suppose you have played a little game of Chinese whispers. somehow you may have found a study that women are better long-distance runners than men but in reality that study has probably not factored in a lot of things I can think of many fads I've seen on the Internet like the Venus work out which supposedly proves it can just lose weight when doing nothing so doing special stretches will aid them or again with the gluteus maximus study the I read said that back when humans were Hunters then their butt muscles would help balance them as they run long distances but I can turn that around so that the study says that if you have an enlarged gluteus maximus like a woman you can be a better distance runner which is not what the original survey said	Nothing, Old, Woman	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	6/660	0.909

+Stephanie Hall It wasn't so much "join the fight if they wanted to". That shows how little you actually understand about how the world worked back then, but that's fine. No, most men fighting were forced to fight. They were drafted like Hali said. Women stayed home mostly, but do you really think so many of them were eager to risk their lives? What's really the biggest problem. Being forced to stay home from a war.. or being forced into the war against your will? I don't think the two problems are actually comparable. It doesn't really compare, and thus there's no point in adding that. All it does is make it sound like some person could actually think that being forced to stay home is "oppression" and thus worse than being drafted.From what I know, the draft was the payment men paid to get the right to vote. Women got the vote later than men, but the striking difference is that they didn't have to pay the toll of potentially being drafted.Like AllGuts said, Women were nurses. AllGuts NoGlory they aren't saying that at all... everyone knows the majority of oppressors during that time, and even still in the present, are white men. That isn't excusing the actions of other races. That one comment was just focusing on a specific, and more often or not the most problematic of the groups. Also, though men as a whole still held a great deal of power in the 1950s, race obviously held minorities back. I cant think of many men from this time that are minorities that would willingly go back to a period where they will be stripped of their rights. Buzzfeed is not a historical nor is it always fact based. This is not going to be 100 accurate 100 of the time. It was one small comment on a video that isn't even 4 minutes long, it is really not that serious. Also why must they be bimbos? Was that comment actually necessary? No one said only white men did anything. Its just that white men, who made the ads in the video, were focused on. Also you said you 'would be offended'. I cant tell if that is a typo or if you were speaking hypothetically. If you suffered any abuse I am happy that you survived and persevered but this video isnt about sexism in general. I hate these people trying to sum it up with something along the lines of men=women, because this is blatantly false. Out capabilities are the same, but there are genetic, biological and psychological differences you are given from birth. Trying to ignore these differences is an enormous fallacy, we should embrace them. While I don't think it would help our society, if a woman wanted to be really submissive or stay at home cleaning, they should be allowed to. NOT forced to. Getting these rights movements are not to force people not to follow their stereotypes, its to let them do whatever they want. If I had a wife who wanted to go to business school and get economic job, I'd say go for it, if she wanted to be a house wife, I'd say go for it. Women's "duty" is not to be housewives and saying they can do nothing else is oppressive. It's limiting someone based on their gender . Men viewing women as less intelligent and capable is negative. Also, the whole argument that there's equality because each gender has it's role falls through when men get the sphere of the world while women get the sphere of the home. That's inherently unequal. Laws that men created applied to women while women had no say in who would create these laws because they couldn't vote. Women are 70 percent of the world’s poor, and two-thirds of those who are not taught to read and write. Women are the primary caretakers for most of the world’s children and elderly . Yet much of the work we do is not valued -not by economists, not by historians, not by popular culture, not by government leaders. At this very moment, as we sit here, women around the world are giving birth, raising children, cooking meals, washing clothes, cleaning houses, planting crops, working on assembly lines, running companies, and running countries. Women also are dying from diseases that should have been prevented or treated; they are watching their children succumb to malnutrition caused by poverty and economic deprivation; they are being denied the right to go to school by their own fathers and brothers; they are being forced into prostitution, and they are being barred from the ballot box and the bank lending office. These ads are extremely sexist, even the ones from present day.	Elderly	Age - Over 65s	1/165	0.606

Really? How often would you say men are shamed for their hair and posed as suicidal in a magazine advertisement? How often do you see medication for men saying "the number one reason you take is for your girl"? How often would you say that, in modern advertisements, men are the ones being portrayed as objects and are being portrayed as submissive? How often would you say that men are shamed for their half-nude bodies because it's "pornographic"? wowazowgirl 'How often would you say men are shamed for their hair...' – I'm a male and have 'long' hair. In the past I've been told I look like a girl, a hippy, a mop head, Justin Beiber etc. Every man in a hair related advert has short hair. As I had chronic depression for many years, such things hurt my self confidence greatly.'How often do you see medication for men saying "the number one reason you take is for your girl"? – most things for men (deodorant, alcohol , clothes, hair) are marketed as ways to 'get' the girl. It's the same on both sides – ever heard of ' sex sells'? 'How often would you say that, in modern advertisements, men are the ones being portrayed as objects and are being portrayed as submissive?' – have you seen that coca-cola advert where the guy is cutting the grass and then takes his shirt off in slow motion while a bunch of girls watch? Most adverts with men in them – clothing ads, hairstyle product ads – have men taking their tops off and pouting at the camera. Is this not 'objectification'? It works both ways (again, ' sex sells'). 'How often would you say that men are shamed for their half-nude bodies because it's "pornographic"? – I don't like it when guys walk around half naked any more than I like to see girls walk around half naked. It's attention seeking, regardless of gender . 'How often would you say, and to what extent, that men are pressured to be long, lean, tan , blonde, small-nosed, big-breasted, hairless on the body, etc.?' – I'll answer your question with a question: How often would you say, and to what extent, that women are pressured to be tall, dark-skinned, muscular, and have short hair with chiselled good looks? The " sex sells" idea is quite pragmatic:There are a few basic human needs that our subconscious cave man brain is looking to satisfy: Food, sex and protecting the offspring. In theory, if you can cater to one of those needs (for example by using sexy models or cute kids) people will associate the brand with positive emotions - Even if theres no real connection to the product.And although it seems like this shouldn't work, statistics have shown that it does. What I find amusing about the extreme reactions this days.Those who are into the slaps on the rear as a bedroom thing.And those who over react to what was meant to just meansober and properly done disciplinary action.Yes, I don't agree with the way it was done, especially makingthe woman into a child, a husband should talk with his wife.And when done properly, physical discipline was ok. Theproblem were the abusers that hit kids till they were black and blue or caused some kind of physical harm to make achild's body break bone or bleed.And only for smaller children. So that meant very soft slaps.And only because they were not able to have a spokenconversation to discipline them. Once they can it's notnecessary. At all. Plus, you still need to show that it wasfor the sake of discipline and also remind them that you lovethem afterwards.Yeah, things have only become subtle, before they wereobvious. And women became feminists because of thosebad cultural "norms".Sadly, the bad men will be bad. And the good men seem few.But it's not all true. It just seems that way, because it's easierto get mad at the bad. But harder to appreciate and easy totake the good for granted.Current society issues are crazy extreme reactions.Either spoils a child or abuses a child. a) More women are doing university degrees and getting jobs that aren't brute labour, because on average girls do better in school than men.b) Workplace sexism still exists. Studies have proven that when two identical resumes were given to employers, they nearly always chose the one with a male name over the one with a female name. This would obviously be more prevalent in typically manly jobs, like coal mining.c) the amount of people of your gender who have died, whether it be in battle or due to their job, has nothing to do with their value as a whole gender or whether they have the right to voice their opinion on a public forum like YouTube.d) Please do yourself a favour and stop digging your own hole :)	Gender, Nothing, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	4/132	3.03
Sarah Boon Sorry just because you keep saying "stop digging your hole" so it'll back down isn't going to work. An men are the vast majority of geniuses they are just as smart an some would say smarter because of the higher on average IQ . But yet there are still plenty of men out doing the hard jobs. There not sitting at a desk job crying about equality. Woman are now the majority of the work force. [LINK] So don't give me that we can't get jobs that are typically male dominated. That's right you can't if you run from them.	Woman	Gender - General	1/102	0.98

to say that there has been a far larger amount of male geniuses throughout history isn't a valid point to make due to the fact that most women weren't educated in the typical subjects that people consider 'genius' subjects (science, maths, philosophy etc), and that was if they were the lucky few who received an education. Therefore, there has been more male 'geniuses' than female ones, but if both boys and girls had been able to receive the same education in the past, the genius club would be fairly equal in gender . And, of course, I didn't say anything about girls being SMARTER than boys, I said that they do better in school. There is, in fact, a difference. Due to the way the brains of developing children become different, due to things like girls developing earlier, and boys producing testosterone which can affect things like concentration, school is easier for girls, so they, on average, do better. Also, the IQ test has been proven to have no value when it comes to evaluating someone's knowledge and intelligence.( [LINK] here is the proof for what I was saying before [LINK]	Gender	Gender - General	1/190	0.526

What they don't seem to get is that none of those vintage ads are marketing to men, they're all marketing to women exclusively. Because women did the shopping.Our culture has changed significantly since then, and none of them have likely grown up during the time that this was common or been around anywhere where it is still common . There's still a contingent of women, both young and old , who are in the old culture, and believe that a woman's place is in the home, subservient to her husband, etc. etc. who would unfortunately likely not find anything wrong with these ads, because they actually do speak to their sole concerns. "No one wants to go back in time but white men."That is not entirely true, unless you're talking about the the last couple hundred years or so when colonization was rampant around the world, facilitated by some white men. There were, however, even in the last couple hundred years, places where people that were not white prospered. For example, Japan.But if you go farther back in time, there are plenty of time periods and places where different types of people prospered. Europe, Asia, Central America, South and North America, even Africa(think Mansa Musa and the Mali Empire) were all rich lands at one point or other, which means that most of the major ethnic groups have had(at different proportions maybe) a share of wealth and prosperity in the past. (Using the Mali example if you're from Mali you could go back in time to 1300s Mali and live a nice life). To think Men are not expected to fulfill roles today or back then is ridiculous. Society valued different things back then than we do today. In today's society, and this is where I want to focus especially - it is so damn annoying when women say shit like they do, like they are the only ones with any fucking pressure.Every time I see an ad on TV, computer, whatever, I see a perfectly shredded dude with a great tan and often times a full 10-day stubble beard with raven hair. Hmmmm, do I have any of those? No. I have muscles but not like the cut motherfuckers I see on there. Here's another observation on sexism coming from the male perspective. Don't know if this will ring true with anyone else though. I went to an all boys school and growing up watching kids TV shows there would always be the inevitable boys versus girls type episodes. The boy characters would be the douchest "girls-can't-do-that" types even if they weren't before because, hey, they needed a plot. There'd be the inevitable competition which the girls would win hands down, every time. Every time! It seriously wasn't until university that I slowly realized how good you might be at something wasn't necessarily always because of your gender . In this case I was sort of conditioned into thinking boys would be automatically crappier than things girls did.	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	2/124	1.613
I'm speaking for men here:In all fairness, at 2:53, there are an equal amount of advertisements that will show men just like the woman on the right. Because it's just blatant slander.	Woman	Gender - General	2/67	2.985
I don't wanna go back in time... I fucking hate the past... At least, most of it. And also, here's the thing, women in media sell sex , because that's what marketers have been told is attractive. Men in the media sell power, because that's what marketers have been told women find attractive. It's pretty shit to be a man who can't live up to that standard.	Sex	Gender - General	1/66	1.515
Don't be mistaken. There is definitely sexism that portrays men in a negative light, I just think most guys don't notice it or don't care about it.How about in all the commercials where the husband is a total numbskull who can't even carry out the simplest tasks? Or all the advertising that puts emphasis on men being "manly," and manly being defined as drinking booze, watching sports, and owning the coolest cars? Sexism goes both ways and is all over the place, it's just that women wised up and got tired of it. They must feel so stupid right now because they have done nothing to stop this long-time issue.Maybe women were meant to be oppressed and man was meant to be pleased? Maybe women were meant to be submissive and man was mean to be dominant?Read this:"However, nowadays, more women are graduating from college than men. Women in women-only universities are much more likely to go into math, engineering and science, because they haven't encountered the same harassment, bias, and discouragement as women in co-ed schools. (I am in the sciences, and there is enormous male bias. For example, ZERO of my teachers in my major are women. There are TONS of women in my field, but are not hired by our department. Zero of the textbooks used are written by women. ZERO! The content is strongly biased toward patriarchal perspectives and assumptions... just as your question is! To undo your ignorance, take Women's Studies and read feminist books. Lots of them. Try this: Go to your bookshelves. Take a book off the shelf, and look at the author's name (or photo. etc.) If it's male, put it back on the left end of the shelf: female, right end of the shelf. You can be creative with books authored by both women AND men, or if you can't tell the sex of the author: set them aside for now, or put them in the middle, or go with the name of the first author listed, etc. Then pick up the next book, and do the same. Author's sex, left end of the shelf for men, right end for women. Do this with all of the books on the shelf. Do this for the next shelf as well. Then look at each shelf, to see how many of the books (in shelf length) are by men, and how many by women? Measure the length on each shelf of books by men, and add the distances up. Do the same with books by women. Then ask yourself, what does this tell you about your book choices? About the your own biases? Your teachers or profs? The books you keep vs. those you give away or sell back? What does it say about your educational biases? Do you value traditionally "male" fields and thinking over traditionally "female." Why is that? Is it an accident, or is it a reflection of society's beliefs about the value of "women's" work vs. "men's"? Calculate the number of years you've been acquiring books. What percent of your shelves are occupied by men's books? By women's? That's a good numerical reflection of how much you value men's ideas over women's. If you were to now start buying and reading books 50/50 by men and women, would that change the educational bias toward men's ideas (or women's) that you have had so far in your life? Or would you still end up with an imbalance, because the shelves were already imbalanced, for the first of years of your life.-Ms. Magazine"Think for a minute.	Nothing, Sex, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	6/527	1.139

At 3:12 there are alternative interpretations as to what this means. I mean, if a person wanted to sell a product, and they wanted it to look good, and they have a man and woman on the staff, they would have more faith in the woman to sell the product. They probably wouldn't have as much faith in the man to do it, they would think it was weird . That seems to, rather directly, result from the belief that men can't put on the sexy look as well as women can, and so men have to pull off a more conservative look. It may also mean that they think women are more good for sex than other things. That's also bad. I just think we should think more flexibly sometimes, look for alternative explanations for things if we can, good stuff like that :)	Sex, Weird, Woman	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/144	2.778
I mean the one with the woman shooting herself was really dark. But I still think the ads and society of today still treats looking good as rather a large priority. For example, some ads will still have a woman who says she can't leave the house because she hasn't removed a pimple or something. I mean I'm glad we've moved on from suicide in ads, but some of the stuff you are knocking off as in the past are still around in society and probably even in a lot of your lives. Of course, not everyone lets society control them, which is cool.	Woman	Gender - General	2/104	1.923

Ads targeted towards women show men being stupid, gross, barely functional man-children who dont understand the world. And many television shows do the same. True these vintage ads were sexist towardss women, but there were probably others that were just as sexist towards men. Its all about perspective and the core demographic. If you're marketing towards men it is beneficial to use sexual imagery, and if you're marketing towards women it is beneficial to make fun of men. Im not saying its right, but marketing companies spend millions of dollars a year in research to understand trends, cultural thinking, and psychology. So before you scream "patriachry", maybe you should be looking at why these ads work in the first place. After all, if they didnt work they wouldnt be published.	Sexual	Gender - General	1/130	0.769

I agree that almost every single ad that's shown in incredibly sexist, but as a designer myself i just have to make things clear for the unisex clothing. We're just trying to portray what the customer wants in a product, since unisex products are the hardest to advertise. A guy would be delighted to know that the shirt would make him look manly, and a lady would love to know that she'll still look sexy even in a manly shirt. Now imagine it like this, the woman use that shirt, while let's say.. reading a book (random, i know). Let me tell you a sad story, it would not sell better or at least the same with if the ad is playing the sexy card.. after all, it's the women of today who loves to be seen as a beautiful sexy being, and loves things that represent sexyness (does that word even exist?) TheDanorte While I do agree with some of your statements whole heartedly, I do think others are quite incorrect. Up until the Vietnam war, the draft had not been used and instead men made the choice to go to war. I've met many men today who are proud soldiers who fight for their country because they want too. Now I do believe we live in a society where masculinity is pushed upon boys at a very young age and especially back in WWI and WWII times, you where not a man if you didn't fight. This ideal comes form the same Patriarchal concepts that told woman that producing sons was more important that producing daughters. These are what true feminists are focused on, breaking ideals that harm both men and woman alike. The statements I don't agree with are the " woman have more rights" and " woman have the same rights". While it may seem that white woman have the same rights, woman of color where not granted these rights(voting, wage gaps) until much later. I would also like to point out, while it may seem woman have more rights because we receive benefits, its along the same lines as things like Welfare. Welfare was created to help lower income people, because they needed the help. Well someone with a high income who doesn't receive this help might say "they get more stuff, more benefits that I don't get." This is because they need it and you don't. The reason businesses are required to hire a certain number of woman but not a certain number of white men, is because historically without that requirement, businesses run by white men only hire white men. Amilakasun1 I really don't understand where your argument is coming from, but I agree with a lot of what you said haha. Grace Ganzel It's neither men or women blame that the government and society benefits and gives more rights to women currently (in developed countries). The government doesn't represent a gender.The blame is on feminism, due to the lies and propaganda it has spread, and it's massive influence on people (people who aren't feminist are greeted with amazing hate, due to the feminist brain washing). Feminism has influenced many law changes, and many were for the worst, further against equality, because it keeps lowering male life quality, when they already are the ones with less life quality and benefits.Rape Laws and Domestic Violence laws implemented with the help of feminism completely ignores violence and rape against men. If I were to call the police because my gf was beating me, the police would jail me. If I don't film me getting beat up, I'd be considered guilty. Because thanks to feminist laws you're guilty until proven innocent. Female rapists walk away, and it's proven male rape is as common and female rape.Anyway, I digress, NOBODY said blame was on the women (again your brainwashed mentality that offending feminism is offending women). The blame is on Feminism and the ignorant people believing the lies (feminists).For decades, women have had equal pay and more rights than men. (Remember last year speech when Obama said women we're still making less money than men? Even though it's been proven since the 80's that it's a lie! It's sad that not even the President is educated in these matters. Thanks to who? --	---------------------------------	---	-------	-------

TheDanorte I do agree that male rape and/or domestic abuse victims can be ignored, but I think that's less of a problem with the laws that were implemented and more about the fact that for a long time society as a whole didn't believe that men could ever want to deny sex, or that 'real men' didn't ever hit women even if they were being beaten by one. This is an idea that is slowly changing, and many feminists that I have talked to also advocate for male survivors. It's not as black and white as you may think it is. "NOBODY said blame was on the women" I hear what you're saying here. What frustrates me, however, is that when women (I guess I'll say feminists now) try and change things in society that they think are unfair (not always laws, sometimes just how we are viewed and treated by the public out on the streets) we are met by a list of things that are unfair to the opposite sex. In fact, that's generally the only time issues like are brought up. Now if men believe that there are laws out there that are biased against them, I am all for listening and assisting men in changing these laws. The only thing holding me back is that it doesn't seem to be what men WANT. It's only brought up to shush feminists/women who are trying to fight to feel like they are on an equal playing field with men (again, equal in more than just laws or rights, but in how we are viewed and treated). Where is their movement for change, because I will gladly sign up!'Nothing stops women entering STEM fields'. I would argue that there is something stopping women from entering STEM fields, and no it's not any law or because women are still (at least not all the time) expected to stay at home and care for the house/children only. The barriers are a little more unclear than that. As a kid, it was very clear to me what boy job/interest should be, and what a girl job/interest should be. No one ever told me what went in each category, but it was implied by what teachers thought each gender would want to play with, or with the reactions you would get from your classmates if you had an interest in something that wasn't 'for girls'. Again this is something in society that is definitely changing. I think more and more females (like myself) are pursuing careers in STEM fields, but this isn't a change that happens overnight. Every day I am sure there is a girl that is pushed away or discouraged from developing a strong interest in these areas. While technically nothing stops women from entering STEM fields, there is a still a small hump we need to get over to get there.	Black, Gender, Nobody, Nothing, Sex	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	6/482	1.245

Enchanting Dream That's not my point. My point is that men were dragged out of their homes as soon as they were adults to be shot down like dogs miles from their home. This isn't about "women were in the military too", it's about "women had the right to choose, men were treated like cannon fodder". Still today, in the USA, men don't get full citizen rights if they don't join the army and are ready to die for their country. Women automatically get full citizen rights, even if they don't want to die for their country.This is only one of the lack of rights man have compared to women, but it's still nothing compared to the sheer ammount of benefits women have, men don't. Grace Ganzel Honestly I think things are pretty equal right now. In that there are problems on both sides. If you take any one field, you WILL find one gender has an advantage, and you can then use that to go "HAH, YOU FUCKER, LOOK, NOT EQUAL" but overall it's reasonably close. Just for the sake of conversation, the ones that bug me ( as a guy) would be the rape thing, ESPECIALLY since if I am accused of rape, I will probably be going to jail, unless I have a rock solid alias. And the thing with child custody and divorce is annoying too.	Gender	Gender - General	1/105	0.952
Kimberly Dallas It's rotten and your comment shows exactly why, because feminism spreads bullshit and you're just repeating it. Feminism has the basis that women are and always were oppressed by the patriarchy , but in truth they had many, many privileges.Just look at the death statistics on the Titanic, most men had to die while women were saved. Even 3rd class women had higher survival rates than 1st and second class men. So yes, they were oppressed on many aspects, didn't have as many rights, but they sure didn't lack privileges. But feminists have just picked all of the bad parts of being a female, but all of the advantages remain. If a woman doesn't want to work she can find a man to pay for her, if a woman commits a crime people assume it wasn't as bad, if a woman is in danger everyone will jump to help, but ignore a man, if a man beats his wife in the street everyone will stop him, if a woman does it most people will laugh it off... I can go on and on and on.Now the problem is that feminists are always using oppression as explanations for things. Not enough women in engineering ? Must be oppression. Not enough women in politics ? Must be oppression and men holding them back. In truth, behaviour of both men and women are linked to sexual factors since we're a dismorphic species.So basically, feminists have been trying to solve problems that don't even exist, and have given a completely wrong view to people of society. Want an example ? Would you rather walk down the street at night as a female or a male ? Well if you answer male, like almost everyone would, you've got it wrong because you're far likely to get assaulted as a male.	Patriarchy, Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	6/309	1.942

Ami D. "Back then all women were good for was to clean the house and have babies." - On the other hand, men were good to die as cannon fodder and to work everyday, while women could stay at home and take care of the kinds. Both had it bad, neither men or women were independent from eachother.(What rights women have, men don't) [LINK] [LINK] Benefits women have, men don't.1) Very very low prison times compared to men.2) Men don't earn more than women, that myth was busted in the 80's. Thanks to that, currently women earn more than men in rare some cases.3) Right to genital integrity, men ca be legaly mutilated.4) Better education, schools treat women better, explains why there are more women in college than men.5) Men rape is completely ignored and laughed at. Meanwhile, a women can lie about being raped, even without any proof, if a men doesn't provide a alibi he'll be arrested. WITH NO EVIDENCE. This happens a lot, it's disgusting.6) Only counts as rape if a men is penetrated. So if a women forces you to have sex with her, getting you drunk (wasted) or while you're uncouncious, LEGALLY it isn't rape.7) Violence agaisnt men is ignored, there are no male shelters (there are thousands of women exclusive shelters), there is also no hot lines for domestic violence for male victims, chances are you'll get laughed at if you call one. Women get help 100 times if they call them.8) Males die a LOT more in their job, also they are the most common homicide victims.9) Women exclusive diseases get more support than male exclusive diseases.10) 90 of society BELIEVES the feminism lies and propaganda. For example "wage gap", or the 1 in 4 women are raped. Many more. People are actively trying to change these things, while they aren't even true, which is making the gender inequalities even worse. TheDanorte I understand what you are saying, but what most people think when they hear or read the word feminist they usually think of the women who think women should be the dominate gender , those are the ones who stick out. If you look at any media, what do you see, the bad things, because it gets people attention. You are right about the ones who think they are doing right, but isn't. Yes there are a lot of those, but what about the ones who are not trying dominate? The ones who speak up but everyone tells them that they should shut up? TheDanorte I believe in feminism. I believe in equal rights for men and woman and I agree that mens issues are often overlooked and that is inexcusable. And whilst I agree that men being forced to fight for their country whilst woman were not forced to do the same was sexist, I disagree with its use as an argument for Men's rights in the modern day. In 1973, the concept of conscription and the draft were discontinued. And so yes, in America women were not subjected to the draft, but most likely neither were you. And if we are bringing forward arguments that date back to before many of us were even born, back when woman didn't have the vote and sexism against women was at its worst, then I can guarantee you that women are going to win that particular argument... KawaiiKatz Every movement has extremists and idiots, you're absolutely right. But in the case of feminism it's way too many. Also, even the ones who aren't stupid or extreme, and who really think they're fighting for equality, those are being manipulated by lies. That's the problem.If you see at how much damage to gender equality feminism has done, and the ammount of lies it has spread, there's not way anybody would want to keep being identified as a feminist.Not only are there too many idiots, but the movement itself is doing harm to equality. That's the problem, the good feminists are kept ignorant by the movement, and instead are contributing to uplifting a gender which already have more rights and a shitload more benefits.	Gender	Gender - General	2/126	1.587
KawaiiKatz Absolutely not. Feminism is an ideology based on false premises.The core idea is that women are oppressed by male through patriarchal society, and therefore must be given rights so they can be the equal to men. But this alone is complete bullshit.I'll just compare women and children in society to make it more understandable. Children don't have many rights, they have to obey adults, they can get punished for bad behaviour, they have expectations like school and so on. But kids also have much lower expectations than adults, they can get away with far worse behaviour, they don't risk anywhere near the same punishments as adults, they'll get unconditionnal protection from adults and so on. Now compare this to women in society. If a boat sinks, who would have been saved first ? Women and children. Isn't it kind of weird to value your "second class citizens'" lives more than yours ? Do you really think slaves could have hoped for the same treatment ? I can say the same throughout history. In the old testament, boys and men all get killed, while girls get married off.This is in fact the same shit that feminists use to pass their idiotic ideas : they use the will of society to help and protect women to pass their ideology.My point still stands, feminism is absolute garbage because it's just bullshit based on simply false premises. Grace Ganzel You see, the problem that I see with feminism is that the loudest voices of the movement can be quite irrational (like Jessica Valenti and Anita Sarkeesian, although to a much smaller extent, in my opinion. She at least really tries to come up with valid arguments.) And often times, as you can expect, the loudest voices represent the movement, which creates a huge problem when most of these voices don't agree with or even acknowledge some of the points you yourself brought forward, like the issue of rape of against men not being taken aeriously. As a result, these issues are put on the back burner of the feminist agenda, if it is even there at all. And there is a male rights "movement", they're called theRA's. (I put movement in parenthesis because I am hesitant to call it one. I'll explain why and personally, I think they can be just as bad as feminists.) However, I doubt you haven't heard of them and if you havent, well, that's part of the problem. MRA's are often treated as just a mob of misogynists and a joke. They are put down by feminists and have almost zero influence. Again, though, I think that the MRA's can be just as bad as feminists. Another thing about what you say regarding women joining STEM firdls: You're right to think that there is nothing stopping women from joining STEM field and I am sure that some women are discouraged by friends and family to not go into a STEM field, but this is a problem concerning the individual, not government or law. However, despite this, women get a ton of assistance and care when it comes to entering universities that men just don't have. Another issue with alot feminists is that they always encourage each other, or even push each other to enter gender studies courses instead of STEM fields, ending up in having a majority of female graduates majoring in gender studies instead of a STEM field. When majoring in gender studies is discouraged (often times in a childish manner, something I do disagree with), feminists retaliate by putting down these arguments and offering their own arguments as to why gender studies isn't as useless as one may think. (This is to encourage going into gender studies rather than, say, a STEM field, mind you!)	Gender, Nothing, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	7/395	1.772

Getting rid of feminism is not going to fix these problems because these problems are part of the status quo and were not created by feminism. Stopping people who are trying to change the status quo is not productive. Many of the issues you discuss are the result of male gender role expectations which are just as harmful as the ones towards women. Thus if you want to fix these problems you would be supportive of people who want to dismantle gender role exceptions as getting rid of it for one gender would at the least make it a lot easier to get rid of it for the other. michael cochrane you're right, women loved living like that, and that's why the women's movement never happened.this is the problem with arguments like yours: you fail to recognize that not every woman wants to live like that and they have that right. there's nothing wrong with caring about your hair or your weight or wanting to be a stay-at-home mom, but the issue is when women are expected to fulfill that role and have limited options outside of that.also, pray tell, what prevents men from staying at home while women go to work? i enjoy working and would be perfectly happy if my husband stayed at home with the children. why is it always "well, if mom's out working, then i guess it's automatically daycare," as if men are incapable of taking care o kids? your views are honestly sexist towards men AND women. i guess some of us just have more confidence in people than that.	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/159	1.258
verdantina The women's movement happened not because some women liked being stay at home moms, it happened because women in the workforce wanted to be treated equally to men....In a typical feminazi fashion, no, if the mother works that automatically means daycare, isn't sexist, men CAN and DO stay at home and care for the kids and I never implied they don't. I simply stated that if both the mother and father work, then the kid has to go into daycare, end of story. Hate to break it to you, but maternity leave is sexist in the same way because it implies that a woman has to take time off from work to give birth.....Sorry, in this case, my views ARE NOT sexist towards men and women, some couples have and or choose a more traditional relationship. I have known plenty who do because it ends up being cheaper to have mom stay and home and raise the two kids instead of putting them in daycare. Not everyone has a "career", many just have "jobs". IN these cases, the husband had a job which paid more, not because of him being a man, but because he had a job that paid more. The women had support role jobs that didn't. It would be ludicrous for a husband who owned his own business making $500K a year to shut down the business to stay at home to tend to the kids instead of the mother who was working as a receptionist at $32K a year....	Feminazi, Woman	Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General	2/256	0.781
btw: in one specific instance, I know the husband worked as a carpenter at $45K a year, and the wife worked as a substitute teacher at $22K a year not because she was a woman , but because there weren't many full time teacher oppurtunites where we live. So they decided that she should stay at home and raise their kid. All the while keeping her part time job (having grand parents look after the baby when she did get a job). Not because she was a woman , but because it made economic sense. No that is NOT sexist, that is economics.....	Woman	Gender - General	2/101	1.98

verdantina I never accused you of being a feminazi, I said in feminazi FASHION....doesn;t mean you are one. Like a woman can make a statement that sounds like something a guy would say, but that doesn't make her a guy.1) If one "program" or benefit is given to one sex based on their sex, then that is sexist. Therefore maternity leave is sexist.2) women make less than men. Sorry, are you saying all the news media, the government, President Obama is wrong then? That women DON'T on average earn less than men? sorry, I'm going with the rest of the country....and sticking by my statement that women earn less than men.3) Women working over raising her family. Umm I've NEVER heard that in all my years and I've read a lot on the subject.....4) Extreme and ridiculous examples: WHy are they ridiculous? I'm giving you REAL world examples of REAL people. Not statistics, not supposition, not conjecture and they aren't extreme. A guy making $45 K a year is far from extreme.....5) Yes, if a woman who is a homemaker goes to work, this is assuming that since she didn't have a regular job, that the husband did. So if she's starting a career then I'd make the correct assumption that she isn't earning the big bucks. I mean, you can't just go out and say "hey, I want to be the CEO of Walmart" and then get it.....I don't know how old you are but I lived through the "sexual" revolution, I saw first hand everything from women mainly being homemakers, to going out and getting a job, to having a career to begin with and then starting a family. michael cochrane accusing someone of being a feminazi versus accusing them of acting in a feminazi "fashion" are not as different an accusation as you seem to think they are.it's not a matter of sex, it's a matter of it being a medical condition, which pregnancy is. men also can get a leave of absence as well for medical conditions. if a man takes a leave of absence to treat his prostate cancer, is it "sexist" because women don't have prostates and therefore can't get leave for the same condition? of course not.to be honest i'm not even sure what your argument is since you seem to be addressing tangentially related points and not the actual topic, which is: while many women enjoyed staying at home, a large number of women also simultaneously found that kind of life extremely dissatisfying and wanted to pursue their own dreams separate from what society expected of them. if you have a problem with that, and if you don't think these ads aren't in any way offensive, then i think maybe you need to sit down and think about why you feel comfortable delegating women to secondary status. last time i checked, spanking a woman for spilling coffee is abuse, and has no relation to her "fulfilling a role" in the relationship unless it's to be someone's punching bag.	Feminazi, Sex, Woman	Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General	4/227	1.762

michael cochrane I think verdantina said it all absolutely perfectly but seriously, have you ever asked yourself WHY women earn less than men? It's not because they can't get to the same levels as men in whatever work they choose to pursue, it's because they earn LESS MONEY for the EXACT SAME job. Is that not a problem to you? Don't you think that's unfair? And of course, thinking that men and women both have different roles to fulfil in life IS sexist whether you like it or not. Everybody's different but if genders are conditioned (through adverts like in the video) to believe they are supposed to act in a certain way or be satisfied with a certain thing, inequalities and the idea of "role fulfilment" can never go away. Oh and saying somebody said something "in a typical feminazi fashion" is insulting beyond belief and after saying something like that, you can't talk anybody into thinking you want equality or that you are not sexist.	Feminazi	Gender - Female intelligence	1/167	0.599
--	----------	------------------------------------	-------	-------

redroses3010 By the way, I ask myself many times why women earn less money doing the exact same job as men. It is pretty much impossible to accurately compare 2 positions held by two people. For one thing, both people would have to have the exact same experience, start at the exact same date and time, have exactly the same education, get exactly the same grades while getting that education, and carry the exact same work load.1) I worked in a cabinet shop with 2 lesbians and a transsexual. When it came time to unload a shipment of material, the guys would carry 1 sheet of MDF or Melamine each. The lesbians and trans would require TWO people to carry ONE sheet. Whenever it was time to put a sheet onto the saw, they'd require assistance. When it came time to move the built cabinet into the finishing booth they required assistance. Therefore since they couldn't do the same work load as the guys, they were paid less.....and rightly so.2) I worked in a architectural department that had 5 men and 2 women. One woman had 3 kids. She was almost weekly taking time off to stay at home with her sick kid, take one to the dentist, one to the doctor, one to the pediatrician. So much so that they started docking her pay after she went through her vacation days. Of COURSE she made less than the rest (including the other woman) because she was THERE 20 less than everyone else. When she was gone, her work had to be picked up by someone else. Now before you say "why wasn't the husband taking time off" I'm sure he did. And was penalized for it. But none the less, in this instance, yes, she deserved to earn 20 less than everyone else because she only did 80 of the work.3) Now this IS sexist but doesn't make it any less valid: at one point, this company I worked for used to ask female applicants if they were married, or single, and or were planning to have children. Because as an employer, they knew that if she was recently married or planning to have children that at some point they might lose her for almost a year. That is something that has to be taken into account when hiring someone. Specially if the position cannot be filled by just anyone. Then they have to consider what happened quite a lot: they go on maternity leave, then decide not to return. Not sure if you know this but in many positions, it can cost 10's of thousands of dollars to train someone. If you're going to dish out that money, you have to expect some sort of ROI. If you're going to spend that money and have the trainee leave after 2 years, that's not a good investment.	Transsexual, Woman	Gender - General, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	3/481	0.624

michael cochrane That's pretty much exactly the scenario. Women with the exact same qualifications, etc., are paid significantly less than a man. There have been studies where employers were shown identical resumes and asked how much they would offer that person in a yearly salary. The only thing changed was the name (from like John to Jane). And every single time the female was offered significantly less. And this was done with hundreds (if not thousands) of employers.As a professional I would be mortified to be told that I will be paid less because of the sex I was born with, which I had no choice in. Yes, you can break it down to minute, existential criteria but the main thing salary should be based on is the quality of the person's work. Not whatever social stereotypes there may be of their gender .Really it is a predisposed opinion not based on the person themselves. It does not consider them as an individual first.	Gender, Sex	Gender - General	2/165	1.212
Lara Thames again, you're ignoring the risk the employer is taking....losing her to childbirth either permanently or even temporarily.....That office I worked in, it was quite a common occurance for a woman to go on mat leave and never come back...They just decided that they'd rather stay home and raise the kid. Basically leaving the employer high and dry. Is it sexist? maybe, but it certainly is a valid risk.....I know one YL who worked for a large defence contractor....they flew her all over the country learning the biz, taking courses, etc. and then after 2 years, she got pregnant and left....gone is the $100,000.00 they spent training her.....and even if you sign a contract, it isn't enforceable if they leave due to motherhood...no court would enforce it. I have to wonder if during this test of yours, did anyone bother to ask those who reviewed the resumes why they automatically gave the woman less? Until you get that answer, nothing will change.	Common, Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	4/164	2.439

Lara Thames BTW: I disagree, it isn't ONLY the quality of someone's work, it is the QUANTITY as well. I worked as a project manager and there was a woman who worked as one as well. She found out I made $5.00 more an hour than she did and she flipped. So I did a printout of last years financials based on the PM code....I handled $25M worth of business, she handled $6M....I showed it to her and said "there's why I am being paid more than you..."That's why I say it is difficult to pinpoint the exact same pay depending on sex. I'm not talking "tests" like the one you mentioned, I'm talking real world. I agree, if a woman does the exact same job, the same quality, and the same quantity, then it doesn't matter whether she has an innie or an outie. She should be paid the same. But time and time again I hear about a woman making less and claiming it is because she's female, but when you look closer it is because there are significant differences.....Another example (and I don't know if they are or not): female fire fighters in Toronto. If they are paid at a different rate, OMG OMG sexism sexism...ummm no.....the dept changed the rules so that women could actually pass the tests. While the men have to carry x amount of hose up 5 stories, they have to only carry x-30...(I think it is 50 feet of hose but don't quote me on that, I seem to recall they only have to carry 30 feet). They also don't have to be able to carry a 200 lbs fellow firefighter down those 5 stories, they can drag him. Men still have to be able to carry the 200 lbs.....	Sex, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	5/300	1.667

michael cochrane Yes there is a risk for an employer hiring anyone - paying employees is the biggest cost of a business. However, when an employers automatically assumes that a woman will leave permanently due to pregnancy/motherhood, they take her individuality and choices out of the conversation entirely. You'd have to assume that 1) the woman wants to have children and 2) she wants to leave her job permanently. Just because that has happened with some women (like the one you mentioned) does not mean every woman wants that and employers shouldn't just write a woman off as a some-day mother who will leave. The burden of childcare is pretty much always put on the woman so it's not entirely about women just getting equal pay but how we view the family structure. The mother is the one who is "supposed" to provide most of the care presumably because she is the one who carries the child and is its primary relationship for the crucial first year of life.And yes, the answer they gave for the study was pretty much that the woman will leave to start a family. But this assigning this to every woman is unfair. It basically says that a woman's individuality, her choices, and her goals for her life are insignificant and that she is defined only by her reproductive choice. And it reinforces the idea that women don't belong in the workplace because they are not as valuable assets since they may, possibly, one day, might want to leave. Does this also apply to people who one day, maybe, might think about changing their careers? Because motherhood is definitely a career. One that you don't get sick days, personal days, or vacations from.	Woman	Gender - General	7/289	2.422
michael cochrane Yes, I should have included quantity as well - you're right. There will always be individuals who use the wage gap as an excuse to be paid more for work they don't do but those are exceptions, not the rule. And jobs like the Firefighters you mentioned are a bit different. Some women (and I stress some) will not be able to do the same physical things some men are. And vice versa. That is more of a manual labor job that there are definite differences but that doesn't mean women shouldn't, or can't, do it.Really the argument I'm trying to get across is that women need to be valued for what they are and not be written off simply because of their sex. It is stereotyping and sexism to a point. Consider the individual and not the bad seeds you've had experiences with. Don't apply arbitrary societal views to them. Cause remember, that road goes both ways.	Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	2/161	1.242

michael cochrane Yeah a contract like that is certainly one way to go about it but, yeah, there's no way a court would enforce it much less someone who would sign it because most people don't have their lives planned that way. Also it's a privacy issue. I mean, you have to get a license for driving a car, hunting, fishing, etc., but not for parenting. We don't even require people to take parenting classes unless they are getting divorced (unfortunately says a lot about actual, so-called "family values" in America). All of this is a sticky area because of personal freedom/choice and running a business.I understand that this has happened to you a lot but too often people use their personal experiences that do not and cannot apply to every woman across the board. I don't know what the solution could be, or if there even is one, but paying a woman less because she's a woman and has the ability to get pregnant and have a child is... I dunno... lame? It's almost making her choice for her. And what happens if/when she does get pregnant? Will she have enough money for hospital bills and the extra cost of simply having a child? Does that not matter as much because having a child is a personal choice? Should businesses care?Really it's all interconnected. We want children to be raised with parents who are around but if both parents have to work because they can't make ends meet otherwise then the children have to either go to daycare (which is quite expensive) or the mom quits her job to take care of them (which hurts the family financially) or the child stays with other family while the parents are at work (which is not always possible for many families). Then there's the idea of all those individuals contributing back to society. We stress family so much as a society but don't want the responsibility. With most of that responsibility put on women.(Oh, and here's one of those studies I mentioned: [LINK] (Also, thanks for having a rational discussion. michael C So what you're saying is, why bother risking hiring or being fair to a very capable woman because she might decide she wants a baby. Right...that's not an issue at all. Plus, men can also get paternity leave but you don't see men not getting employed because they're at risk of wanting a child. It's ridiculous! But that still doesn't answer why the equally able woman in quality AND quantity should be paid 20 less; because she's at risk of reproducing and taking time off to look after a newborn is not a feasible excuse.	Woman	Gender - General	2/97	2.062

redroses3010 NO, I'm saying that is ONE possible reason why men will get hired over women when both candidates are identically able to do the job. Face it, like it or not, agree with it or not, it IS a risk that an employer has to take. Then consider the fact that you have plenty of men who can do the job and WON'T quit (or probably won't) to be a stay at home dad. Yes, men get paternity leave, but in all my years I've yet to see ONE take it....In fact, about a year ago one of my co-workers left early on a Friday because his wife went into labour, he was back at work Monday and another, had a baby over a long weekend and he was back at work Tuesday.....As for the 20, I stated why.....if they're missing 20 more work than the men, then of COURSE they will earn 20 less.....if the criteria for them doing the job only requires them to do 20 of the volume or strenuousness of the work, then they SHOULD only be paid 20 less than their male counterparts. I see you failed to read or acknowledge that part....if a woman requires assistance to do her job, and a man doesn't, then the man should be paid more....get it got it GOOD.BTW: you realize this only applies to higher paying jobs, if you're a minimum wage worker at McDonald's a woman isn't paid 20 less, since minimum wage is the same for both men and women....and employers DON'T care if someone leaves to have a baby because there are 500 people lined up who can do your job..... Your behavior proves how narrow-minded you are about the world. You paid women less because you say they WEREN'T AS STRONG AS MEN, and you are therefore 100 guilty of anti-feminism. martinshoosterman I'd agree but only add one caveat: yes SOME women were oppressed, but by whose standards? Today's? (where if you tell a woman what to do and you're her boss at work, you're oppressing her). Like I've said: many women did, and STILL do take pride in being a homemaker/mother/wife.....but by today's standards she SHOULDN'T she should be wanting to Pee standing up, and be the POTUS.As for the rest of your post, I think the equality movement would garner (more?) support and have less opposition if they truly were shooting for 100 equality. A perfect example is the double standard feminists put out: there was a video produced where a man was roughing up a woman in public, everyone, jumped to her defence. Then in the second part, a WOMAN was roughing up a man and men AND women cheered her on and one bystander even jumped in and hit the guy TOO.As for the domestic abuse...just listen to women downplay how much woman on man abuse occurs....data has been brought out that it was more widespread than anyone imagined....last time I looked it was something like 30 of abusive relationships were woman on man abuse...but up to THIS point, all the woman had to do is cry "he hit me" and off to jail the man would go....even if he was only trying to defend himself.	Woman	Gender - General	6/231	2.597

michael C The Feminazi hypocrites you speak of aren't helping equality or the movement, and I think they're rarer than people claim but lo and behold, they really do exist based on the counts of domestic violence actually done by females. ): Anyone claiming women are never capable of evil, are ALWAYS better leaders than male leaders (Sometimes some females are better than some male leaders, but NOT always. Every woman is not a better leader than every man; that's a sweeping generalization and should not be pushed as a legitimate idea. Equality would mean 50 woman leadership, 50 male leadership.), needs to be reminded that women are people too, and some people need to see a therapist. Any woman that hurts her husband and not out of necessary self defense (It does happen, like your example of men who might be self defending. Some women are likely self defending, too.) is a domestic abuser, just as the man would be if he hurt his wife and not to defend his life! I wish these women could move away from the total flip side though and just push actual equality, with less bitterness; Violence against people is not okay, no matter the gender of the perpetrator or person getting assaulted, and every one of every gender should have the right to feel safe. Women should still be able to be homemakers without shame if that's what the woman wants to do, and I do agree that some homemakers now days are shamed for choosing that life. I don't actually think it's a woman's job to pick up her husband's dirty socks and wash them, unless she is trading not working for picking up his mess as well as her own and she has agreed to clean up all his messes. It's not a default, everyone can get their own socks into the hamper because both parties are functioning adults. Also any man should not be shamed for choosing to be a stay at home dad, either, if that makes him the happiest. These ads are still sexist, portray women in a dehumanizing way, and perpetuate negative body images as well as making light of domestic violence. These ads were NOT glorifying a woman's "job" as homemaker or even the choice to be one, they are devaluing the job of mother by presenting homemaking as servile and demeaning and something that the woman deserves to get beaten by another human being, their own husband, over small mess ups. The way ad companies see humans, of either gender, is toxic to society because they care more about getting your dollar than you. So they create toxic ads that manipulate people by subtly constantly implying that people are inferior and need their product to help, and as others have said men are not immune to this attack of media stereotype. Advertising like this, or that depreciates any human unnecessarily, or portrays them as overly sexual to sell a nonsexual product hurts us all. Courtney Smith if you keep talking common sense they're going to kick you outta the club Courtney lol.....I tell you, many are saying the feminazis are a vocal minority but you'd be surprised just how many (less vocal) agree with them.....I don't think it should be a split, 50/50, I think it should solely be based on ability. I know this might offend some, but I've known women who absolutely lose their shit while PMSing...I mean they go semi-insane. One I dated for 5 years and during that week, we didn't talk, didn't call, nothing .....One time she called me up SCREAMING because I forgot her birthday.....I said, ahem, I have all your presents here and don't forget, I asked you out to dinner but you said you wanted to spend your birthday with your family.....What I'm getting at is can you imagine a woman like that as POTUS with the football at her fingertips? I know it is an old joke but none the less, valid.....As I've said before: the equality movement would get much more respect if women took the shit part of being equal as well as the good parts. If you want women to be president? You also have to have women as ditch diggers, miners, and working on the pipeline in the arctic.....and until they address THAT, they won't be getting all the gravy..... michael C Your example woman could probably use some of that therapy I was talking about lolI believe some women can be robust enough to dig ditches or do construction work, and some women can be level headed enough to be president, and I believe the same two statements of men. That's equality, in my opinion. Gender does not equal ability. Ability IS the only important part.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/68	2.941
Courtney Smith what do you mean a LITTLE therapy? lol Yeah, ability, and the basic mindset to do whatever you have to to earn a living. I don't think "many" are able to do the shitty jobs at the beginning....but then you harden up and are.....then that lasts for x years then your body starts wearing out. I've got 2 bad knees, a herniated disc in my back, and a bum hip from working construction....There were times when I came home from work and my knees were so sore that the thought of standing up to cook was too much...so I went without....or ate soup cold because the thought of getting up to open the can, getting up to stir it, getting up to put it in a bowl when it was hot, getting up to put the bowl in the sink was too much.....As I said, when I see women lining up for construction jobs, then I'll truly believe they want equality.....	Bum	Social Class - Destitute	1/164	0.61
I just want to add: they'd better too..Here in Ontario they estimate that in the next 10 years, there will be a void of about 30,000 jobs because all us old timers are worn out and no good anymore and not enough young guys are going into it...because they see what it did to us..... Puglous and let's not forget that to feminists, misandry is perfectly acceptable.....Many feminazis say things like: we have to do it this way otherwise we will never get anywhere....all the while preaching equality to all when they really mean INequality to men.....I was labelled a misogynist when a woman in a forum tried to tell me she carried no blame whatsoever in the demise of her marriage. She blamed it all on her ex....I called the BS card on her because it takes two to make a marriage, and takes two to break it.....	Misandry, Misogynist, Woman	Gender - General	3/95	3.158

generationutena No, when you put a set number on any given situation you will influence the outcome negatively. Kind of like the equal opportunity mandate that came down from the US federal government. It examined certain geographical areas and made determinations on how many of each race each employer should have. Then went around fining those employers who didn't meet those numbers. What happened was (case in point) a small lighting manufacturer in the outskirts of LA should have had 3.2 black people working there....they didn't have any. They DID have 5 latinos, 3 chinese, 2 italian....when a black guy applied for a job they advertised, and didn't get it because he couldn't tie his own shoe laces, he complained. The company was fined $45,000.00, laid off 5 people to cover the cost of the fine...the reason he didn't have the right number of black people working there? Only one applied and they weren't qualified for the job....As for ability, once again you are solely focusing on white collar jobs...hate to break it to you but there are MILLIONS of jobs where women are more able than men, and MILLIONS of jobs where men are more able than women.....and even MORE jobs where it doesn't matter. It is ABILITY.....if a woman isn't smart enough, doesn't have the education or experience, then she won't be able to do the job.....and vice versa....A woman isn't able to do a lab tech's job IF SHE DIDN'T GO TO UNIVERSITY FOR IT...please tell me you're not that stupid to think that a person is able to do a job simply based on their sex?I've used this example before: I worked in a cabinet shop with 4 guys, 2 lesbians and a transsexual. When we'd get a delivery of sheet goods, we'd all pile out to unload it. The guys would carry one sheet each, the 2 lesbians one sheet between them and the trans would stand around waiting until one of the lesbians was free to help him/her.....So no, they were NOT able to do the same job as the guys....In addition, when it came time to take a sheet off the rack and put it on the saw, they required assistance...the guys didn't. When it came time to load the assembled cabinet onto a trolley to take to the finishing booth, they needed help, the guys didn't. When it came time to load unload the finished cabinet onto our delivery truck, they required assistance, the guys didn't.So no, the women weren't paid the same as the men because they couldn't do the same work as the men..based on their ABILITY....And btw, the finishing guy got paid more than them because they didn't have the ability to spray lacquer or finish the cabinets...therefore they couldn't do the job based on their ABILITY. Now were they better for getting inside the cabinets to install hardware? yes...but that is a very VERY small part of the job.....carrying things is 50 of the job....	Black, Race, Sex, Transsexual, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	8/501	1.597

generationutena and did that study show how many women chose to be stay at home moms? homemakers? The problem with taking study results out of context is the data ends up being worthless.....If more women are homemakers, then your conclusions are false.....because, cooking, cleaning, child care is part and parcel with being a home maker.....Did that study also show how many of the husbands are working full time as the sole bread winner? How many of those women who do the majority of the cooking.cleaning.childcare are the sole breadwinner?Your conclusions are false.....if you truly want things to be equal then if you expect the men to do 50 of everything at home AND hold down a full time job, then the woman also has to hold down a full time job....RIGHT? equal is equal...BTW: did your survey also show how many of these women who do the majority of the housework also paint the house, rebuild the deck, pave the driveway, build the storage shed, cut the grass, maintain the vehicles etc? generationutena LOL and you call ME sexist? Holy crap, you're whole post is filled with sexist rants about men! Did you ever stop and consider the fact that you're a misandrist?Let me address your inaccuracies:No, never said I was smarter than any PHDs but I've been involved in enough surveys in my life (producing them) to know that you can skew the results VERY easily and it IS quite easy to ask the questions in a way that will guarantee you the results you wish you prove. If you're so ignorant to not even acknowledge this, I'm done talking to you because you lack even the most basic fundamentals to carry on an intelligent conversation.Single income households: ahem, hate to break it to you but it hasn't. I worked in construction with about 40 other guys and of all the ones who still had kids at home, they ALL were the sole breadwinner....so, blow it OUT your rear Ms Know it all.....You wonder how much laundry I've done? Holy crap, are you THAT ignorant? You think men don't do laundry? Jesus.....you're the epitome of an ignorant sexist misandrist...I've been doing laundry for the past 40 years you twit and yes, most of it has been just for me, but even when I was a teen if I didn't collect all my laundry and put it in the laundry room, SORTED It didn't get washed and when I was living with someone? I VOLUNTEERED TO DO IT and even SHE was surprised I knew how to separate the delicates, from the colours, from the heavy.....furthermore, every guy I've known over the past 50 years (except for maybe TWO) helped out with laundry EVEN if they were the sole breadwinner and worked a full time job.....Yeah, laundry is SUCH a chore, I bet you're the anal retentive OC idiot that irons jeans and socks and underwear....I tell you, NONE of my clothes I wear daily need ironing...NONE. My shirts are hung up out of the dryer so they don't get wrinkled and my underwear? lol yeah ok RIGHT..BTW: I've been involved with families with teens and they TOO have been taught that if it isn't in the laundry room, it doesn't get washed. If there's stuff in the pockets? it doesn't get washed. If it isn't separated? it doesn't get washed....and THEY are responsible for their own folding, ironing or whatever else they want to do with it....maybe because YOU are too lazy to teach kids how to care for themselves that is why it's such a chore for you....Pre-treating stains? LOL do you live with PIGS? I work construction and I don't pre-treat stains FFS.....btw, hate to break it to you, but there's a button on the washing machine for that.....talk about making a mountain out of a molehill....btw, if YOU have 2 or 4 piglets running around staining their clothes? LOL skipping over the fact that a woman has never been president either.....which means just because it hasn't happened, doesn't mean it won't....(btw, hate to break it to you but women have gotten pregnant into their 50's so that means they haven't gone through menopause yet)...talk about sexist and you're just FULL of generalizations aren't you? and in case what am I saying, because you DON'T know it, women can be "late stage" menopause DOH.....So your reasoning for my comment being null and void is because a) presidents to date have been over 50 (all male) and b) most women are post menopausal after 50...well, both those "truisms" aren't truisms at all.....so, ahem, wrong again.....and if we go by your (ill) logic, that means no woman will ever be president and if one does, she MUST be over 50 and MUST be post menopausal....Holy crap, thank god you're not in charge of anything.....with your sexist views men women would be kept barefoot and pregnant in the kitchen and men would get to beat them when they got outta line.....Every time a man makes generalizations about women, he's chastised for it...and here you are, spouting them off with wild abandon...hate to break it to you, but the rules apply to you too...I know it's hard to understand, but they do!	Woman	Gender - General	3/292	1.027

michael C. So, I've not managed to go through the entire thread, so if I repeat something already said, or address a discussion already ended somewhere, sorry, feel free to say that, and I'll go looking. First off: all through this thread, you seem to jump to the conclusion that feminist = feminazi. This even though most of the women I see posting in this thread are not man-hating people that want to be better off than men, but people striving towards a less oppressive society for men and women. I see the same problem with a lot of women in comment sections like these, jumping to the conclusion that men posting on videos are all the types that dismisses oppression of women with the argument "but we have it bad too". That is basis for miscommunication and getting a reasonable discussion off to the wrong start. About the entire "women get paid less, when they can do less". I see your point, and in some ways I'm inclined to agree with you that people being able to physically do less should be paid less. However, you say if it's not a physical job, they'd be paid the same. But shouldn't the same concept apply there? You'll have people that solve problems more efficiently or to better effect than others, so why shouldn't that reflect in the pay? The big problem is, it's way more difficult to quantify than who can carry more. Same problem, I feel, ties into the abuse. You argue that woman on men abuse happens way more than you'd imagine. I don't know, because I don't know which study you're referring to, but I can imagine that a big part of this abuse is mental rather than physical. Since it's much more difficult to prove than proven someone showing up at the police station completely beaten up has been abused, it isn't addressed as much, and sometimes downright ignored as a non-existing problem. And I definitely believe that's wrong. It is a problem, and should be addressed. But using that argument to diminish that the problem of physical abuse against (I imagine) mainly women is counter productive.	Feminazi, Mental, Woman	Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/361	0.831

Josefine Nielsen the difference (to me anyways) between a feminist and a feminazi is: one wants equality for all, one wants women to be MORE equal then men. Notice someone calls me sexist then goes out and makes sexist remarks towards men? that's a feminazi .....The physical abuse wasn't a study, it was taken by local police records of the increase in men reporting physical abuse. It used to be that during a fight, the police would show up and automatically arrest the man as soon as the woman said "he hit me". Police have been told (starting like 10 years ago) to change their procedure to investigate and determine what was going on...hence why now men aren't automatically arrested AND the report shows that HE was the victim of abuse....Last time I looked it was increasing at about 5 to 8 per year....which also leads one to conclude that those high stats women's rights groups have been touting all these years? aren't correct if 40 of the time the man was wrongfully accused and arrested.....(not saying it isn't a terrible thing when a woman is abused and that it doesn't happen, just might not be as frequent as previously thought). As for your scenario about someone mentally being able to do a job better. That happens between men as well. Some who are better suited to a job may or may not be paid better than someone who isn't.....the key to determining this is the quality of the work....The problem is: with many situations, all women are not created equal. One women may be better at nursing, one may be better at accounting. The issue I have is it is never addressed this way. The statement that "women are as good as men and should be paid as such"....doesn't fly. Some women might be better than a man at x job, but not all women will be. Just like not all men are good at all jobs.....Perfect example: I was dating a woman who was a waitress. I was in charge of millions of dollars worth of projects. I took an aptitude test to get a part time job at the post office over christmas. I failed. She revelled in it.....I said "no wonder you passed, the whole test was about short term memory and I can't remember what I did 5 minutes ago. But I can tell you what you wore on our first date 5 years ago, where we went, what you ate, and how much the bill was....you see, she had a GREAT short term memory being a waitress...not because she was female and I was male, but because of her ability (st memory).....she had NO clue how to build a product more efficiently...yet I did that every day.....The whole men vs women thing is lumping people into two groups...there are literally thousands of groups, none of which are based on sex ....it is ALL ability/capability. michael C you know, I think we agree lot of the way. The concept of seeing everything as men vs. women is not helping a constructive discussion. And I am totally with you on the feminist vs feminazis. It's just that, it seemed to me that for certain comments in this thread you jump to the immidiate conclusion that any female writting fitted in some way under the feminazi category. Which helps intensify the division of the two groups. In the same way as when some women turns to the 'all men...' something, something. Also, I'm only pointing this out, because you seemed to be someone that's actually interested in a meaningful discussion, so I fealt it worth mentioning.	Feminazi	Gender - Female intelligence	1/119	0.84
Josefine Nielsen I'll think about what you said but honestly, not every woman who wants equality for all is a feminazi ....I tend to bring out that word when they completely and totally ignore the facts...that men are subjected to inequality too, that minorities are, that it is sexist to say that something that men do isn't ok, and it is also not ok for women to do the same thing.....I'm having a similar discussion with someone on FB (upworthy) and I never labelled her a feminazi because she acknowledges there should be equality for all and that the feminazis don't see it that way....Another example of feminazism is where they state, unequivocally, that men and women should be paid the same. Not paid based on their ability, NOT paid based on their capability, NOT paid based on their work load, experience, or days worked...that is the purest form of feminazism.... ToryLeagueOfLegends I went back through his comments and I don't think he ever even alluded to that....But if you listen to feminazis, it is WRONG for a woman to enjoy being a homemaker (housewife is non-pc by the way) and wrong for her to take pride in being a good partner/wife/mother..... ToryLeagueOfLegends I'm not saying that all failure of all things reading. JacktheRah well Americans need to change. I understand in different parts certain things are a higher priority, or things are less of an issue but that doesn't make it not worth talking about. Hell I'm American. I'm a woman and I'm also black . I've always considered myself black first and a woman second. Right now America had a whole lot of racial crap going on. That needs to be changed but just because one group doesn't feel like it matters or deserves attention doesn't mean it's not worth fighting for or isn't important. Most people don't recognize issues that effect them personally as important enough, some people even get pissed they get talked about. So I get what you're saying, makes perfect sense but at the same time. Change needs to be done all over.	Black, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	4/135	2.963
Nicky Cat ok, I found it...no wonder I couldn't remember, that was 2 weeks ago!Ok, so to explain, one can act in a fashion and not be how they're acting.For example:A person can put on a tool belt, carry a hammer, a tape measure, a prybar and fill the pouches with nails, talk about framing, joists, footings, but that doesn't make them a carpenter.I can put on scrubs, a lab coat, put a stethoscope around my neck and talk about pap smears, MRS's, urinalysis, kidney failure, but that doesn't make me a doctor....I can say someone is acting in a childish fashion but that doesn't mean they're in fact, a child....here's a very apt example: I can say I hate it when women say " nothing " when there obviously IS something wrong, but that doesn't make me a misogynist .....So, in other words, you can say something that a feminazi would say, but that doesn't mean you're a feminazi ...hence why the term "after a fashion" is used.....it is often used in lieu of "sort of like...".....or "in the manner of..."....Capice? Nicky Cat sorry, no, never once said they were "being" a doctor, I said they were acting like one, talking like one, aka in a fashion....same as saying someone is talking in a feminazi fashion by talking like one....See talking in the physical word or posting words on the screen is the same thing...Thank you for agreeing with me.....BTW: don't put words in my mouth, I never called the person a feminazi , I said her post was in feminazi fashion....no matter how you spin in it your warped mind, that's what I said, that's what I meant..... Nicky Cat sorry, you haven't proved shit....and take YOUR head out of your ass and quit arguing about what I said....because that's all you're doing.for the last time: talking like a doctor doesn't mean you're a doctor and talking like one is NOT A FUCKING PHYSICAL TRAIT!TALKING LIKE A FEMINAZI ISN'T THE SAME AS BEING ONE!Here, I'll try to make this as clear as possible for you: I never said she was a feminazi , I said her post was in faminazi fashion, you on the other hand, are a see you next tuesday....not alluding to, not in a fashion, not acting like one, not talking like one, you are one...through and through...arguing about something I said to someone ELSE 2 fucking weeks ago? In pre-1900's america, men and women worked hard to help the family survive. In the 1940's men mechanized the home and farm to make work just a bit easier. michael C Maternity leave is sexist because it implies that a woman has to take time off from work to give birth? I was a surgical assistant for 20 years. I'm trying to envision myself giving birth to my daughters while assisting the surgeon on a total knee replacement, a lap chole, a CABG or any other procedure. Nope, that just would not work & could be disastrous for the patient.....also, I do not want my waitress to give birth while serving me my food....Sorry, but I think taking time off from work to give birth is the smart thing to do.	Woman	Gender - General	1/102	0.98
lovesfreedomtoo well, if it takes a woman 8 months to give birth, she's doing something wrong...considering it only takes 9 months to grow a baby.....most women (without complications) are home in a couple of days, in some cases the next day.....Yes maternity leave is sexist if paternity leave is also not offered.....Hate to break it to you, but anytime ONE sex is given rights, privileges or benefits and not the other, that's sexist.....I know I know, according to the feminazi dogma, it is only sexist when it is a man getting anything, but sorry, it goes both ways....	Feminazi, Sex, Woman	Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General	3/99	3.03
michael CI support paternity & maternity leave to allow both parents to bond with & celebrate their new arrival, but that is not how you referenced it....you said maternity leave implies a woman has to take time off from work to give birth. A woman will take time off when she goes into labor & has her baby, that is a given unless she goes into labor & gives birth on her day off. That is not maternity leave, maternity leave refers to the period of time that a mother takes off from work following the birth of her baby.	Woman	Gender - General	2/101	1.98

lovesfreedomtoo I realize that.....it is YOU who posted "Maternity leave is sexist because it implies that a woman has to take time off from work to give birth?" Then you contradict yourself by saying it is NOT when she has to take time off to give birth, it is for afterwards...So, like many, which is it, is Maternity Leave for when she has the baby, or when she wants to spend time with it after it is born? You tried to imply that I wanted women to give birth in the workplace which is ludicrous. As I said: any benefit, perk, action or treatment that is given to someone based on their sex , is sexist.....For eg: if men got 3 weeks vacation every year and women only get 2, that's sexist. If women get 3 weeks vacation and men 2, that's sexist. If both men and women are given vacation time based on their years of service that's NOT sexist. I'm having a discussion with an idiot elsewhere who thinks that women should be allowed in male sports and that men shouldn't be allowed in female sports because their strength would give them an unfair advantage. That is 100 sexist thinking.....I say if a woman can compete with the men? Come on in! But don't expect special treatment because you're a woman , that too would be sexist.....	Sex, Woman	Gender - General	4/228	1.754
michael C I was not stating that maternity leave implies that a woman has to take time off work to give birth, I was questioning an earlier comment you posted saying that. I knew what you meant & I admit that I took a literal look at it because it was to good to pass up the chance to be sarcastic. It was only me taking the term choice & running with it...Grammar, the difference in feeling your nuts and feeling you're nuts....When I was able to work, my place of employment defined maternity leave as time taken off after the mother gives birth. That never changed in the 20+ years I worked there.Again, I support both maternity & paternity leave. I also support allowing women in sports that have traditionally been considered for men, but not without allowing men the same consideration when it comes to sports traditionally considered to be for women. I believe if men & women do play those sports, they should not expect special considerations based on their sex ....ie: if a woman wants to play on a male football team, she best be prepared to take the hard hits just like every other team member.....I have 4 brothers & 2 sisters. My sisters & I never expected special treatment just because we were females. That would not have worked in my rough & tumble, hard working, hard playing family. I have never fought "like a girl" either. My brothers would not allow that & I appreciate that because I am quite able to hold my own & throw some hefty punches if I have to.I guess what it all boils down to for me is, what's good for the goose is good for the gander. lovesfreedomtoo "I guess what it all boils down to for me is, what's good for the goose is good for the gander." wow, you be careful, you'll have the feminazis on your tail in no time if you keep talking like that!It's nice to see a woman who "gets it"....that equal means equal...not MORE than equal. I had one (you fill in the blank) the other day who stated that women deserve SPECIAL consideration and MORE respect....when challenged as to why she felt that way, she skipped answering.....Women generally hate it when I use the term feminazi but when you get right down to it, both groups wanted preferential treatment to one particular segment of society and the subjugation of the rest.....	Feminazi, Woman	Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General	2/125	1.6
michael CI don't want anything I have not earned & respect is something you must earn. I am stubborn, strong willed, can be very opinionated, am definitely outspoken, but if I am wrong, I will eat that crow & own being wrong no matter how much it hurts my butt to admit it. It is nice when a man opens & holds a door for me & I will thank them greatly every time, but I won't get bent out of shape because they didn't hold the door for me. I know & understand the history of women & I thank those before me for having the courage & gumption to fight for their rights. I just believe I would be doing them a disservice if I trampled on their hard work by assuming I am owed anything I have not also worked hard for. There is no you should do this or you should get that based on your gender in my world. I can shovel the dog crap up in my yard, plunge the toilet if needed, use a chainsaw, change a tire or the oil in my car just as good as my husband can & he can wash the dishes, vacuum, do the laundry, etc just as good as I can, no that's his role or her role at my house.I must add that there have been men who see my size (4'10, 115 lbs) & the fact that I am a woman & automatically think that I am an easy target. Not true!.... I walked out of a store & was heading to my car. A man started to follow me, so I warned him. He did not listen, even laughed at me. I kept walking, he kept following, then he made the mistake of grabbing my arm. As he pulled to spin me around facing him, I drove my fist up & into his chin, breaking his jaw & as I did, I said, I told you to back off, why didn't you listen to me? Then the security guard arrived & apologized for not getting there as quickly as he should & even he told the guy, she said back off, you should have listened to her. When the police arrived, he told them he saw it all & I acted in self defense, the EMTs loaded the guy up to go to the hospital & the police told me that man had a warrant out for his arrest for attacking another woman . I never saw him again, lucky for him I guess.	Crow, Gender, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	4/432	0.926

michael CMy parents were the driving force behind the person I am today. They were extremely active in our lives. They never had a problem telling my siblings & me no. They didn't just have a set of rules for us, they enforced those rules. If we asked why when they told us no, "because I said so" was the only answer we needed.My mother never said, just wait 'til I get you home. It did not matter where we were or who was around, she disciplined us right then & there. michael C I was a stay at home mom for 16 years, starting with the birth of my first child. I feel blessed to have been able to do so. My daughters entered high school & I went back to school to be a surgical technologist & first assist. I spent a lot of great years working in the operating room, but that never took precedence over my children no matter how old they were. The last 6 years of my career were spent traveling the states & islands to low staffed hospitals to help fill that need until they could hire someone. The pay was fantastic, I traveled on my companies dime & I worked 3 months on 2 weeks off, sometimes I took a month between assignments, but that was not often. The traveling worked well for me because while I was doing that, my husband was deployed to Iraq. generationutena lol ahem, no I am NOT and you're whacked if you think I am. I, like FEMINISTS are for equality for all, men, women, LGBT and every thing in between. EQUALITY for all, NOT more equal than, NOT subjugated like Feminazis want, NOT oppressed like Feminazis want....sorry, have you LISTENED to what Feminazi's agenda is? Not equality, not equal respect, one even had the audacity to OPENLY state they feel that women deserve MORE respect and "equality" than men.....Sorry Feminazis won't be happy until they turn this dreaded patriarchal society into a matriarchal society....That isn't equality, that is paramount to fascism.....If YOU feel that a faminazi is disrespectful to anyone, then SPEAK OUT AGAINST THEM! You are right, they ARE disrespectful to feminists, just like terrorists are disrespectful to moderate muslims.....Here's a clue for you because you obviously don't have one:All feminazis are feminists, but not all feminists are feminazis.....Do you even KNOW the difference? I bet you don't!!!	LGBT	Sexual Identity - General, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	3/165	1.818
generationutena Ok, here's an idea, why don't YOU go out and harass the 7 or 10 million OTHER guys who ALSO use the term Feminazi .....but just remember one thing: it isn't a term, it is a sub group of Feminism. If you don't like it, then how about you fight to tear down the movement?	Feminazi	Gender - Female intelligence	1/55	1.818

generationutena No it has nothing to do with challenging me or the facts I present, it is when you ignore the obvious and as I've said before: continue to recite the mantra of your ilk...Yes YOUR ilk...because a true feminist will acknowledge that there ARE some jobs that women just aren't suited for...and that there ARE some jobs that women ARE perfectly suited for. You see, when you ignore fact, and fixate on ONE agenda, that's when you start to get labelled."You are a coward who can't handle when women demand equal rights." LOL coward? I may be a lot of things but a coward I ain't....The thing is, I've been treated women as equals long before you were even born and before the term feminist or feminazi were ever coined....Where you fail miserably is when you don't address the underlying fact that there are SOME JOBS WOMEN CAN'T DO AS WELL AS MEN....and in typical feminazi fashion, you will deny this to your last breath.....Prove me wrong, come out and publically state that true equality between the sexes won't occur until there are just as many women working in mines as there are men. That women SHOULD go out TODAY and apply for these dangerous jobs.....You see, equality isn't a buffet, you don't get to pick and choose what jobs you WANT equality in, and what jobs should be filled....If you expect 50 of all jobs should be filled by women, that means ALL jobs, the good ones, the bad ones and the terrible ones....I know a company who is looking for people to clean out the inside of septic tanks....why don't you send me your contact info and I'll have them get in touch with you? generationutena btw: I worked construction for 10 years, one position was a site manager. I had a woman show up through a placement agency....She left the next day because she couldn't handle the heat, the noise, the dirt, and the work load...you see, I expect workers to work....to lift heavy items, put them in a cart, and then dump them in the bin...if they don't or can't? they shouldn't be on the job....that goes for men too...I've fired men who weren't pulling their weight....You see, it is rare when a woman WANTS to go to a job where they come home at night, with dirt caked behind their ears, inside their ears, with sweat streaks down their back and stains over every inch of their exposed skin.... generationutena and there's nothing worse than a person with a cause who doesn't realize there "cause" isn't any better than the current situation....who is so blinded by their diatribe.....As for talking about jobs, you specifically brought up jobs in politics in your previous posts so give your head a shake.I'm no more sexist than you are.....let me ask you:1) do you believe in "you should never hit a woman ever"?2) do you believe that "women can do every job a man can do"?3) do you believe that women deserve more respect than men?4) do you believe that all white men are privileged?5) do you believe that there are no women oppressors?Answer the above (if you dare)	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/125	1.6

Yes? then you're probably african american....If you say "women can do all jobs better than a man" then yes, that means you're a feminazi .....I get it, you don't like being a feminazi , I wouldn't either.....but don't shoot the messenger! Instead of focusing your tirades on me, why don't you examine your position and maybe modify it so that you AREN'T spouting off Feminazisms?I believe (as I've stated repeatedly) that women should get equal pay for equal workwomen deserve the same amount of respect as menwomen should be treated the same as men (and all that entails)...the problem is: feminazis DON'T believe in that.....So tell me why you aren't a feminazi instead of telling me how wrong I am for using the term..... Of course you didn't because it shows feaminazism for what it really is.....You are 100 correct in one thing: you THINK you're improving the world but you're not...that is what is wrong with feminazis.....and YOU.....If you ONCE said "equality for all" "equality for all sexes" "both men AND women are sexist" "both men AND women are racist " "both men AND women have been oppressed" THEN you might be "right" but when you focus SOLELY on one group, above ALL others, that sure sounds like what the Nazis were doing!!! One, in the context of the time during WW1 and WW2 people wanted to fight for their country. Morale was extremely high and people considered it an honour to fight for their home. Two, sure some men didn't want to fight wars but plenty of women wanted to help or fight for them. Now, there's feminism and a stronger focus on equality. (and unlike women who came before me, our generation has a choice.. we don't HAVE to cling to a man just so the kids can eat.Sadly, though, women objectify themselves just as much (if not more) than men do. Neyu Meeps why does one women being sexy in a video have to extend to all women as sexual objects? why can't it just be one women being sexy as an individual? that's the problem with your theory. you take one ad of one woman being sexy, and say it extends to all women. if every commercial had women only being used for being sexy, then you might have a point. but there's a plethora of commercials that have women as doctors , lawyers and other high ranking jobs too. by that logic ads with men that are fat and eating a hamburger are sexist because they make all men seem like pigs that just eat and don't watch their weight and are unhealthy. by the way, there are plenty of commercials that sexualize men too. every shaving commercial, hair gel, etc. it's not just women. are men being objectified too and need to dismantle the patriarchy? you seriously need to work on seeing people as an individual, instead of extending what one person does to everyone else. Neyu Meeps so basically your point is that women and men are both used to be sexy in ads, but women deal with it to a much higher degree. you say the portion of sexy ads with women outweighs the portion of sexy ads with men by a long shot, if i understand what you said correctly, and you think that it's a problem.however i'd have to argue that the portion of female sexy ads to male sexy ads isn't that much different. i agree there's a little more women, but there's magic mike, 50 shades, old spice commercials, etc. i don't think they difference is as huge as most people say, and men just don't complain about it. and i don't see anything wrong with sexy ads, and i don't see it being as much overwhelmingly women as people claim it is. and the whole body image thing, guys can compare themselves to muscular people to and get bad body image. it's not a gendered issue. +Neyu Meeps I find it natural not sexist, and what you are doing is sexist, You think that because she made a choice as an independent women to be sexy on an ad that she is brainwashed by the " Patriarchy " The Patrarchy? that has been dead for a while now, how could it even exist with Feminists having control over the entire college system, banning anti-feminist speakers and teaching Women constantly that they are victims in " Gender Studies" Classes, those are literally brainwashing classes. I want a world where a man or a women can go up in an ad or a photoshoot and be sexy, where females can be sexy and objectified without being hated for it, where men can be objectified too. Objectification isn't actually a bad thing, its good if both sexes do it to each other because it is natural. It is natural for a human to be attracted to another human because of their physical appearance, and it is natural for Advertisements to take advantage of this fact. The only reason Feminists hate objectification is because they feel entitled, like their body is some temple that cannot be looked at, and all eyes have to divert it when it walks by. No...it is a hunk of cells, we are all objects, and it is ok for other humans to see you as one. I was shocked at some of those old ads, but it seems like they were really stretching to find problems with the new ads. The D&G "gangbang" ad - you know, there are women who like having lots of guys at once, just like there are men who like multiple women at once. I don't think that represented a gang rape at all, nor does it even look like one. And the flannel ad where she'd like "I'd be fine with this if the guy was showing off his six pack and wearing undies" Um, didn't we just see a D&G ad where the guys showed off their abs and wore undies? The problem with these women is that they are programmed to think that any woman engaged in sexual activity is being used, and that a woman couldn't possibly want to suck a dick or have sex with lots of guys or expose herself. Yeah, women are just dainty little virgins who are 'tainted' by sex and should remain covered and hidden, right ladies? Sexism ? Look in the mirror much? oggyreidmore If everything marketed specifically (clothing and otherwise) was more sexed up with both genders I'd be happy.But please don't make ads that kids see covered in sexy shit.Adult's clothing in the store, cars, expensive chocolate, and scents are all things I would be quite happy to see people selling with sex . It's human nature.Burger king is definitely not one of those things.	Sex	Gender - General	1/66	1.515

oggyreidmore RAPE MENTION 1) In the gangbang ad I literally thought he was strangling her at first... It looks violent. A sex-friendly ad where everyone wanted it would maybe feature a woman in the center and men gently touching part of her body... Not hovering above her like he's going to hold her down and hurt her. She's not only turned away from him but her face is scrunched up and she honestly looks like she's in pain. 2) In the "gangbang" (gangrape...) ad half of the males were shirtless. The woman was wearing a very revealing outfit. It was, yknow, matching. The reason the contrast is so sexist is because the man is fully clothed but the woman is not... (which is a common way in pornos to show dominance and if you think this kind of different in media/advertisement is healthy then you're wrong.)You cannot trust advertisement to give sexy-friendly/sex-positive images. You have to look at FEMALE ROLE MODELS to do that. Popular ones are Nicki Minaj, Beyonce, women who embrace sexuality publicly. If you think these women don't have powerful female role models then you are wrong. Advertisements are not ROLE MODELS but they are horribly damagingly influential to any young girl who may see them.Just cause a woman may enjoy gangbangs doesn't mean it should be shown off publicly in media also. And especially not so violently. (Also women in porn don't enjoy gangbangs if you are trying to get at that. The porn industry is basically the rape industry.)	Common, Woman	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	5/256	1.953

Lítill Jötunn Unless your niece is the model in that ad, you're just guessing like everyone else. And if you knew anything about male models, you'd understand why the presumption of being gay is not exactly a stretch of the imagination.You obviously didn't read my comment. Brain scans of men show that they respond positively to images of scantily clad women and poorly to images of scantily clad men. Brain scans of women show THE SAME RESULTS. Women have more of a positive response to male imagery, but they also have highly positive responses to female imagery. This is why advertisers use these images. They don't just randomly stick women on their ads, they do market studies and go with the data. This is what people want MALE AND FEMALE. If you are one of the small fraction of people who respond poorly to these images, then you are a statistical outlier and no major brands waste their time marketing anything to you. They leave that to the niche companies.Your assumptions are ridiculous. I'm only sexist if I feel like one gender is superior to another or that one is inferior to another. This isn't how I feel, therefore I'm not. And where the hell does white play into this at all? You aren't just sexist, you're racist as well! Nice projection though, calling me those things because I don't lock step in line with your thinking. People like you are why so many people are refusing to identify as feminist. I'm sitting here agreeing that the older ads were overtly sexist and terrible and that women should be respected and treated as equals in society. Yet, I'm being bashed because I can see a difference between "sexy" and "sexist"? There are two schools of thought with feminism: One is that women are free to be as sexual as men and shouldn't have a stigma of being slut shamed as a result. The other is that the media over-sexualizes women reducing them to objects and that they should cover themselves and concentrate more on intellectual aspects of femininity. Well, I fall into camp number one and you fall in camp two. You are obviously in camp two, because you see a woman scantily clad and consider that a rape, and don't take into consideration that she might like to be naked or sexy or sexual of her own free will, or that she doesn't see "sin" when bare skin is involved in artistic photography - and those personal stances may very well be why she became a model to begin with. Should we just FORBID women from modeling? Should we cover them in burkas and not let anyone see their bare skin? And before you say "well then why don't men pose scantily clad" try looking at ANY other D&amp;G ad. It's abs and sausage wall to wall. The man in the ad we're discussing has less clothing than the woman. The old adds are fucked up and really sexist but there's nothing wrong with the new ones i'll explain way (even tho buzzfeed is not gonna acknowledge it clearly).-Dolce and Gabbana: The add is pretty much the reverse axe spray. A girl makes men go crazy because of how she smells(or looks then again it might be for clothes), but ofc you only focus on the women -.- even she's probably the one with most clothes in the add. Also it's an add for clothes (or perfume idk) most of the time is gonna be associated with being "sexy". -Burger King: you have to really overthink it to think it's sexist. The add is clearly being comical kinda like saying "it's as good as sex " then again i do admit that food shouldn't be advertised with sex .But at the same time i doubt the idea behind the add is that "she doesn't want it" because then the add itself doesn't make any sense, they are selling food, the idea is that she wants it!-The Shirt: "I would be cool with this add, if thisman was also showing me his six pack" well guess what he did two adds ago he just wasn't wearing his shirt. Also i'm sure they are selling it to men and not women also you're looking two adds of the same shirt, ONLY TWO, i'm sure if you look deep enough you'll find an add of the same shirt of a guy showing his abs. And there's nothing wrong with that, because half of the reason people buy certain clothes is because they want to look attractive, humans are sexual beens not sexual objects, you can't buy women or men at a store for 50$. With some saying "sexism is about both genders but this video doesn't talk about it towards men" well bc obviously this video is about sexism towards women and bc there were no sexist ads towards men back then??? The reason why the word feminism exists is bc they weren't treated equally to men. "meninism" never existed, even back then bc they never needed it, nor need it today. Ashley Wood that's the same as saying the majority of people in america are white and why all other races shouldn't have representation. they're a minority, but they still exist and deserve acknowledgement. the original commenter was saying something related to the subject of the video of other minorities who are rarely (if ever) given a positive outlook in the media.that same applies to objectified women, gays, other races, different cultures, etc. i don't agree with what michael said above, since it might be viewed as "tolerance" but it isn't acceptance, either. gay people are not objects like porn as given per their example, they are people who watch television and watch media just like anybody else. i know it wasn't their intention, but to say "i don't mind two lesbians making out, just not two UGLY lesbians make out" is objectification of women, again. for a better comparison, it's the same as saying "i'm not racist, but i don't like seeing black people on television." Did you ever think that maybe it's because some people still see the woman's naked body as taboo or as being solely of pornographic nature? Also, when you see topless females, do you notice what is censored? The nipples. Think about it. Both men and women have nipples, but a woman's will be censored because to the public, it's " sexual ", when really, nipples are just used to feed offspring and are not originally intended to be viewed in a sexual light, but in a nurturing, friendly light. Nude men are seen as "sexy" and "normal", but if a woman dares to go nude, everyone loses it because we need to "think of the children". The reason we see so many more half-nude men in the media is because for some reason, we see their bodies as acceptable for being viewed by the general public, but for women, the only times we see a plethora of nudity is in pornography. Garret Browning It has already been studied time and time again. You are not born with your sexuality, but you are born with a preference and a likelihood. For example, you are born with many traits or characteristics that INFLUENCE sexuality, but you are not born with your sexuality. Progesterone is a hormone that is found at consistently higher levels in gay males than straight males and has, ergo, been linked to what influences homosexuality. So, you can be born with many key genes that can later develop into homosexuality, but your genes do not dictate your homosexuality. Otherwise, homosexuality would be nearly nonexistent because they cannot reproduce efficiently. Instead, it must be caused by other things intrinsic an innate in ALL humans. This is why it has been determined that sexuality is set at such a young age that it is virtually impossible to change after 3 years of age . But it's natural, and there is nothing inherently wrong with it. Would I be grossed out by two guys doing it? Yep. But I'd also be pretty weirded out to see a straight couple doing it. People tend to do these things in private, not in the middle of the street. Chances of actually coming across it are very low. So hey, they can do what they want, right? Not hurting me. Makes them happy, so more power to them. And I think I read something about society not working if gay people exist. Why not? It's probably harder for a man to get justice if he gets raped. It's unfair to make a huge blanket statement like that, Mindy. The deeper problem is the fact that we already think we know so much about a person just because they are a man or a woman . Sometimes that means a person will be viewed more positively and sometimes they will be viewed more negatively depending on the context. ObitoTHEwraith Don't try attacking by asking for damned inequalities. You have been given the definition of feminism plenty of times and NOWHERE does it mention man hating. Misandry and feminism are two different things and you're blaming one group of people with specific opinions for not stopping the other misandry group from existing. Some of these adverts were promoting abuse towards women NOT men and the others were saying women are only good for sex or cleaning. How is that sexist against men? It's like having a case where a woman was gang raped and complaining about how it's sexist against men to punish the male rapists (and yes before you say anything, statistics show that women are raped more than men so that was a logical example to choose, I'm not man hating).Oh and feminists aren't inactive, this is a form of communication where they debate, use researched facts and definitions to back-up points made on popular youtube channels like this one. Asking for a list of five things to spur an argument is attacking and it's not because I chose not to give them to you that they don't exist. Look at some stats, look at adverts, watch the news, be creative. So if feminists are automatically man haters, how many of the women you have debated this with have accidentally shown themselves to be "man bashers" ie their true selves...?(sense the irony).The thing you haven't understood is that in the add where the man spansks the woman , the add is giving the men and idea of how they should be treating their wives (ie as servants) and, of course it's wrong but they're still in the position of obvious power and dominance. This is why it's more sexist towards women, that doesn't mean it has no consequences against men and the way they think but the woman is still the one being taken advantage of, not the man. Alia Aliia Sexism is institutionalized towards one gender over the other. That's why when people refer to sexism it is in reference to woman because institutionally, society has been sexist towards woman .	Gender, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	5/32	15.625
ObitoTHEwraith Sexism can be manifested in both personal attacks and insults, and in the structure of social institutions. Sexism can be present in hostile acts, as well as in apparently neutral arrangements. It can be the result of activities or arrangements that set out to discriminate or harm, or it can result from ignorance or inadvertence. As an example, let us take one of the oldest institutions in American history, marriage. In pre-modern America, in fact in most societies of the time, marriage was a contract. A representation of the trading of property. This property was the woman , along with the woman was a dowry(sum of money to be paid to the future husband) and perhaps some land. The parents of the daughter would get in return a guarantee of either financial stability or familial ties to a more wealthier family. This is why the woman takes the mans last name, it is a symbol of owner ship. This is also why a man may be shamed for adultery but a woman would be killed for it. Now we move to post-modern America, woman no longer are given to the man nor is there a large sum of money to be given to the man either however it is still tradition in many less progressive places the the woman father pay for the wedding. Now while you may say that it is no longer sexist for this to occur because it is something both the bride and groom to be want, you cannot deny that the beginnings of this institution where made in the foundation that woman are property and that this thought process continued though out history because the belief has been institutionalized in the society.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	9/287	3.136
Because just like racism historically affects people of color more than whites, the institution still exists. Yes, I also think sexism can apply to both genders. But in this case, in this one video specifically, of all the millions of videos in the world, they decided to focus on sexism towards females, which is actually much more common and a bigger problem. Maybe next time they can talk about how men are/were considered "weak" if they cried or couldn't lift something heavy, or actually treated their wives like people back then, etc. That's all pretty ridiculous. ObitoTHEwraith If I may;Feminism- Yes, people often get it confused with misandry, and yes, people of misandry tend to believe they are a part of feminism: However that doesn't ring it true. When looking at basic definitions here,Feminism: -"The belief that women and men should have equal rights and opportunities" [LINK] -"The belief that women are and should be treated as potential intellectual equals and social equals to men. These people can either be male or female human beings, although the ideology is commonly (and perhaps falsely) associated mainly with women." [LINK] Misandry:-"Generally, misandry refers to the hatred and oppression of men on a genotypic basis" - [LINK] -"Dislike of, contempt for, or ingrained prejudice against men." - [LINK] And, as you can see from the /literal definition- They contrast quite differently. Equality for women /does not equal to man hating. Why? Because that's /not equality; And actual feminist understand this. Try looking up someone like Emma Wattson; She explains these things with brilliance in her speeches and truly is an amazing character.Yes, there is sexism for both sides. The reason people say it's more common for women is because it's believed to be much more present in today's society than it is for men; It's always been that way. Though, when looking at it; There is always, almost /always going to be sexism on both sides no matter the case. A few examples;- "Women have to be soft, modest, kind, sweet, gentle, ect."That is a sexist stereotype for females. But, WITH that stereotype, we also have;- "Men have to be strong, tough, badass, outgoing, ect."Which is basically the other side of the coin, as, for most cases of sexism there will always be it's counterpart.And feminism? Feminism wants to stop that; Stop it for /both sides.Men should have every right to wear a dress, just as girls have every right to wear pants.Girls should have every right to deny the female stereotypes, just as men should have every right to follow them if they please.And the list goes on.In the end, an actual feminist (NOT a misandry that choses to hide behind its word and change its meaning) really fights for both sides. It's just more common to hear about feminist fighting on the "Females rights" Side because of things like the wage gap which doesn't apply to men as much (though I think it really only doesn't apply to white men- I can't quite remember ')So, hope this maybe gave you a better idea of what feminism really is!	Common, Misandry, Sexism	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	9/433	2.079

To all the people saying 'women have it worse', no. Women had it worse. Women rights were first made a thing because women didn't have the opportunity to vote. Well, it's 2015. The definition of Feminism is 'to fight for equal rights' (to put it briefly) however the definition of Feminism has been scraped to the bottom of the earth. Also, don't act like we're not guilty. Men have treated women like objects but do not say that we haven't. For example, let's take Taylor Swift's song called Blank Space (no hate for her v good song 10/10), "Oh my god, look at that face, you look like my next mistake." Great. The title doesn't make it seem that way at all. You're simply assuming that. Only simple minded people would believe that. People are just creating problems, like this one, by thinking that it makes it seem like sexism can only happen towards women. I get you're point, but its ridiculous.And I don't think your example is a good one either. If they say black people review racist ads, its obvious they're only going to show racist ads that are towards black people to see the reaction of black people reviewing racism thats towards them. It is that simple and no because race is not a gender related issue. Sexism is. These are different situations. This was obvious because sexism is gender related, and they stated the gender in the title. If they had a video called Black people review racist vintage ads, do you really think they would show some racism that was directed to asians? and only have black people comment on it. Sexism is a gender related topic. They had women review sexist ads. Why would they only get women to review the ads if the ads were going to be related to women and men? If the title were about racism and they had black people review racist vintage ads, do you really think they would involve other races in it if only black people were reviewing it? No. It doesn't make any sense, and there's no point in you arguing with me because the context clues argument is valid. thatguyunknoe im not painting your argument to be misogynistic, nor do i think it is. i just think it's based on gender roles and stereotypes.	Gender	Gender - General	1/25	4.0
Your argument doesn't make any sense. The point of the adds was to sell a unisex shirt. The product targeted at either demographic doesn't need appeal to the opposite gender . The woman compared to the man is obviously over sexualized (as so are the majority of women in media). Your lame ass link won't be able to justify the obvious sexism . Also, I'm sure most straight women will find an add with a half naked, well built guy more appealing/attractive than the one they shot.	Gender, Lame, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/85	4.706
The key word being Sell. They are advertising a product, using psychology to each demographic. If the demographics responded the same way then the ad would be identical on both sides. They are not because, since they are advertising to two genders at once, they are targeting each differently. There is also a desire to emulate some that you think of as attractive. To dress/speak/act the same way. if this were not the case, we wouldn't use models and photoshop at all in advertising. Yes they wouldn't advertise like this if it wasn't effective. Your refusal to even look at my evidence simply shows willful ignorance of the other side. They are targeting different primal brains of course they won't be the same. That's my point. Women and men are not the same. We never were, and never will be. And to that point we aren't equal. Nothing that is different can be equal to another thing. That isn't to say that women or men have more value than the other, it just means that they have different responses to the same things (generally). To my point, the ad is simply playing off that. No one would advertise a man or woman in the way that they did if it did not SELL.	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/213	0.939
thatguyunknoe But half the problem is that men are encouraged to understand "sexy" as a woman with no clothes on while women are, by your logic, encouraged to see a smartly dressed man as sexy. We should be just as sexy fully dressed as we are minimally clothed. 2- Bottom line is, if you're trying to sell a woman a shirt, she's gonna wanna know what that shirt might actually look like on her body. This is lazy casual-journalism confirming feminist biases: 1. As a Caucasian-born-male I don't want to live in past. At all. 2. I bet some of these women have anti-ageing creams &amp; yet all of them disagree with the word 'tragically'??? 3. Interpreting "Thirty Years Old" as being young is an interpretation, biologically women lose eggs &amp; fertility reduces, therefore "ageing". 4. Confirming your biases about Madmen is ridiculous. 5. Saying suicide should not be used in advertising doesn't mean anything, it's being used today in quit-smoking ads. 6. Women were not okay with this stuff in the 1970s. 7. Disagreeing with an ad because the guy is not subjectively sexy is ridiculous. 8. Your uterine wall isn't being 'ripped out of you', it shreds and makes a nutrient rich lining &amp; bleeds due to an unfertilised fetus. 9. Cleaning was not the only thing a woman could do in the 1970s, it wasn't the 1770s. 10. Despite advertising becoming sexually implicit, implying gang-bangs and blow jobs, why do you assume nothing has changed? prediculous It's likely that those being sexualised are primarily women, but it is true that men do as well, but with the focus being on women, it makes it appear that solely women are being sexualised in very unnecessary circumstances. And sex sells refers to sexual elements in advertising, so regardless of the ratio of gender used in unnecessary sexual ads, the term is still correct.I'll admit, I don't agree to that type of advertising. I don't see why it should be used, there's so many more techniques which advertisement agencies could use to sell their product. I guess it really shows what kind of creatures humans are. sarah rhoads, queen of jotunheim horny no lifes with to much porn in their mind. is that enough as answer?+Tifa Lockhart you seriously believe that only women are being sexualized in the ads? Let me ask u one question,did u ever see in the last 20 years lets say an ad where the guy didnt have a sixpack for example?In my opinion in all the ads,if the feature a man or a woman they always make sure the actor/ress has a "perfect body" or what they think of as perfect body...annorexic woman and guyz on steroids.....its all made only so they sell more product and to bring to the viewer the impression that they need to be like the actors also because all the people from the opposite sex seem to like the looks ...all ads feature same standard types of actors.Women look at the women in ads selling lets say pants and are like : ohh she looks so good i need to lose a couple of pounds and ill go buy those pants.That mentality is already a part of the problem.You people gonna rage with me for saying this but i couldnt care less.Those new-gen feminists are really stupid in my opinion.I can understand the reason for the existence of a Feminists group but those should just focus on women being treated wrong by society and try to improve/change that image.NOT sit whole day on their asses and scream at random guyz coz well they are guyz ROFLLike i did read in a comment on this video a woman chasing a guy away while he tryed to help her and then comes here to her other stupid girls and complains about the guy trying to HELP HER.srsly btch?!?Most of you "feminists" here are anyway kids so i wonder why i bother typing this but i still hope it hits the mark and most of u realize what a feminist should do and what she shouldnt.Now be silent and bring me a beer and my house shoes :) j/k relax and have a nice day im done with this	Sex, Woman	Gender - General	4/357	1.12

Tifa Lockhart What do you mean "we've just gotten a little better?" Yes, there's less gender stereotypes in advertisement, but there's more sex . I know men and women that would rather have traditional gender roles in advertisement than have men and women be sexually objectified. The Barbie doll got a bigger waist and a smaller chest. There's even more realistic dolls now. But the Ken doll hasn't changed much. Even the GI Joe doll has gotten bigger. In video games, many girls are hardly dressed compared to their male counterparts. Even in fantasy games, the girls' armor hardly covers them up, while the men are covered head to toe. When you say "we've just gotten a little better," it depends on what you mean and who you ask. Sexual objectification could be as or more offensive than gender stereotypes. BUT other feminists disagreed, saying that wouldn't be equal, and so there was back and forth there. Feminism is a group, but even groups can fight inside themselves about which is the right direction to turn, because it's made up of people with their own opinions. Hell, consider why the man would be required to pay. The woman couldn't be held responsible because they weren't viewed as an equal human being capable of rational thought. savagepinksockYou're being very hostile. I get that this can be a touchy subject and it's easier to read people in the most aggressive way when you don't have physical social cues to respond to.You aren't talking to Aether you're talking at them. It is as disrespectful as you feel they have been.So the subject of the wage gap. I think what Aether is getting at is that the conversation on the wage gap has ended far too easily.Women make less money than men on the whole. Statistics often brought into the conversation are outdated and inaccurate. They talk about how women make around 30 cents per hour less than men, or something around that number for the same job. This statistic is not really representative of the real problem.We are given reasons for why the wage gap occurs 'organically.' Women are less likely to ask for raises and tend to pick less physically intensive jobs. Most people take this and end the conversation there. But that's not where the conversation ends.The next step is to question why that is. There's no real reason to assume that this is a biologically inherent tendency in women. It is very much possible that our culture's concept of women and how we socialize them plays a bigger role. There does exist outliers who do pursue raises and who do the more physically intensive job. Their existence does indicate that there's more at play than just biology.Women absolutely should be encouraged to assess their value and ask for the appropriate amount. Women do have less initiative, but I don't think it's because of something physically or psychologically inherent to their gender . Our culture simply doesn't encourage that kind of behavior in women. And it's a problem.It's not the only problem. But it is certainly one nonetheless.	Gender	Gender - General	1/309	0.324
Shamazya "no real reason to assume that this is a biologically inherent tendency in women." - apart from the fact most women get pregnant and so spend a around a year less in work/university so end up with worse jobs, or that the amount of women who choose not to work...why should we encourage women? by encouraging one gender over another you are discriminating against a gender , there's no ifs or butsthe wage gap is there because women just don't work as much as men and choose risk averse career paths, the wage gap isn't some sexist thing, it's what you would expect here's a situation, you have a couple of equal intelligence/career paths (because yey equality) the couple decides to have a child, due to the mother having tits she is the logical choice to stay off work to raise the child until 12 months, this makes her earn less despite assumed equal intelligence	Gender	Gender - General	2/157	1.274

savagepinksockI don't see why you see the statement of encouraging women as being mutually exclusive from the encouragement of men. Although, what you said seems contradictory to me. Encouraging one gender and not the other is sexist. But men are encouraged to pursue asking for raises. So that is exactly where the sexism lies...? So why the response to that part? You're already in agreement?I disagree that the wage gap is 'what you would expect.' And I don't particularly like the sentiment because it shuts down all curiosity on the subject. It says 'We shouldn't explore this further because it's obvious.' But it's not obvious. What you stated was speculation with an immensely simplified reasoning. But people are incredibly complex. If it really was as simple as that then there would be no women in more strenuous jobs. The fact that there are shows that it is at least in part nurture that plays a role in how women choose the jobs they pursue. To what degree, we don't know. So we need to ask and we need to explore. It's not that there are laws that prevent gender discrimination its that there are laws that allow you to fight gender discrimination.I get that my saying this seems a bit nit-picky but it's an important distinction. The reason it's important is because laws are only effective if they can be enforced. And since we live in a culture where it's considered uncouth to talk about how much we're paid (Or it's even downright put into the contract) that makes the ability to enforce laws against gender discrimination significantly more difficult.And I'm not bringing this distinction up because you're talking about gender I'm bringing this distinction up because this is how we need to view the law. It's not racist or sexist considering it is fact that white men were the privileged demographic in relation to non-white and non-male people, however it is a generalization because it excludes the sub-categories within the overarching "white man" group that were also underprivileged and/or discriminated against and ignored the societal challenges such people faced. Remember people, in the context of modern day social justice, anything you say at any given time can be accused of underrepresenting or misrepresenting a minority and so if you're going to pressure others to be politically correct and super sensitive, you better follow what you preach. I mean, its okay to make fun of white men, since they have it 'soooooo easy'. Let's step back. Now, look at recent years. How often do you see the saying that "white men have it easy"? I see it too often. Now with that, let's back it up a bit more, and talk about men in general. Now we have the saying "men have it easy", along with "tell men not to rape", and plenty of other feminism sayings that are to criticize men in general. Feminism is very relatable to Nazism, honestly. Why? I have seen in multiple comment threads and on social medias, that 'Feminism gave you ....', and 'feminism is about equality for all', when in reality, it isn't. Egalitarianism is for equality of people, not women in general, like feminism. Look up the definition of both. And before someone goes 'all feminists I know say that they are for equality of men and women', which would not make them feminists. Why? I see so many feminists fall back onto the definition, and say 'how can you be against that?'.Now I know women were the inferior gender in history, and I understand why you'd think feminism has given women so many rights, when in reality, it was the suffragist movement. What's that, you may ask? You might as well do research. I'm not a stupid man who is against feminism because of (insert bullshit reason feminist would say here), I'm against it because I did my research on it, positive and negative, and I see that it is negatively affecting me more than it is positively affecting me. Men do not have it as easy as feminists say we do, in today's time and age . Its plain and simple. Men are not gifted everything on a golden platter, its not that simple, as much as I wish it was. I need to work just as hard as you do for a job, for an education, for respect, etc. This world is not a mans world, it is a persons world. We are all running it, not just one gender . I really hope that no one thinks that the modern day man thinks these things... sexism towards women is slowing and hopefully will come to a end. "Ads are more geared towards men", one question about that comment, what man looks at an ad and says I want that? I don't everyone I know doesn't, with online reviews I don't even look at adds anymore. I loved the 1950's era, well just old time sci-fi like things such as fallout or bioshock. As a nerdy teenage boy I can say that women are harder on people like me, I've literally been spat on just because I asked a girl out. Sexism isn't gender derived as much as it used to be, sexism is used by people in modern times to put down people of the opposite sex who usually have a lower social status. stop trying to put a band-aid over the reality by making it out like you are oppressed in some way. I have had friends' families be split apart from divorce. One of my close friend's father was physically abusive and got custody over her. I helped her get out of that situation. women certainly were not the ones who made the rules that are followed in court. men did. and maybe women would get more severe sentences for their crimes if men stopped seeing them as weak.while I am not denying that sexism is there, you aren't "put upon" or being shafted. There have been court rulings sexist against men and women. also, if there were any biases of women getting the child, it's because the men in the law system still think that women are better caretakers, which, they're not, clearly, as there are a lot of abusive women out there too. men can actually be wonderful parents, and I have read stories about single dads that give up everything for their kids.although what disgusts me even more is while I'm not a feminist per-say, there are "anti feminist" women out there who still think a woman's place is in the kitchen. if we as a society stopped thinking that femininity and women were some how sub par, maybe women who are murderers could start being in equal lawful trouble as their male counterparts. certainly someone who is able to commit such a terrible crime as murder is not someone who is weak or needs to be doted upon.however, I digress that there seems to be a bit of a bias towards men about how people see men to be more likely to be criminals, which is largely untrue.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/293	0.341

I think men are probably more likely to be criminals. For whatever reason, but that definitely seems to be the case.Anyway, I think one of the main points of bringing up sexism against men is not to compare it to the sexism against women. Rather, it's just trying to advocate that we think flexibly. Yes, most of the time a man will abuse a woman versus the other way around, but hopefully, that fact will not make us unsympathetic when we hear on the news of a man being abused by a woman :) We just want flexibility in our thinking. Comparing who gets abused more is one aspect. But you don't have to think they are abused equally to hope that neither men nor women get abused. It's not that much to ask to say you don't want to get abused. Whether you're asking that as a man or a woman . And that doesn't follow from feminism or anti-feminism, but rather, simply being able to imagine how it feels to be abused, and apply that feeling to wherever you see it. o c e It's as simple as this: If you call yourself a 'feminist' but you do not support equality, then you are not a feminist. If you see people call themselves feminists but they do not believe in equal rights, then don't believe them; they give feminism a bad name. Nothing else much to it.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/56	1.786
Ashley Wood fem · i · nism femə nizəm/nounthe advocacy of women's rights on the grounds of political, social, and economic equality to men. There is a difference between being a feminist and being an equalist. If you label yourself a feminist, you assume that men are privileged and have more rights and opportunities than women, but this is not the case. There are areas of life wherein women have more rights and opportunities than men. Neither side is more privileged than the other, but both sides have rights and opportunities the other does not. For example, men lack reproductive rights that women are entitled to. A woman can abort a fetus if she chooses, even if the man is opposed to it. However, a man cannot force a woman to have an abortion if he doesn't want it for whatever reason. Is the fetus not the property of both parents? What does it matter whose body it's in? Similarly, men are paid slightly more than women are for the same work. Now, there are several factors that go into this, but what many believe to be the wage gap (.77 : 1) is not the wage gap. That study was conducted by a faulty organization that ignored many factors including the fact that men, on average, work 7 longer than women, earning them overtime which is pay-and-a-half. Also, many women go on maternity leave and after a certain period of time, that PTO switches to LTD which is unpaid or paid at a reduced rate. And what's most important to understand is that this study observed total wages which means that they added all the money earned by women and all the miney earned by men and looked at the difference, ignoring all the factors that went into that difference. At the end of the day, women AND men are unequal in many ways. No one side is more privileged than the other and it is important that we address inequality facing BOTH sexes/genders. Ashley Wood You are the one who is ignorant? Do you seriously think feminism is just about equality? Equality is a concept much older than feminism, and doesn't extend to just one gender .	Gender	Gender - General	1/33	3.03

Ashley Wood Except that every dictionary I've looked at has defined feminism this way. Additionally, that is how every feminist I have ever heard of has treated it. Just recently feminists in Wisconsin, New York, and California protested against colleges allowing male students to have a men's help region of the school where only men can be. Women have this right afforded to them at every campus in the nation , but feminists protested this MRA action... it's not just your interpretation or even how others interpret it. It's how feminist act upon their interpretation and so far, there are few examples of feminists actual striving for equality. This is the definition of feminism across all official dictionaries. Calistus Jay yeah, it does. Even though some people claim to feminists, and are actually sexists, they don't know what the word actually means. Not knowing what the word "feminism" means is ridiculously common .	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/34	2.941
Gabriela N. That's just false. I advise you to find a dictionary (be it online or a book) and look at the definition of the word feminism. You'll likely find that the definition is more or less "the advocacy of women's social, economic, and political rights". You'll be hard-pressed to find a definition that coincides with the feminist belief that feminism means gender equality. However, that definition does wxist and many others do as well. So it's irrelevant to the conversation on whether or not feminism is a good thing. Instead, you have to look at what it's done and when you look at that, it should be apparent that feminism is not about gender equality anymore, but deliberately giving women rights at the expense of men, boys, minorities, and even other women.	Gender	Gender - General	2/133	1.504

Gabriela N. Agreed, they aren't about equality, but you're completely removing the ad out of the era it was in. If you put it into context, the ad makes complete sense with social attitudes (and this whole issue raising the question of what equality actually is). Your question as to why women having the same rights as men is flawed in its premise. You're assuming that women are still in this struggle for equality, when research and data shows that being a woman is far easier this day in age than being a man. From the feminization of the education system and the listing of women as a minority so they get Affirmative Action to quotas being pursued by feminist groups and their political lobbyists. The problem is that having the same rights and equality are not the same thing. For instance, men and women have every single right given to them by the Constitution, local, state, and federal law, so they have the same rights, but men and women are unequal in that men are required to sign up for the draft when they register to vote when women don't have to. So when you say what's wrong with men and women having the same rights, there's absolutely nothing wrong with that, but equality is the most troubling subject. So, when you revise the question of whether or not men and women should be equal, I say of course, but you don't see feminists fighting for equality do you, but rather women's rights. This is the most egregious flaw in feminism, it is not a movement for equality, but for women's rights, and in an era where women have more rights and more protected rights than men, the movement becomes superfluous, a cancer of society and a victory for ignorance and stupidity. Then we have the free bleeders and radical feminist who take this crusade for equality and turn it into a power struggle, but if i will not excuse misogyny i will not excuse misandry . Daena Cook If I understand what you're implying, that feminists want their empowerment and equality with men, yet still want some of those things that come with being women, aka the grand gestures....I whole heartedly agree with you. It's the cake and eat it too analogy.The whole concept that it is demeaning to women because one of them is show, gasp, cleaning is ludicrous....Not sure who asked it but yes, it would still be demeaning to women if it was 4 women surround 1 man.....because women can take issue with anything that involves a man and a woman .....it that scenario they would find it demeaning because "it implies the 4 women can't take care of themselves, that they need to wait for a man to do it".....	Woman	Gender - General	1/129	0.775

Tuturu see, therein lies the issue: there's clean, then there's CLEAN. You don't have to be able to eat off the kitchen floor (unless you have a baby crawling around) and you don't have to be able to drink out of the toilet bowl. To me, piling my dirty socks in the corner is a fine place to store them until wash day, but to others? OMFG the horror ...the horror...As a buddy of mine once said to me: hey, the sock fairy must have died because my socks aren't magically whisked into the laundry hamper" right before his wife swatted him.My problem is I have a terrible short term memory. Always has been this way. So if I put something "away", I'll promptly never be able to find it again because I'll forget where "away" is. I lived with a stuffer, a YL who didn't care where it went, as long as it was out of sight. The problem with that was, I never knew where anything was.I think the issue is when dissimilar people get together. You both have to be "ok" with the pile of socks in the corner. Me? I just have one laundry basket for dirty clothes, one for clean. I work construction so my T shirts don't have to be folded and ironed, they're just going to get dirty and wrinkled 2 minutes after I hit the job site so I'm ok with rooting around in the clean laundry basket for one. WHen there's no more? Time to do laundry (and I have enough for 3 weeks). If a woman can't handle my system, then she shouldn't be with me or should learn to accept it. Or weigh it against the many positive things about me and decide whether it is a deal breaker or not.I know the title of the book is supposed to be funny, but " I love you, you're perfect, now change" is very apt. I find that women especially, over look these little things when they're dating but as soon as the wedding bells are finished ringing, the story is completely different. Kind of like when I hear a woman say "I'm tired of picking up his dirty socks for 30 years"...well, no one asked you to in the first place.....	Woman	Gender - General	2/385	0.519

If someone triggers you, BOO FUCKING HOO, move on. "More women need to go into science". Women's rights activists already said that they don't want to go into science because it's generally not female friendly. YOU BE THE FIRST THEN. Be the example other women want to follow. YOU, make that field more female friendly by doing it. Women aren't in it because they don't want to be. It amazes me how I tell a lot of women this stuff and they immediately go hostile towards me. The idea of a memenist may seem like a joke because woman view men as an oppressor type figure when talking about sexism . Being an equalist I'd actually being for equal rights because in today's society the term feminist has become a negative term mostly because women try to take men's rights away giving them the oppressing role. Feminists on the Internet have made people think that all men are the same rather then complex individuals. An example would be when they said women not only have to clean up after men on earth but.. Basically saying that every problem on earth was created by all men, not just political figures, they're also excluding all women from ever making a mistake that would needing cleaning up. Right, this whole list of replies is pathetic, first of all I understand the fact that feminism can come across as one sided &amp; from that has earned itself a bad reputation, however it is a movement for equality &amp; just because YOU don't see feminists trying to make things better for men, doesn't mean they aren't trying to do it. What you're claiming a feminist is is actual a misandrist so please get your terminology right &amp; do not base a movement off of what you see individual feminists do as claiming that you're a feminist doesn't mean you are one if you're sexist, just because someone says they are, and is actually a misandrist, doesn't mean all feminists are, because that person would in fact not be a feminist. Also I can see where you're coming from in terms of radical feminism but if you actually took the time to be a real feminist &amp; try to make things better in terms of equality or at least teach people about it rather than making uneducated comments, maybe we'd have less of an argument here. Oh &amp; not forgetting menimists, I understand that it is a satire, but should be called a satire in relation to radical feminism or something because people who claim to be menimists joke by saying "not all men are like that" &amp; things, claiming that the sexism doesn't exist or we are already equal when we are not which is definitely not feminism turned on it's head because feminism is not about that with women. And although it is meant to be a joke, it is both damaging to the movement in creating negativity towards it, more people thinking it's like menimism but for females, &amp; some people also don't see it as a joke &amp; are using it as an excuse to be sexist which should not be ignored. Last of all I know the word feminism comes across as only helping women by the name &amp; to an extent I agree, as in a way it you be called something to do with equality, however the reason it is called that is because generally women have always been the 'weaker' sex &amp; the movement is to make things better for women in terms of becoming equal with men, NOT surpassing them. Through that idea of equality feminists would also help men though. However I do agree that it isn't the greatest of terms for use especially since people constantly assume they know what it is because they are too lazy to use google, especially since not all women identify as feminine so should therefore be something more gender neutral as females who don't identify as feminine may also need the same help as women who do, not to mention trans &amp; non binary people, so I guess that's something we can agree on. But basically, know the difference between a feminist &amp; misandrist, don't base your opinion of an entire movement on individual members of the movement as they may not be an accurate representation of the movements values, and menimism is a sexist &amp; damaging joke that should not be encouraged. If anyone takes the time to read this which I highly doubt, thank you.	Gender, Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	3/544	0.551

So, now you say Feminists/Equalitarians/Equalists/whatever shouldn't try to solve men's problems aswell? Of course they don't have to solve world hunger problems, because they don't claim to do so.	Gender	Gender - General	1/75	1.333
Of course I don't expect them to ignore the issues with women in 3rd world countries. You're laying words into my mou..keyboard. I have no problem when women (and men) only fight for WOMENs rights, but then they should be called feminists and should not claim not to only take care of women but instad take care of every gender . You yourself said that "Feminist" gets misinterpreted and that "Equalitarian" would be better, but in this specific case, if they call themselves "Equalitarian", they should also («- note: also,aswell, not only) take care of mens problems.Why did you include those last few sentences? Truc Le I just want to say that in 90 of jobs, the wage gap is a myth. You're using that as an argument but in the unlikely event that were both on a ship that's sinking, or we're both in a hostage negotiation, guess who gets to leave first? It's like I'm immune to drowning and bullets now. I'm not saying that they should be paid less, but if you're in a position at work where you get paid less then your male counterpart, you should quit because it's very unlikely that you're getting paid less at most places of work. I want to also "rant" on layla bell's argument. In the beginning I agreed with what you were saying how equalist is a better word for feminist because it can't be misinterpreted as anything else, and yes I understood what they were saying was a joke, but a joke can still be sexist and you could tell that that was in fact how they really thought of men. Later down the line you straight out insulted Ip1kachul when all he was trying to do was interpret what you were saying, and he kind of had a point too. Because he brought up how you said that feminists should only solve women's problems, he also brought light upon your NAACP argument, because equalists claim to be for equality for everyone but NAACP never once claimed to be for everyone. And then later you claimed "actually feminism in my mind is not about gender equality" this is where you really start to abandon your original statements. Yes, there isn't anything wrong with women fighting to help women, but when women start to take away rights of men then they are just proving that they are not equalists they are not feminists either, they're actually pretty sexist. Most men don't complain about how there's a video directed at women, they complain because those video are actually pretty sexist towards men, whether they be joking or not. Your argument has collapsed upon itself. You have to stop contradicting the previous things you've said or your entire argument just becomes invalid.	Gender	Gender - General	1/358	0.279

bbomg02 If we're being honest, then let's be honest about this: yes, men are under pressure to conform to expected norms... BUT, men are also validated and celebrated for kicking those norms to the curb. This shows leadership potential, individuality, strength of character, stuff like that. Being offbeat can be cool. And the norms men are pressured to conform to are different. Men are expected to be assertive, opinionated, and in control, while women are expected to be patient, subtle, and docile. Do you see how one set of norms is more conducive to, I don't know, making all the laws and deciding all the rules, while the other is conducive to complying? There's also the fact that the gender norms women are expected to conform to are generally negative. Girls are supposed to look beautiful at all times, but any girl who pays attention to her appearance is shallow and vain. You can't win! Either you're criticized for not complying, or you're criticized for trying to comply. Men are given a lot more slack- it's like people realize that the Fabio muscles look is mostly impossible to achieve, and no one in their right mind should be forced to. Look at TV- male comedians with their own sitcoms are fat and middle-aged, but their wives are played by stunningly beautiful actresses who are usually a few years younger. A man can still be successful even if his looks aren't his best attribute, but a woman usually stops getting work in show biz after she starts aging visibly. Maggie Gyllenhaal, at 37, is considered too old to play the lover of a 55-year- old actor. And if you're an equal rights activist, you're a feminist. They are the exact same thing. I don't know why men have to call it "equal rights," unless it's to avoid offending other men. Calling it "equal rights" doesn't work- the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) still hasn't passed. The truth is that everyone benefits from feminism- part of feminism means rejecting "toxic masculinity," rejecting the idea that men can't show emotions or have feelings, rejecting the idea that, to be MANLY, they must be tough and shoot things and so forth. The reason men are looked down on for liking more feminine things is because that thing is considered feminine. Nobody's saying men aren't assaulted, what we're saying is that it happens to women more. When was the last time you were scared to walk through your neighborhood because you could be raped or objectified in an uncomfortable way that you don't know how to deal with? Because mine was two hours ago, and I live in and incredibly safe neighborhood. I just don't live in a safe society. Men have generally more physical strength, and are generally more 'visual' than women, and instead of teaching boys that their strength is not something you use to make a woman give you what you want or that your eyes aren't allowed to roam places they haven't been given permission, we spend our time telling girls it's their fault where the boys look and and that boys will be boys. We spend so much more time teaching women to shut up and deal with it than we do teaching men to get some self control and respect for those around them. This video is allowing women to to speak about the things we as a culture enable men to do to us, and to show you guys that the way you have been taught to treat us is not alright on the receiving end. So no, it's not about being quiet about men being assaulted, it's about being loud about the assault of women, and those are not the same thing.	Woman	Gender - General	1/239	0.418

Since you seem mature, and i like to have different viewpoints of what i think do you mind telling me what you think of this real quick?I think that like Newtons third laws states 'Every action has an equal and opposite reaction' so i say, when the females were taught to treat their men in some way and that is called sexism shouldn't men being told to be the provider and to act a certain way also sexist? 19jonty99 I had written a whole essay about this but it got deleted before I posted it, so I will just sum it up quickly.Yes, it's sexist to say that men should act manly and be the providers. But I also understand that being a provider and acting a certain way is something we have ingrained in our DNA, so we tend to think that we should behave like that in modern times.This is not about "who has it worse" or "I suffer more than you". This is about acknowledging that everyone has problems and instead of focusing on downplaying the other side we should be working on making things better for everyone. Anyone who says that "I have it worse" thing cannot see the bigger picture of all of this, be it male or female.Even having said that, sexism is not as rampant as these people want to make you believe. Yeah, there are sexist people, but there will always be, the same way there will always be racists, homophobes, xenophobes, religious fanatics, etc. But the good part about this is that they really don't hold any power anymore, everyone (at least in this side of the planet) is free to decide what to do with their lives, be it male or female. To say that sexism holds you down as an individual is childish, "you hold yourself down" not anyone else, it's up to you to decide to listen to those people. For example, I could blame my inability to get a higher paying job on racism , being that I'm mexican, but I don't, because I know that it's because of me, not other people.I went on a bit of a rant here, I just don't like people blowing out of proportion their problems, using sexism as an excuse or trying to make their problems to be more important than those of other people. 19jonty99 just a quick thought, i think those that feel oppressed tend to make more excuses than exact any feasible change. Both women and men have it bad but in different ways but even then not always. The bread winner whether male or female may have it harder trying to provide for their family, especially on a fixed income. This isnt a gender issue, just life or a social one. A woman doesn't have it harder in that situation because she's a woman or a man doesnt because he is a man. Society needs to stop comparing so much. There are issues that are diff that need addressing in diff ways.If we only focus on who had what harder, then we will come to a stalemate and nothing will be accomplished for anyone. Its that whole, too many chiefs and not enough indians, or too many indians acting as chief, either way, the connection between men and women is abysmal due to modern day feminism. If all men go MGTOW, and the radical feminists won't shut up either, we're doomed. We have to work together. We've become an elitist culture on all fronts. Sorry for being preachy, but that's a loaded question with no clear answer as neither opposing viewpoint is willing to set their own rhetoric aside and focus on issues that need adjustment on both side. michael cochrane hahaha. South park did a spoof of those beer commercials. Some are just ridiculous, however some of the behavior in those ads, add up. Lmao.I question every day my decision to pursue writing professionally, been just pennies away from homeless, but finishing that first novel was the best thing ever. Even if I have absolutely nothing , that achievement is golden to me! We must look at ourselves and change from within. You dont like sexism , then don't be sexist. Fun fact to know is that even if it was a woman who make advertisement, ads will always be a reflect of society because they must make you buy things. I mean by "you", the most massive part of people.So if sexy women boost the sales, there will be sexy women in most part of advertisements.If tommorow, or the next year, spiders boost sales, there will be spiders everywhere. That's it.This is actually why there is more and more sexy men in ads, little naughty girls and gays. ;)	Woman	Gender - General	1/92	1.087
I just saw a commercial where shirtless construction men were smashing things with sledgehammers. Think it was advertising home decoration or something. Why would I get mad at an advert like that? Why do women get mad if there are sexy women in ads? Although I don't even see much sexy women in ads, only those cloth commercials targeted at women besides the models are way too skinny they look like aliens :/	Skinny	Physical Identity - Physical Features	1/73	1.37

HeyItsHannah Yeah. I mean, maybe ancient Greece or Japan is cool and all, but there are many reason for me to not go back in time anyway, sanitation, internet, and anime aside. I'm a black girl. Being a woman , I'm looked down upon, and being black I'm viewed as unequal.I might consider Greece, at least they were nicer to their slaves and it was beautiful there. Or Rome, but that would still kind of suck. China and Japan hated foreigners especially back then. India maybe? Nah, that caste system sucked. I'm sure many other parts of Asia wasn't too foreign/ black -friendly either. South America did do the slave trade. So did some parts of Europe. Africa would be okay I guess. HeyItsHannah I'm actually a black woman so I feel like the 1970's would be a great place in time to be. Black people seemed to have more fun in that decade. HeyItsHannah It's a misconception that women had it worse than men during most of history. Of course, if you just pick some aspects of how society worked, you'll find that women had it worse. But if you pick others, you'd find the contrary. When the Titanic sank, men stayed on the boat so that women and children would live. That definitely is NOT what oppressors would do to someone they do not consider at least as valuable as themselves, if not more.There have been extremely misogynistic societies, notably part of the ancient greeks, where men dreamed of reproduction without the need of women. Well at least part of it. But ancient minoan culture had women treated pretty much as equals from what we know.In general though the trend was to give different rights to men or women, but most importantly, those differences were nothing compared to social classes. Though even between social classes the treatment of women were different.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/161	0.621

Why aren't feminists (I don't mean all feminists) blaming or outraged at the woman who do sexual photo shoots instead of blaming how the media portrays them? And things have changed at least the ads aren't saying to beat your woman . You know things could be worse in america like woman could be being killed for trying to educate themselves or work outside of the home. Ahhh 1st world feminist problems. Of course the ads aren't all good but they aren't horrible. Appreciate the time and place you're living in.	Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	4/90	4.444
you have a good point. it isnt just men, it's also the women that participate in the sexism .	Sexism	Gender - General	1/18	5.556
Women are allowed to be sexual and therefore do these photo shoots out of their own free will. That is part of feminism. I think part of the issue is that women are being portrayed as sexual in the same situations as men, but sexually. If people are oppressed in any way possible, they shouldn't just "appreciate" the fact that things aren't any worse. Equality should be a very basic right of any human being, not something you have to fight for just to end up settling.	Sexual	Gender - General	2/87	2.299

Aliquid No, just, no. Your way of thinking is backwards. Have you ever considered that that's not the problem?? It's not like women are the people making up the ads and saying that they want to sexualize themselves. Ads are made in this order: the media decides to make an ad in which a women is sexualized, then the ad agency hires the actors. The actor doesn't get to decide how they will be portrayed in the ad. People that need jobs will take them and even if one woman refuses to be sexualized for an ad there will probably be another one who needs the money. The root of the problem is that the way society is now, ads sexualizing women are okay and are even considered effective in selling products and that's not right; women posing for sexual photoshoots are just byproducts of that. Trying to stop the sexualization of women by attacking the women that poses for those kinds of ads is like trying to plug up a hose with a tissue.	Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	2/175	1.143
