This infantallization begins in the home, kids are not thought critical thinking, most are over-indulged and over protected. My friend's 19yo daughter, in her first year of college, 'does not know' how to take a bus/subway, cannot make a doctor's appt and get there...this is the result of smother parenting that results in delayed adult behavior/thinking. The secondary gain for the 'smother' parent is it ensures they will always be needed, they ensure their children will make zero decisions without consulting them on some level for approval. A parents role is to love, nurture and PREPARE.	Zero	Age - Youngsters	1/96	1.042

Much of what Gottschalk identifies as cultural infantilization comes down to the shift Gilles Deleuze describes as that from 'disciplinary' societies based on enclosed spaces with their more oblique disciplinary and punitive structures, to the so-called 'societies of control'. These are founded on open, interconnected systems and technologies that appear 'open' and to provide individuals greater freedom, e.g. in the form of highways or pocket-sized internet terminals, while actually multiplying power's means of control. You can see this in the traditional right-wing understanding of 'economic freedom' as synonymous with deregulation of labour laws, but also in its very specific conception of 'freedom of speech' as liberated from the cruel and arbitrary limitations imposed by experts and expert knowledge. It has to be said, the right has been very effective in selling this right to talk out your ass, especially when done by corporate-sponsored politicians, as a source of civil empowerment. And of course, Silicon Valley libertarian tech bros dream of nothing else but circumventing 'gatekeepers' and putting traditional news media out of business. So now we have a Twitter president who enjoys a degree of molecular control over his followers that past cult leaders wouldn't have dared dream of.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/199	0.503

An example is the government making flavored ejuice illegal, allegedly to protect children, when it's used by adults who WANT the flavors. Also, legalization of cannabis, also allegedly to protect children, when adults are the ones using it. In both cases, the government is protecting industries that are provably harmful (alcohol and tobacco), while denying adults the rights to use those substances, even though they are provably safer. Perhaps their efforts would be more appropriately aimed at people selling those substances to children. I'm 66 years old, and if I want to smoke a joint in my own home, NO ONE should have the right to tell me I can't.	Old, alcohol	Age - Over 65s, Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol	2/110	1.818

Amazon means you no longer have to shop; food gets delivered to your door means you don't have to cook; Google gives you instant answers to everything, meaning you don't have to go to libraries or collect books; smart phones mean you don't have to engage in real conversations etc etc. Basically we are becoming more and more spoiled by technologyThe pampered existence that once could only be accessed by aristocrats, is now accessible to more and more people. Thus the strange fetishes and perversions of aristocrats more and more pervade down the social scale. Cross dressing, alter egos, sadomasochism were once the preserve of the rich and powerful, but now as we become more and more beholden to our 'service providers' we too are suffering the same weird degeneracies. The same need to regress into infantilism.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/138	0.725
I feel like in some ways safe spaces are a trap specifically on college/uni campuses. In the rest of the world however, I think queer cafes would be a good idea simply because of community and consistent attacks on trans people in public spaces and the police are not properly protecting minorities (or are deliberately targeting them in some instances). Your college/uni already has security for physical attacks/hate speech so there is no need for a 'safe place' in terms of being able to run away from bigots. No. Be present. Insult them with your presence because they are specifically the types of people who need to know you are there whether they like it or not, you won't be silent, and your rights will be protected. THEY NEED TO KNOW THEY CANT SCARE PEOPLE INTO HIDING BC OF THEIR BIGOTTED IDEAS.We need to fight the manufacturing of consent in the media, government and corporations before fascism is allowed to completely take hold of it all. nobody else finds this terminology grossly condescending?as a sociologist, what you want are operationalisable definitions that can be measured with some degree of common agreement – so as to avoid personal biases. calling certain behaviours or outcomes "infantile" barely qualifies as any sort of definition, much less unbiased. now, i'm sure the actual papers published would touch on these methodological issues more; but it strikes me that the key term itself seems controversial or deliberately provocative.that said, some of the examples he gave don't exactly qualify as "infantile" either. being "hooked" to devices is not necessarily being "self-absorbed", and to me continues this condescending trend of so-called "adults" just admonishing the millennial culture with little or no understanding. sure, some of the worst users of smartphones could probably be diagnosed as addicted by a psychiatrist; but that doesn't mean being heavily reliant on technology is infantile. have you seen housewives who spend hours on the telephone? do we call that infantile? what about people who stopped reading once the radio became a thing? or the people who stopped listening to storytellers once the printed press was a thing? the smartphone is a tool, and it really depends on how the user chooses to use it. are some of the more narcissistic users getting more selfish using it? maybe. does that mean an entire generation is being infantilized? where is the leap in logic here?it is amusing that david is the one who gave the most compelling example of infantilization: safe spaces in higher education. when infantilization is "defined" as artificially lowering or restricting the content in order to suit/impose lower intellectual activity, that is a definition that can actually be measured. that said, safe spaces also has to do with the politicisation of academia, where students facing disenfranchisement and in a moral panic about far-right elements surfacing in their campus chose to react with some level of activism, albeit in an ill-advised form. student activism is a great way to self-actualise, if you ask me – the real issue is why aren't their seniors and the college admin giving them better advice? why are deans ingratiating the students' worst impulses in demanding censorship? why not sit them down and talk it out?in the end, academic points are difficult to make in a 15min interview. maybe we should be doing a book club and reading the author's book too.	Common, Nobody	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	2/402	0.498

Good evening Z'Q. That's an interesting take with your response. I look forward to the day when the entire Human Race can just get along (for a change). i don't think it's "infantilization", the need to be tested, measured and assessed is all about being the slaves that we ultimately are in this society. the infotainment thing has mostly to do with how media capitalized on humans' preference for simple and emotionally stimulating rather than intellectually demanding content. the common denominator is really just capitalism. it needs to control the worker-slaves during work and distract them while not at work while at the same time creating a huge commodity market in pure entertainment. Simon, I think you miss the point of why the things (news etc) you've mentioned are being done to us. In my opinion, it is a form of mind manipulation in order to dumb us down and keep us in the dark on important subject matter. This is not being done by accident. Barnaby Joe Wigglesabit Why are you so upset? I thought it was fine to make unsubstantiated blanket assumptions.Grown men collect "children's toys" they bought for themselves. How do they buy them if those men are destroyed? Or is the destruction simply buying toys? If so that's a weird kind of destruction.Star Wars fans are among these collectors. Why Star Wars, and not anything else? What's acceptable to be a fan of? Are we supposed to just sit around being bored?You don't remember collectors like that. Who gives a shit if you don't remember? Sorry. Data is not the plural of anecdote. And even if you didn't experience something I didn't experience weird people on the internet that judged men for collecting toys, judge the usage of cameras to recording movies, and equivocate surveillance with making movies which results in consumerism.Cameras are destroying humanity? Statistically non-war violence is lower than it's ever been for the last couple decades. War is happening less since the second world war. Diseases are being conquered left, and right. Life extension is becoming a viable study. There are more, and more charities being created every year. Whence cometh the destruction?Your original comment: "There's a lot of grown men these days who fill their homes with childrens toys they bought for themselves, like Star Wars fans. Sherlock BONES Yeah. I personally do get that a few people might take it too far to obsession levels which in some circumstances can get in the way of life. But that's not specific to comics, or toys. And it's not even an attribute of children. I think if it's not getting in the way of life a person can have whatever hobby they want. Barnaby Joe Wigglesabit Mom says so [LINK] > "yet you have made great efforts to try to argue that i was wrong to say "Grown men who buy toys" when that was never what i said. I said "grown men these days who fill their homes with childrens toys they bought for themselves"."I'm arguing that we do not know the mental disposition of collectors. A collector of something (perhaps toys) could be more mentally stable than you, or me. Emphasis should be on "me" if your paranoia arises again.What nuance in your quoted phrase "grown men these days who fill their homes with childrens toys they bought for themselves" demonstrates the mental disposition of those men. Is it "bought for themselves" because from what I understand collectors do mostly buy what they collect for themselves. So if that's your point I don't see the demonstration.I'm reminded of the outrage over S&M practitioners, and the armchair mental health evaluations that non-professionals do on the mental disposition of people who do S&M. There was a study not so long ago evaluating the mental disposition of S&M practitioners. In the study it was found that those who participate in S&M had on average a healthier mental stability than non-S&M practitioners. The occurrence of mental illness was much lower in S&M practitioners. For instance there was less depression in that group compared to non-S&M people. This contradicts the normative view of S&M that practitioners of S&M are mentally unstable.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	7/248	2.823

Barnaby Joe Wigglesabit You said: "I'm sure women prefer a man-child as a husband than a wife-beater but wouldn't it be great if women could have men for husbands?"That's one of a variety of reasons.> "I have never said or implied that there is anything wrong with the mental disposition of grown men who buy childrens toys."Is "man-child" not a statement about mental disposition? What if they were a man-child that didn't collect toys? What if a wife-beater is a man-child?> "I'm a masochist although i have never practised it and i suffer from paranoid schizophrenia and depression so i don't know where you're getting this bullshit about S&M from but it is exactly that, a bullshit study."It's an average of a sample. As a matter of omission the study didn't say all non-S&M people are 100 insane, or that S&M will save the word either. It's just meant to show there's no statistical correlation between mental illness, and S&M practitioners.> "I hope you're not posting those links to youtube videos for me to watch because i'm not watching them."The links are for everybody. They're also easy access for me. Many people isolate themselves from information. It's simply what happens. In my entire career of collegiate education, not once did I see the invocation of safe-space, trigger-warning installments anywhere, on any campus. Albeit, I was an older student and already traveled and well ingratiated in the "adult world" of complainers and whiners, and had a strictly feminist education based on Science and critical thinking. I find the people who often complained the most were the people who often told us to "grow up," to dismiss our concerns we wanted to explore in a space that encourages adult discourse. Where I practice safe space and trigger warnings in the context of mental health is in my women's group where these things are absolutely necessary for people with PTSD from rape trauma, etc. There isn't any initializing about needing a warning about something that could really trigger a flashback from PTSD. I think being adult is knowing what works for you and what doesn't, knowing your limitations, and being an adult to say one needs safe space from an abusive or suffocating situation. Ancient Greek, Ancient Rome, and Europe in the middle ages filled themselves with childishness of various entertainment to the point of harm too, and the aristocracies/rulers and theocracies used it to control the masses... theater and track games, chariot races and gladiator fights, jousting, fencing, sword, and archery matches. Today we include the ball sports, concerts, movies, and video games. When entertainment becomes too extreme holding too much attention and taking more time than other things in life happiness and means of fulfillment we're in trouble. My experience thus far in my mid 30's, having traveled on business around the US including several southern states, western states, mid-west, and eastern states as well as abroad in Europe... people in general are dumb. We're not born with brilliance in general. Some are naturally curious... but most just think they are, but aren't. So in short, people are inherently stupid, and never go beyond trying to fill their stupidity with non-stupid.... instead often they do the opposite... digging that hole of stupidity deeper instead. Just look at some of the woowoo youtube channels and flat or young earth or other such channels. Ideas that evidence already exists, and methods to examine evidence that exist that they apparently haven't the time. i wouldn't mind some spying if it is done the right way, or some less freedoms. I wouldn't mind never owning a gun if the odds are better me not getting shot by a random shooter that wants to kill 11 people in a few seconds. Now that doesn't mean i wouldn't understand that i might be shot by a drug crime but that would be a whole less likely since i have nothing to do with drugs. The same with spying. I do not want to be blown up by an extremist as long as the FBI or CIA are looking at people and website that is going to build a bomb. Now saying that doesn't mean they should spy on everyone. You cast a huge net and you miss everyone. So many shooters have been extreme that the FBI or CIA should've their eye on. Yet they didn't and the ones they did have their eye on. They were still able to kill a lot of people.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/169	0.592

Yuki TwirlyWe don't just produce enough, we produce 40 above demand that's simply thrown away to retain prices at a profitable level despite using outdated technology. For example in farming a total replacement with hydroponics would result in a 400 rise in productivity above the current rate while also eliminating the need for some massively complex and expensive machinery, pesticides and would lower the transport costs as you can build hydroponic farms right next to population centers.Same goes with housing, Technology(planned obselescense and waste of resources to deliberately make cheaper inferior versions of the tech, etc.), services (bullshit jobs), etc.Eliminating the threat of poverty, providing healthcare to all and giving people enough with a single job so that they can pursue self actualization would eradicate a lot of sources of misery while also make a far greater amount of the population happy.Our wealth distribution is not based on productivity, wages have stagnated while productivity skyrocketed in the digital age. Half of the planet's resources are in the hands of a literal handful of poeple, them being that productive is a mathematical impossibility. This is no bug but a feature of capitlaism. On top of that it's outright insane to not consider a full time job enough for a decent life at our current level of advancement/abundance.Don't get me wrong, you can still have an incentive system built in a post-scarcity economy, however you don't need to tie it into one's living standard when there is no scarcity to balance. That's a barbaric if not outright primitive practice.If anything I'd propose a system of networked shared high living standards paired with a system where excellence in work is the pre-requisite to be eligible to become a politician.That way you no longer have a barbaric system, you have incentives in place, and you have a meritocracy through wich you ensure that all of your politicians are competent and driven enough to be worthy of having their name on the ballot.There's also the thing that by 2030 38 of jobs will be gone and 60-80 by 2050 meaning that a supermajority would have to be considered as "failures" and suffer under capitlaism despite an overabundance.It's like having replicator technology from star trek but only allowing those who own the intellectual property to have enough money to use them.And if we are to add in the upcoming tech in genetic and cybernetic augmentation then we're entering a massive dystopian shithole of a mess if we keep going this way.	Age	Age - General	1/425	0.235

Yuki Twirly I assume with good reason, and I don't put stock in Einstein's quote because of his authority as a physicist. Call me names if you like, you don't hold some moral high ground, having caricatured the people you disagree with so idiotically. Pretty reasonable assumption that you haven't read any of the criticisms of capitalism and have no substantial argument to back up your "capitalism isn't the problem" because you're not even familiar with the debate. In fact, your next post there confirms it. You actually think the "some people are more productive" argument is a good one. Also, if men are corrupt then why favor an economic system that incentivizes personal gain, and sociopathic behavior, and the accumulation of resources in the hands of the few and advantaged. You're honestly going say you're not a conservative? Then what do you think you are? A liberal social democrat that just happens to think regulation or criticism of capitalism is wanting a daddy-state? An-cap lunatic? Umer Ali my reasoning is because we want anonymity to able to be childish, arrogant, mean, sexist, racist , hostile, creepy, weird , misinforming in the cyber world. I mean aside from obviously not sharing personal information like social security numbers, credit card numbers, and home addresses, why do we really need online privacy? This is the comment to which leonxl should have typed, "EXACTLY!" I am sure that leonx and Ottiti Spiti are perfectly nice and intelligent people, but they are way off on this one. One should not have to explain to other adults why there is, or simply THAT there is, such a thing as private information and that there are such things as personal experiences that aren't meant for public consumption. I apologize for profiling here, but if those two are anything other than males under the age of 30 (possibly under 25), I'll pass out. Please pardon me, Ottiti Spiti and leonx. AnimusFluxI find the dumbing down to be very noticable. To see how I as a moderately intelligent and really not very well-educated person am often too smart and/or knowledgeable even for things that aren't produced or otherwise made for everybody (including unintelligent and very poorly educated people), but especially for people who actively seek out information on very specific, and in theory rather complex topics. I am seriously glad I don't have a college master's degree (that I actually deserved) and an I.Q. of 125 or more. I think I'd go nuts.Edit: I replaced a wrong word. Also I would like to add that I didn't mean that I would have deserved a college master's degree. But that I am glad that I don't have one and am smart enough to get one. I know people with college masters who are quite dumb when it comes to applying the knowledge (they once proved they had in their final exams) in practice. And those people don't suffer because of any dumbing down. Some of them seem to even need it.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/181	0.552

I think it can be natural to think of your mate as a baby... just as we say to our significant other "baby" or feed each other. It's instinct among mammals and birds to demonstrate their parental instincts. It can turn people on to have a pregnant belly for instance. What becomes harmful is if you really think of the woman as a child. Then you're in some weird zone.Less harmful, but just disturbing if you like your mate to suck on a pacifier and/or wear diapers... no a friend that had someone ask he could wear a diaper and suck on pacifier.... I think that's taking the parental demonstration instinct too far.	Weird, Woman	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/114	1.754

Result analysis:

- Taking into account the words that were detected, we can reach the conclusion these comments are associated with : : Age - General;Age - Over 65s;Age - Youngsters;Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments;Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol;Sexual Identity - General;Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality;Social Class - Working class;Ethnicity - General;Ethnicity - Black;Nationality - General;Gender - General;Physical Identity - Physical Features;Religious Identity - Muslim;Gender - Female sexuality;Nationality - Chinese; Ideological and Political Identity - General;
- The percentage of hate speech related words is 0.5075.
- Considering that the variable Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments has the most occurrences in the post, we can interpret that this is the predominant hate speech.
- Overall there were 115/531 occurrences of hate speech related comments.
