None of the above ITS CALLED FEMALE ENTITLEMENT.. They are never wrong and its always someone else’s fault and they reevaluate the victim!! And then her natural female pettiness comes out because she did this out of spite., she’s the kind of woman who would lie about rape of violence .. I have a daughter haha haha yeah that’s such a good point NOT!!! GROW UP SERENA , you just lost a fan!! WE SEE YOU NOW SERENA AND WE ARE NOT IMPRESSED	Woman	Gender - General	1/83	1.205

I salute America Uncovered for providing a reasonably straightforward brief of the 2018 Open controversy. Admittedly, Serena's heated emotions were on full display, but let's examine a small measure of her 20 year career that could shed some light, but not necessarily excuse such passion. The 2001 Indian Wells incident where a then 20-year old rising star endured behavior so unkind she boycotted the event for over a decade. Or perhaps the 2004 U.S. Open tournament quarterfinal loss against J. Capriati which gathered more attention for erroneous calls against her which existing technology easily confirmed were wrong, not to mention the unfounded accusations of match fixing given voice by names within the game such as John McEnroe or fellow player Elena Dementieva. Suffice to say, Serena is no stranger to unjust treatment by officials, competitors, or fans on random occasion. Regarding double standards, she raised a valid point. During the 2019 U.S. Open, Russian player D. Medvedev covertly offered a vulgar gesture to the crowd, rudely snatched a towel from a ballperson, openly insulted an umpire, and contemptuously tossed his racket toward center court. He was fined a whopping total of $9,000.00, versus Serena's $17,000.00 in 2018. The outburst served as no more than a temporary distraction and to state it ruined Osaka's moment is completely arbitrary. Two unequivocal points to bear in mind: (1) Osaka raised the 2019 U.S.Open Championship trophy over her head, not her opponent. (2) A winner's check of $3.8M bore her name and no other. As added rationale, during post-match activities Serena supported Naomi during her moment of triumph in front of a largely pro-Serena crowd, imploring the crowd to cease booing the young champion. Because she's a woman ...So, her argument is because the tournament officials sided with the male judge, they are inherently sexist? I don't blame her for being upset over taking a coaching penalty. Maybe she should be upset with her coach? Not a tennis fan, but I'm guessing she could still have won the match had she not received the additional two penalties? Serena's the one, though, who refused to accept accountability for her actions and instead pulled the sexism card to justify herself. Also, it's indeed not as if other players haven't duked it out with umpires but she handled it in a bizarrely un-smart way. I say bizarre because she's experienced enough to know about tennis' step wise escalation of code violation. She got a code violation each for receiving coaching, then smashing the racquet and finally the last argument where she called the umpire a thief. Third code violation earns a game penalty. This was a bit like the Hingis Graf FO 99 final where Hingis just completely lost her mind and it was nobody else's fault that she did.	Nobody, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/120	1.667

Sexism or sore loser? Simply put she makes like she's so important that she's running the tournament and umpires are beneath her. It's arrogance really. Venus has much better composure. Serena has done this more than once. Even threatened linesmen. She's also dull of hearing it seems. The ref told her it was a coaching violation...what? The self-delusion really showed when she talked to the ref and said she would never cheat...problem fixed...no code violation right? Well, in her self-important mind it was solved. Then the racquet smash...now she's really ticked. Yes, the violation stood...no your argument didn't make any difference. What? My self-convincing speech didn't work. Point deducted. Then after ranting she says "don't talk to me"...he doesn't...but no she's got to win this argument...with a ref...of course you're more important than the ref...right? Wrong. So after much verbal abuse...he get's pissed off...game deduction...you can't be serious...it's not fair...it's not fair. The whole thing reeks of a self-absorbed, self-important attitude. Lesson taught...lesson learned. Osaka would have won anyway.Yes, she's been the greatest female tennis player in history...and no...you don't run the tournament or tell refs what to do. I really love my tennis but I found it so offensive to see the poor loser & ugly behaviour by Serena Williams. Serena was clearly at fault on all three code violation counts. I know it, Serena knows it, you know it & the tennis world knows it. (sadly, the USA crowd & USA tennis officials disagree by supporting Serena) Serena already has a track record for throwing her tantrums when she is losing & still nothing has been done to stop her. The umpire's job is to enforce the rules. That is his job. Serena seems to think that she is bigger than tennis itself when she behaves like that. I give credit to the umpire Carlos Ramos for remaining calm after a barrage of insults & accusations. Serena certainly owes him an apology. I admire the young Naomi Osaka for remaining composed throughout this ordeal. She was the true champion on the day. Serena can learn a lot from Naomi.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/162	0.617

I do think that men are allowed to get away with far more on the courts than women do. That's where the sexism comes in. It's just sad that this all overshadowed Naomis win. Naomi completely thrashed Serena in the first set and in my opinion would have won the match even if Serena hadn't lost a game. I believe that Serena truly believed she didn't deserve the coaching penalty as she didn't see the hand gestures, but after that needed to let it go instead of continuing to bring it up several times after. She absolutely deserved the point penalty for breaking her racket. However, calling the umpire a thief doesn't merriit a warning and definitely doesn't merriit a game penalty. If a man can't handle getting called a thief by a woman he needs to grow a pair lol. if he really was insulted by being called a thief and a liar he should have overuled and just given another point penalty rather than a game penalty as it was a final and to close to the end of the match. I completely agree with Serena that men say much ruder things with worse infliction and don't even receive warnings let alone penalties. have you seen The things Nick Kyrgios comes out with? romonabruno I don't think it's about that it's more like she ruined a woman's achievement by lashing out, she insulted and berated a referee(I know that many people do it but with this specific ref he follows the rules closely and fiercely so know the boundaries of who you insult), slamming your racket which she's done a few times so she knows what could happen if she did it again, and ultimately she made it about gender . romonabruno I agree with you for the most part in fact I hold her passion about the sport in high esteem and your right I can't live up to the standards, but that's fucking okay cause I'm a human and she's a human too; however, I still believe in striving for those standards so when I stumble and fall I try my damned best to admit to myself and the people around me that I slipped up. And I guess the one thing I feel is missing not just from Serena here, but plenty of people who have achieved greatness, is there is no shred of humility to admit that maybe there was an over reaction and that maybe jumping straight to sexism was a bit much, but as far as I know there has never been anything of that sort to come from this. Being able to accept and admit your mistakes is a key to continuing progress as an athlete but even more so as a human. I'm sure at some point in her career she had that and I guess I could probably cut her some slack because I have no idea what it is like to be rich and famous and even more than that to be the absolute best. So I can see how that might be a big factor in the ego and outburst, but I still really hate to see when a prominent and inspiring figure misses a great chance to set an example for the people that admire them by showing some incredibly reputable human traits like humility and redemption. Admitting mistakes has fallen out of fashion and that leads to stagnation and I think it plays a big role in society as a whole. Sorry it's a rant I have a bit of ADHD so when I get rambling it keeps coming doesn't really help I study psychology with a bit of philosophy on top...	Sexism	Gender - General	1/324	0.309

She was being beaten by Naomi playing her own game. It was close and Serena wasn't sealing the deal as handily as she would have liked. Naomi was matching her. It was too hot in the kitchen for too long lol.If Serena didn't win this tournament she would have to start alllllllll oovvvveerrrr again at the Australian and time is not her friend. She got age , motivation, motherhood, an off season to manage and all these new fearless, strong, big ball hitting whippersnappers who are not intimidated and have far less to lose and let's not forget the regular cast of spoilers too.She needs two more to pass Margaret. She was feeling it and maybe all of the above mentioned and all it took was that call by the umpire to light the whole thing on fire . Btw I don't think she was cheating with her coach. Don't know why he said what he said. It's odd and irresponsible right!?Sleeping with one eye open here in case she's coming for me. Lol just kidding.Honestly, when you think of the immensity of the pressure she's under and how she has to play it out in front of the whole world..the money, the people, the organizations, the family, the sponsors, the coaches, the media, the popularity of the game, equal rights, women's rights, representin', the legacy, setting a record that we will probably not see broken in our lifetime or the one after ours plus all the other things we don't know about and probably never will etc etc etc! you/we will never experience at that level. We can only imagine what it's like. We can't judge what happened as if we know everything. In the long run everything will be ok.	Age	Age - General	1/340	0.294

C'mon people. She screamed at Ramos: 1. You owe me an apology (an accusation that he deliberately wronged her). Ramos did nothing. 2. I've never cheated. You owe me an apology (a second accusation). Ramos did nothing. 3. You owe me an apology. You'll never ever ever be on another court of mine as long as you live. (A threat to Ramos's career & livelihood and a claim that she has more power with officials in the game, than he does.) Ramos did nothing. 4. You are a liar. (A direct libel towards Ramos and in clear breach of the player's code). Ramos did nothing. 5. You stole a point from me. (A direct accusation of the umpire's dishonesty.) Ramos hesitated. 6. You're a thief too. (A direct libel towards Ramos). He STILL hesitated. And then awarded the penalty.How much abuse is an umpire supposed to take without being speciously accused of sexism? Ramos showed amazing restraint probably BECAUSE Serena is a woman. If a male player had behaved like this, Ramos surely would have called a code violation long before.Another telling moment is when she breaks her racquet. She flinches in case the racquet bounces back and hits her. This shows (a) she is not out of control, she is aware of the consequences of what she is doing, even in the minutia, and (b) she has done this many times before and instinctively knows what happens. This is a clear giveaway of her intentions and her state of mind. It appears every bit as if she is deliberately stalling, trying to interrupt her opponent's concentration and to intimidate the umpire or at least challenge the umpire's authority by "double-daring" him to award a code violation.She's losing. She knows it. Like all great champions she has a healthy dislike of losing. SparksFly This is old news now but Serena Williams went on a tirade about an umpire in a match. She told her fans to go after the guy and said he was sexist. The only backing she had for this was that he ruled against her in the game in favor of the other woman . When people reviewed the footage it basically showed that she had been let off multiple times for unsportsmanlike behavior and had just finally been reprimanded. Serena has been complaining about the empire's cheating in her but the media has been telling a wrong story racism is big on tennis sport and I have been watching many Serena Williams matches the official used to cheat on her and she never complain about it and just because Serena is about to brake a very important record that is why the officials is against her which is wrong .she has been fighting against racist crowd and racist officials and the opposer	Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - General	3/83	3.614
You saw her antecedents, the Us Open semifinals in 2009 against Kim Clijsters when she threatened to kill a chair umpire. If a male tennis a player whoever is he decides to spit at an umpire, that doesn't not mean Serena is able to falsy accuse an umpire of sexism just because "she's a mother and men do worse". That for me is sexist, Serena is sexist and she believes because she's the strongest FEMALE tennis player that I have seen, she can do whatever she wants to do.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/89	1.124
Q. Did serena broke a rule?A. Yes she did.Q. Was she penalised for that? A. Yes she was. Sexism or racism has nothing to do with this matter, these were just a card pulled by a looser to justify her behaviorI saw the match and serena was playing bad she was out of touch she committed many unforced errors in 1st set & osaka played really well to capitalise on those errors and won the 1st set.I think serena knew that osaka was playing well and she cant beat her & that's where her focus shifted from the match & then all this drama happens	Nothing, Racism, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/109	2.752

If it was a cartoon about any other race it was okay but whenever there's something with a black person all this shit comes out..... Even if there's nothing to do with race they'll make that way and then the flavor of sexism Then some people are even saying that she's one of the greatest tennis players is all time n ol n ol.....Does it mean there's a special preference ?? Lemme give you an example.....Michael Schumacher overtook his team mate on the finish line in Austria and he was already the most successful racing driver of all time..... Still his team got penalised.....in 1997 he closed on the last race with this rival Jack Villeneuve..... He was disqualified from the championship..... In Monaco he did similar thing in qualifying..... He was sent to the back of the grid..... Same goes for Valentino Rossi..... In 2015 he crashed into Marc Marquez which made the other guy go on the ground..... What Happened ?? Rossi was sent to the back of the grid in the next race knowing that it was the final race and if he was sent to the back there was no chance of him winning his tenth title but still he was penalized.So keeping all this, the bigger personality you are the harder is and should be the punishment..... Or was it lose than get caught cheating. Her coach admitted cheating. She SAW the gesture as she said "Thumb"s up!" If she was not looking then how does she know what he did? She LIED and got caught lying and CHEATING. She described the signal...therefore BOTH are guilty. The first penalty did ZERO as far as score is concerned. Just a warning. Some of the men kick and hit the umpires which starts a few to bleed. JMO the men are doing much more out of control behavior than woman . But we should keep in mind that male or female , they are all only human . For them to play at this level , the pressure is high. I'm a fan of tennis and love to see great players play . This sport should sometimes let the players show some emotions because they are not robots. JMO if you hate a player , you will never see anything positive in them. If you pay attention to Naomi Osaka , she apologizes to ever player that she beats. After all this Naomi said she still respects and loves Serena Williams , I think everyone should let this go. When Serena per Naomi own words told her she was proud of her , Naomi said it meant a lot to her . So Naomi and Serena do not hate each other . This is not the first nor last time a player will show emotions. I'm not looking for them to be machines . Most of them are proven winners and should be respected for their hard work. Everyone gets angry at times about perceived unfairness and injustice. The problem is that it's not as big a deal when a man blows his top as when a woman does. There is an expectation that still exists, especially upon very powerful women, to always maintain control and never show any emotion AT ALL. Whether it's a tear (oh, she won't be able to handle the responsibility) or a shout (she's out of control and a poor loser). Think back for a moment about how Hillary Clinton over modulated her emotions, almost appearing to be too stoic and impersonal at times (was she trying too hard?) and compare her demeanor to Donald Trump during the 2016 Presidential campaign...it just shows you that a woman will always be judged more severely than a man when it comes to portraying herself as powerful and in control. She is taking attention away from her ridiculous behavior by putting the focus on sexism. She should first explain her foolish behavior. You dont get out of a punishment by pointing to someone else who got away with it and wanting to also get away with it. Thats how little kids argue. 'My brother does that all the time and you never punish him'. She knows she made a huge mistake. She should have kept her mouth shut during the match and brought up her complaints afterwards. And she knows it. But she is still trying to win the argument the wrong way. The more she blabbers on, the more she is losing respect. She should be asked the right questions like what she thinks of her behavior and if it merited punishment and not let her compare it to other players who got away with anything. If other similar situations had different outcomes is besides the point of whether or not she deserved what she got, according to the rules, THE RULES! And serena is great at coming back from being behind in a match. She could have won, had she just controlled herself. Then she would have looked like a champion instead of a big baby. Sorry to say that because she is such a great player. I hope her behavior is not provoked by drugs. I dont mean recreational drugs. I mean performance enhancing ones. She should have been tested after that long long outburst. I understand outbursts but not like that where she knew she should have stopped long before, but couldn't, maybe due to having consumed something. The communication with her coach was obvious and blatant. Take the point penalty and move on. That's the question, I saw Serena play many matches before and she was all fine, not as emotional or careless like this except we came across to same scenario before against Kim Clijsters which was a new mother back then and the woman casually won US Open. Gotta love her. :DThere is no excuse for what Serena did or what she said about all sexism , racism , etc. She just ruined Naomi's first grand slam celebration which meant a lot to her and her country as well.Never cared much about Serena before, her gameplay doesn't give me any joy but never had any type of emotion against her till now since I didn't care about her games but now I just don't like her at all.Hope never gets to any other finals so I won't have to watch her, hope no one has to watch her. The analysis ist mostly fair, but it fails to point out clearly why Serena was docked a game after continuing to hassle the umpire: he docked a game solely because calling him a liar and a thief was her THIRD code violation during the match after the illegal coaching and her subsequent raquet breaking. If it would've been her first or second violation, he wouldn't have docked a whole game. Serena is right: men have indeed called umpires far worse many times and haven't been docked a whole game - but this was simply because they hadn't accumulated three code violations, after they had insulted the umpire. They knew when to shut up. Serena didn't. That's all. No sexism at all triggered this unfortunate escalation. When Andy Roddick said on Twitter that he has called umpires far worse without getting a game penalty, he hadn't thoroughly analyzed Serena's specific situation. Andy simply hadn't accumulated three code violations after he had insulted an umpire with foul language. The umpire acted totally within the existing rules in Serena's case. It's deplorable that the WTA and the USTA failed to acknowledge this clearly.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/190	0.526
Even if this were down to sexism vs. the idea that male tennis players have said worse and got off scot free so what. One umpire is not the entire association of umpire and a couple of male players is not all of the male players. I thought an umpire was a judge and discretion and case by case judgement are applicable to the day and situation. In a court room a judge can hold you in contempt (with probable cause) if you give them a reason OR guess what...they DON'T have to. The idea is why tempt it. Why bash and shit on the individual who can JUDGE rather or not you're being out of line in that very moment and invoke a penalty against you. And even then — PERSONALLY — I'd rather be called a chicken shit or a wanker or a fucking idiot than to be called a sexist. The former statements are made out of just anger. The latter statement isn't just made out of anger. Its an assault on my character. Nothing is more insulting than having your very nature attacked — especially when you're just doing your job. The only way you could systematically prove this MAY have been sexist is to gather up all of code violations based on abusive or derogatory nature and tally how much of it is female player to male umpire and male player to male umpire. I'm willing to bet my fucking left butt cheek that in the last 10 years more infractions were against men nearly 3:1	Nothing, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/261	0.766
Not so... she didn't want the line ref (a woman by the way) removed... she threatened to shove the ball down her throat for calling a foot fault, to which the (female) umpire docked her 2 points... 1 for the foot fault and 1 for threatening an official. The second point she got docked was the match point She's just a sore loser, as noone can call sexism in that case as both the line ref and the umpire were female.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	2/81	2.469

A Jim Fan. I like how you carefully crafted your response and spoke of slavery. But no there's a difference between a man from a cotton picking slavery plant 7 decades ago looking like a brick shit house and having a reason for looking so big. Serena isn't from any of decades past , hasn't been slavery cotton picking or anything. This man woman is light years bigger built than most twig tennis players. Its like bringing a tank to a knife fight. Kinda obvious who's gonna dominate. So no the chick has had tons of success from her enormous build. Amazon woman vs the chicklets. I'm sure she'd say its been hard work only but hard work is easier with so much testosterone running through you. Serena lives a dream life that most will never experience. She's a rock star and is given rock star treatment and it's gone to her head in moments not going her way. I think she was finding an excuse for having her tantrum and reached for what was available, so the chair umpire was a man so why not say that colored his officiating for her excuse. Her 2009 US Open final blowup had a woman chair but still Serena went as far as to threaten the lines person with shoving a fucking tennis ball down her fucking throat for calling foot fault on her, so you see we have Serena getting out of hand because things were not going her way. The match was over when the female chair umpire gave a point deduction on match point, well race came into play because the chair umpire was white and the lines person was Asian. You see where I'm going with this, unless there's some glaring proof where do you stop blaming race, religion or sex for the outcome of umpiring? And if a male player was to say the same thing Serena said to a diminutive female lines person about shoving a ball down her throat, he would have effectively ended his career and never heard the end of criticism, so yes I can see sexism in that instance because Serena has gotten a free pass for that one.	Colored, Race, Sex, Sexism, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	6/240	2.5

As posted elsewhere.Basically, Serena is full of her own self importance and deserved everything she got. She is an insult to everything she claims to stand for and has set so many things backwards because of her petulance and infantile hissy fits.I have been complaining quite a lot recently about tennis stars acting like they owned the world, instead of them owing the world everything. A prime example was Djokovic, who I suspect has been put firmly in his place by all around him because he is now acting more like an adult and not a spoilt 6 year old .Did you see the match when a kid couldn't understand when he was called out and penalised for hitting a ball into a chair umpire's eye and injuring him "because everyone does it". And that is what Williams and her ilk are responsible for. She should be ashamed of herself and apologise to the world.fyi I have read and watched reactions and reports from around the world and the telling thing is that the only country where Williams gets support is the USA, which is also an indictment of the sorry state the USA has sunk into.I remember JFK with his 'My fellow Americans, ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country.Trump, Williams et al : "My fellow Americans, ask not what you can do for your country, ask how much your country can subsidise and support you, whilst you avoid doing anything remotely meaningful in life. Common Man, especially agree with disappointment of Billy Jean King’s statements. However, over the recent years she has been revealing more and more of her feminist-sexist attitude. Wish Bobby Riggs or someone else had beaten her then. Anyway she is an embarrassment to having the USTA Tennis Center with her name on it. Especially compared with Rod Laver in Melbourne is a true representative of tennis and would not attempt to use his credentials to further political agenda or false social agenda; Though Martina Navratilova’s social media statements support Carlos Ramos and state the conduct and behavior of Serena was incorrect, still she stated about inequality of judgments across tennis, which is not correct though there are some variances, but so do every sport-game. It is normal, because of humans vary. Am actually more disappointed with Chris Evert, especially she was commenting on the match, and during the broadcast states the issues of Serena’s conduct and behavior. Then on social media states that Carlos Ramos went overboard. That is clearly two-faced. Secondly, would expect she would actually know the Regulations, but her social media statements show her ignorance; Martina’s statements confirm her knowledge of the Regulations. Billy Jean King seems to ignore the Regulations and states her opinions based upon her pre-supposed, premise of Feminist-SJW, PC type mindset. And Patrick McEnroe, former head of USTA is another embarrassment, also showing his ignorance of the Regulations. So is Katrina Adams a similar embarrassment. Seem time for a replacement to get balance in their. Katrina at the award ceremony clearly showed bias toward Serena. It was disgusting, appalling, disgraceful. See how different she was last year with Sloane Stephens. Indications she is a racist-SJW type, though not absolutely clear. Nonetheless, under Katrina’s direction there has been degradation and there needs to be a turn-around. They could have supported Naomi Osaka. They also have not much going in the Men’s area so far either. There are so many foreigners who specifically move to the USA for tennis development and training, and maintain their country affiliations. That is fine, just shows, there is among the best training, development available but not very many USA citizens. The women do have many rising often, not many stars from the bunches yet. Some more promising currently, we will see. Of course, which other sport other than professional tennis can a woman excel and achieve large amounts of money. Do not have to even be 1 nor GS winner to get high levels, though the bigger amounts come with either or both. For men, there are numerous other sport-games for athletes to choose. To address Serena Williams game with Naomi Osaka in the US open final in 2018 I did not watch the game but I have this to say to Serena Williams let your tennis do the talking and not your mouth, on some occasion your opponent is going to out play you do not let that be a problem and a distraction to you, the most important thing is you are still playing the game of tennis right now, and there will be lots more opportunity so stop wasting your golden opportunity to be the best player ever in the woman game of tennis ,Your main gold and focus right now is to beat Margaret Court title, and that will definitely shut up all the bad minded critics in the media that have a lot to do with how people will perceive you, the bad minded critics in the media will never make you forget that Margaret Court is still the best number one woman player ever, It will be very bad to see the statistician use statistic to beat you with if you do not brake Margaret Court title, you really do not want any one to hold that against you it is in your hands all you have to do is put more effort and planning in your tennis final, your opponent do a lot of study on you they watch video tape of you day and night to find your weakness and your main weakness is your service game falling apart by you some time rushing the game when you need to stay calm and focus, get your service game right and it is impossible for any one to beat you, and do what your opponent do to let them serve first your opponent always want you to serve first so that you can drop your service game so that they can have a very easy game, by not holding on to your service game that will only put pressure on you to stay in the game, it is full time now that you turn the table and let them serve first to put them under pressure by attacking there game if you do not really know what they are trying to do is use psychology on you, when you serve first you're at a disadvantage simply because your body is not fully tune up or insync as yet, for you to get a positive rhythm going the motivation may be there but your have to be in tune to get a feel of how the tennis court is playing, It is to be expected that the people that run and control tennis will tell the chair umpire like Carlos Ramos to issues a violation on Serena Williams by any means necessary the people that run the game of tennis will tell the chair umpires that they have to be very strict with Serena Williams simply because they do not want to see Serena brake a white person record and that is Margaret Court record, people still have racist bioses so do not be fool all that glitter is not always gold, you should know by now that white people have not change from being bias and racist toward black people, and it was said in the US open tennis game that your manager Patrick Mouratoglou was coaching you in the stands, if that is true he should know better by now, he should knows that is not allowed or permitted in the game, And I really miss seeing your father Mr Williams at your tennis games, Mr Williams was your coach and your mentor and your inspiration. So big up to your father Mr Williams, and I do hope that everything is ok with him. And I cannot understand why have Serena take on a white person mentality Serena you are black and white people will always see you as black, even though you are married to a white man it make no difference what so ever, now you adopt the white people	Black, Racist, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	7/845	0.828

Way to ruin a young fans dream!!! Naomi always wanted to play against Serena and Serena ruined the young womans moment with her own selfish ranting and cheating. Serena not a woman anyways, she a freaken man!!! Even her shitty eyebrows and facial bone structure shows us that. Men have big eyebrow ridges and sloping skulls. Which as you can see Serena has along with a male body. You can see the difference in the skull structure as the two players stand side by side. Hell her forehead slopes back just like the guy's narrating in this video and her eyebrows are as thick as his too. Hmmm... In a match where both people are black and female, how could the umpire be racist or sexist? Wouldn't he be helping a black female by targeting the other one? Thankfully Naomi was a black female otherwise many would think Serena's argument stands ground. Even now some people believe this nonsense, unfathomable! Imagine if she played against a white man, the umpire would have been fired by now. This shows the hypocrisy of people who see world through their own lenses and isolate themselves from reality. SW defending arguments make no sense and are basically pathetic - Ramos followed the rule book correctly. Until the WTA starts to check the physiology of their players I remain convinced there are many transexuals playing in the women's game. As for sexism in sport - of course it exists and it exists everywhere and in every sport that men and women play; until men and women line up on the same start line or take part in the same tournament there will be sexism - obviously in about 99.00 of all sports it would mean women would win nothing or even get close to winning anything (actually in terms of Tennis Grand Slams - there would be no women players taking part as no woman would ever get into the top 128). So please SW brought this topic up.	Nothing, Sexism, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	4/140	2.857

Serena has had a pattern of yelling,cursing and getting mad at lines people,umpires,the chair umpire in this latest fiasco and this goes back a long ways, I looked up all the times she DIDN'T get fined for outbursts and its a lot.The one common denominator in all this is that she has done this type of thing when she was losing. She feels entitled to it because she is Serena Williams. Just look at the ads before and during the entirety of the U.S.Open...it went something like this...Don't call it a comeback because I've been here before and no matter how much she wanted it and how much the sponsors thought that she was a shoe-in to win, she lost plain and simple. How does one make a big fuss hoping to change the outcome of the match and go so far as to slander and ridicule a very good chair umpire.The fine should have been much,much bigger.Let's see how much she is booed at the Australian Open in January.People pay huge money for these seats and don't need such childish outbursts. I understand you tried your best in keeping this video as unbiased as possible, and you did really well, but you missed a trick! When you mentioned the other male players that have "clashed" with Carlos Ramos, you said they didn't get penalised, but they did. If you read the articles you showed us, they clearly state "The serb got a time warning violation" ; "I say towel out loud and I get a code?" ; " [...] before deciding to dock Nadal a first serve".The point here is that Serena accumulated code violations for multiple infractions. And just like in soccer, where you can get sent off for a not so severe foul by accumulating yellow cards after a series of fouls, in tennis you can get bigger consequences like game penalties after accumulating code violations (Serena lost a game after her third code violation). A fourth code violation would see her lose the match by default, just like it happened to John McEnroe at the Australian Open. So it's not a matter of sexism , or racism , or anything. It's a matter of Carlos being very strict with the rules and enforcing them regardless of the player's race , sex , or even status. He's not afraid of penalizing the biggest players like Serena, Rafa or Novak. I wonder how long she has been getting hand signals from her coach while playing.. probably her whole career. She seemed very defensive when called out for it and instantly said that she was not a cheater. Yet according to her coach, he admitted to doing it, which means she is a cheater. Then she brings her kid into it, playing that card was low. Her kid has nothing to do with the match, there is no reason to bring it up. Then the sexism accusation and saying that he'll never ref her court again? Now she is just being mean because she doesn't have any basis for that claim, (do you think she knows his history of calls enough to make that claim? Personally I do not.) and to threaten the man's job because of her entitlement that the sport has given her? I felt incredibly sorry for Osaka. Her win was sullied by all the controversy and the audience should be ashamed of themselves for treating a young woman that way. It's a high-pressure environment and it is no wonder that players lose their cool on occasion. Serena would be better off owning it and apologising profusely to Osaka for not being the idol the young woman had dreamed of playing. It was uncomfortable to watch and a very disappointing display of a star losing her cool and making matters much worse than they should have been. It seems to me rules were clearly broken and penalties were correctly applied but it needs to be the same across the board. Being strict with everyone, men and women alike would hopefully improve court conduct all round but at the end of the day, we are all just human beings and when emotions become involved in such a high-pressure situation, it must be so very hard to keep your cool 100 of the time. The real question is the double standard. Nobody is perfect, I was against Serena but I changed my mind when I learned that some others players were involved in similar abusive languages and that some were worse with the very Ramos and they were never penalized. This is the issue when it comes to sexism or racism . They capitalize when you make a small mistake and and they escalate the issue while others would do the same thing and they would say they didn't see anything. The issue here is the double standard and you need to be a victim to understand that trap.	Nobody, Racism, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/104	2.885

Two points. First, it's far from certain Serena is even female (since there's compelling evidence which suggests she was born a male – and has therefore been "cheating" her entire professional career). Second, assuming for the sake of argument that this extremely masculine-looking " woman " was not born a male, the fact remains she deserved to be penalized for the ridiculous tantrum "she" threw, because it was not a brief, one-time, heat-of-the-moment outburst, but rather something she kept on doing. Old	Age - Over 65s	1/93	1.075
Hyper Hurricane the issue is, yes those things are all nice and good hearted but it's literally expected of millionaires to do this. Sports players, musicians, actors, hell even youtubers do it now. All of these careers are inflated with money and make way more than they ever deserve for what they do. Yes they can all be stressful jobs but do they make the world go round? No. If each of those careers died off the world would keep going. They get paid shit tons to do what is known as a hobby. So it kind of dims down these "amazing things they do" when they can literally wipe their ass with money because "I hit ball good" or "I catch ball good". Not saying what they do isn't amazing at times. It's just a cash cow product and they really serve no importance. So yeah it's kinda expected of them to do these things since the normal people with normal jobs can't throw that much money around. It is funny you throw race into it though as slowly but surely all through the "white male privilege" you all like to screech about, being a white male is becoming shitier to be as literally anything you don't agree with or do can be labeled as sexism/racism /any kind of ism the victimized can come up with. Their opinions are thought of as null and void on any topics even if it is to further the ending of such issues. And while there are many forms of racism and sexism , women and colored people are becoming just as if not more guilty of it now. They just like to create their own rule called the "I'm not white or male so i can't be it" rule. Hate to break it to you but through all this commotion about racism and sexism , there's been a lot more racism and sexism coming from the females and colored lately which is sad since they should be helping to end it. Hyper Hurricane tbh that was meant to say " colored people" so that's my bad for not revising well enough auto correct probably fucked it up a little on me. Honestly while I do agree I'm starting to believe slowly but surely it's going to creep to the 50-50 mark of what is truthful and what is exploiting in my opinion. It's becoming way too convenient and commonly used to call racism sexism to the point it is hurting the cause for the people it actually matters to because more and more people are starting to have the whole "boy who cried wolf mentality" about it now because the amount of people that abuse these terms are increasing which isn't good. Chris Chapel, this is the most unbiased, complete, intelligent, mature and accurate compilation of what happened. Your report was such a refreshing departure from other reviews of what happened (of which I have read most, if not all) which have been sketchy, biased (pro Williams)and irresponsible because of their lack of thoroughness of enforcement of the rules vs. sexism question. I don't understand what mass mesmerization has caused millions of people to adore Serena Williams despite her history of an uncontrollable temper, simmering rage and abuse of officials. Unless it is the very same umpire letting men get away with abusing them who punished Serena here then she doesn't have a point and neither does Roddick. That's a bit like a schoolgirl getting away with a particular type of behaviour from one teacher and then being punished for the same thing by a different teacher (who happens to be male) and then claiming sexism .Apart from anything else, there could have been any number of reasons why Roddick got away with it anyway, such as were those umpires more tolerant than this one? Were his tantrums generic and/or about the situation only and not personally abusive to umpires? For anyone that thinks that Serena (and hundreds of other athletes from ALL pro sports) isn't a "cheat", read on... Most top athletes are "cheats", it's just that they manage to do it "within the rules". The biggest culprits in tennis would seem to be Serena, Venus and Nadal, though it happens in ALL professional sports. There is a system in pro sport known as TUE (Therapeutic Use Exemption), which allows pro sportsmen/women to have otherwise illegal performance enhancing drugs prescribed to them. What they do is tell their personal doctor that they are ill, the doctor then fills out a TUE form stating the illness and the drugs required to treat it and hands the form to the sporting governing body. The sporting governing body then ok's the use of the drug requested for the time period requested. This is a system that has been abused by most top sports people in almost every pro and Olympic sport for many years. The higher profile athlete you are (and all high profile athletes have their own personal doctors making it even easier because the doctor will back up their claim of being ill) the more likely the governing body will say yes to the use of otherwise illegal performance enhancing drugs. This system has remained secret to the public until a couple of years ago when the WADA database was hacked and hundreds if not thousands of previously confidential TUEs were downloaded and made available for all to see. Journalists got hold of the forms and both Serena and Nadal were interviewed about their prolific and in Serena's case almost constant use of illegal performance enhancing drugs and all both could say was "I have done nothing wrong, everything I've done is within the rules". In Serena's case I personally looked through all her TUEs and cross referenced the drugs she took and the times that she took them and I was astonished to find that they almost always coincided with the major slams. In fact on quite a few occasions she was taking hard-core performance enhancing drugs (officially for a particular ailment) from between 6 and 2 weeks before some of the grand slams dating back to 2009 and when I researched the particular drugs she was using, they didn't have an effect on the athlete until 2 weeks AFTER administering ended. In other words, she was reaping the performance enhancing benefits just as the tournament started and throughout it's 2 week duration. This I found to be a recurring feature in her TUE strategy way above any other athlete from any other sport. I'm sorry to burst your bubble (I was devastated and very upset for days when I realised the truth behind ALL pro sport) but these are the hard facts. Let's not forget that we live in a capitalist society where profit comes above all else and the bottom line is that top athletes bring a HUGE amount of money into their given sport and thus the governing bodies constantly allow these TUEs to be granted, especially to the biggest names because they bring in the most money - also the use of drugs (particularly in athletics) means that at various times world records will be broken, which HAS to happen because that generates greater public interest which in turn generates even more revenue. If world records were never broken interest would eventually wane, meaning less profit. As we saw in the Lance Armstrong case, a governing body will protect a top athlete because they bring so	Nothing, doctors	Age - Youngsters, Nationality - General	2/664	0.301

Serena williams = sore loser. Got caught 'couching', racket abuse and verbal abuse. All against the rules. PLUS, playing the sexism card!? WTF!? Yep, definitely a sore loser. This video says it all, she and some of the women players were not the only ones getting penalties. In fact there were MORE MEN players that had been penalized than women.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/60	1.667
What Serena did, was certainly not great. However, people seem to miss the context. She is competing at a very high athletic standard and when people get argumentative in those circumstances, the body chemistry is not very helpful. When competing, the confrontational behavior seems natural. A veteran of her experience must have handled this better, no doubt, but still, she isn't the worst I have seen when it comes to vulgarity. The length of her argument is by no means a factor. However, her accusation of Carlos was. Hence she had a point taken in a crucial way. Has Carlos did the same in every instance with men, history suggests, no. Hence there is some grey area in the sexism context. However, all credit to Osaka and Serena could have been much more graceful in supporting a young girl.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/139	0.719

They talk about sexism in sport as if its a detriment that only exists for women. The way I see it, females have the privilege, and not just in sport. The privilege of playing the sexism card in any situation they want and having the world believe it because ...poor woman , bad man. Were it a man claiming sexism no-one would care and that in itself is sexist.Take Carlos Ramos for example, look at the situation he is in; he was abused, a victim of sexism at the mouth of Serena Williams and no-one gives a damn, I doubt anyone even noticed. The type of sexism that sets out to demonize a man because its a convenient way of getting what you want when things arent going your way.I haven't seen many people as "ugly inside" as Serena Williams proved herself to be. That should have been the best moment of Osakas life, a moment she confessed to have dreamed of for all of it. Serena took that dream away from her and I hope Serenas kids realize who they absolutely should not aspire to be.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	6/188	3.191

Serena’s behaviour revealed her emotional immaturity, narcissism, and sense of entitlement. She became a liar when she claimed there was no coaching violation, and she became a thief when she stole the spotlight from Osaka with her childish temper tantrum. She is guilty of the very things she accused Carlos Ramos of, which is typical of narcissists. Allegations of ”sexism” are an attempt to cloak a dismally poor character behind a veil of virtue. The veil is thin and full of holes. Serena’s behaviour was disgraceful, and young women who want to grow up empowered in pursuit of their dreams would do better by looking up to Osaka than to her. Suppose hypothetically it was sexist and tennis really holds women to other standards than men, it’s still a match between 2 women so it would be fair in the context of that match because she is competing against another woman who is also subjected to this sexism, if the other player would have also talked back to the guy and not get penalized that would be unfair.Anyway many sports have slightly different rules for men and women and they are mainly there because women and men are different... is this sexist, idk ... maybe... but since you compete against people of the same gender it is still fair in that context.	Gender, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	3/112	2.679

The US Tennis Association should be mortified by the example their standard bearer has given to young athletes. Serena acted like an entitled middle school brat getting caught red-handed doing something wrong but is incapable of accepting responsibility for ANYTHING. She owes the tennis world an apology. Instead, the USTA board president gave a press release praising Williams' SPORTSMANSHIP?!?!? WTF!!!! Because she could chill out long enough to say something nice about her opponent at the award ceremony?!?! That's not sportsmanship, it's self-preservation and self-aggrandizement by "humbly" putting the crowd in its place for following Willams' earlier porr sportsmanship lead?!?!? CRAZY TOWN!!! The whole way she acted was just wrong. Her throwing a temper tantrum led to the audience booing and acting out of place themself. Serena Williams should be a rolemodel, in this case it led to the entire audience being, sorry If I have to say it like that, aholes. All of this could've been talked about after the game, no referee or umpire would ever take back their decision, no matter how much you feel it was unjustified, so discussing it on the cord should obviously not be your go to action. This is not a case of what other people do and did, but what you are not allowed to. Just cause some tennis players haven't been penalized for something which seemingly is the same situation you're in, doesn't justify you not being penalized for breaking the rules. This lack of patience, and inability to adress problems after the game, led to the audience being major douchebags.The saddest thing is, because of that Osaka, a 20 year old woman who just won the US-Open for the first time, felt like she had to apologize for something she had worked on her entire life. This should've been a happy occasion. And Serene even praises the audience in the same moment. That's some major bollocks. The audience started to act like that because you clearly couldn't control your temper, and now you praise them for being a great audience? Yeah well they did what you wanted them to do I guess.. First of all Serena Williams is a very gracious when she loses. You just said the rules are "a player shall not receive coaching" if you watched the match you would know that she did not receive coaching she was on the opposite side of the court and he was seated several rows behind rather tall people so let's be honest did she receive the coaching? No is the answer it doesn't matter because what this remarkable woman has achieved and will only get better remember 1 year ago she was fighting for her life during childbirth. And she made it to the final of 2 grand slams. If that is not remarkable idk what is. And gracious is the way Serena treated her opponent by telling the crowd to STOP booing. It could have went a whole other direction. Cudos to Serena Williams the G.O.A.T THE EMPRESS OF SPORTS. I LOVE YOU SERENA YOU SAY IT BEST " You have nothing to lose. When I watched the video, I didn't take the boos as being for the umpire but for Serena. They didn't seem to boo until Serena start throwing a tantrum. This is a disgrace when athletes do this. One of the most important things in sports, in my opinion, is sportsmanship. Personally I don't like when players celebrate too much. There shouldn't be more than a few high fives or slaps on the back after a big play. These players are role models. The kids coming up are having enough trouble with being coddled by parents and teachers. It's even worse when their sports heroes throw fits and act like children. Serena made it even worse by playing the gender card. I saw the penalty stats for the past few years and men were penalized more in every category except one. Sometimes they were even penalized double what women were. I would think feminists would be pissed because Serena trivialized their cause by blaming sexism instead of taking responsibility. Then again when did feminists ever want women to take responsibility. They want women to have all the perks of being a man except with all the responsibilities that come with them. They want to be firemen and police but don't want to be held up to the same standards. They want all the high paying and cushy jobs but want the dirty and dangerous jobs to stay majority male. They want equality in marriage but then still want alimony, full custody, and child support. They want to be the same as men but then still expect men to pay for dinner and open doors. They want the right to vote but scream when someone brings up the idea that they pay for that vote with the draft like men. They want all this on top of all the perks they get for being women, for example control of conception. They fight against releasing a male birth control pill and absolutely hate the idea of a financial abortion for men. They want to be able to get pregnant even if the man doesn't and then control what happens to the pregnancy. If they decide to keep it even if the man didn't want it, he's required to pay for it. They want to have sex all they want and if the man doesn't meet their expectations afterward, they want the ability to take back consent after the fact. They want to lock a man who sleeps with a minor up and throw away the key but if they do it they should get a slap on the wrist, keep their teachers license, or not penalized at all. I went off an a rant but basically they want to have their cake and eat it too. Now that they got everything they've wanted, studies show they've gotten progressively more unhappy over the years. Also, more men are staying away from women because of all of the pitfalls of dating in a feminist culture. This cause all the good men to abandon ship leaving only the weasel male feminist types who will do whatever to get laid and the women cry about 'where have all the good men gone?'. Well you drove them away. Because of all this men are relying on porn, prostitution, or sex robots and women are trying to shut that down. Some countries are even trying to institute a bachelors tax to force men to go back to women. Basically they'll do whatever it takes to coerce men into being their slaves. The real victims in all of this are the good women who can't find a good man because of the actions of a few or the real rape victims who aren't believed because of the tons of BS false rape accusations. Or the children who end up being	Crazy, Gender, Sex, Sexism	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	5/827	0.605

Just addressing the title. Serena's actions had nothing to do with being a sore loser. This all occurred long before it was clear she was going to lose. This is called "entitlement" and "self victimization" and not being accountable to her own actions. Personally I think the $17K fine is a joke. This amounts to a mere parking violation in Ms. William's world. She should be bared from future tournaments until she had made full public apologies to the Umpire, USTA, US Open, Fans and her opponent to whom she already apologized, but for all the wrong reasons. sorry but, did you watch the match? she was completely outplayed by Naomi Osaka and had just recently seen Naomi break her game, it was obvious to anyone impartial who was watching the match that it would be extremely hard for Serena to comeback from how well Osaka was playing and how not so well Williams was playingSerena Williams is a smart and experienced player, she probably already knew she would lose the match halfway through the second set, her breaking the racket is most likely due to the frustration of knowing she had to up her game but felt it simply was not one of those days where she could do itelite athletes can feel these things, in tennis is even more common and we see it many times when players throw a set away just to try and get back in shape for the rest of the matchso, what do we call someone who knows she's on a clear path to lose the match and suddenly throws a fit trying to find excuses and blame others for it? isn't that what a sore loser is? I mean, it's not even a issue to be a sore loser since it's normal for elite athletes to always want to win BUT the real problem is not only insulting others, the umpire in this case, but also question the character of someone who's history speaks for itself on how he treats everyone with the same rigorous interpretation of the rules BUT still being fair, that's the problem	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/259	0.386

That would have been funny considering the fact that Osaka grew up in the USA. Anyway, public wanted Serena to win so badly and lost all sense of objectivity. Futhermore what they didn't know is that the referee had to punish Serena BECAUSE of his coach. He was the one breaking the rule, but nobody knew that at that moment even Serena (based on her saying). The referee should have said "I'm sorry u didn't do anything wrong but your coach did therefore following the rule I have to give you a sanction". T NGUYEN, Your idea is interesting and reasonable for an average umpire, perhaps. However, look at the videos more closely. Clearly Carlos IS responding to Serena’s claim in her first retort to his Code Violation-Coaching - Warning. Again after the Code Violation-Racquet/Racket Abuse-Point Penalty Mrs. Williams, when Serena counters with ”Warning”, Carlos explains again to Serena, which Serena counters, disagrees, begins her onslaught and barrage, during which Carlos responds to Serena several times explaining. We do not hear his words. Also note, Serena after her statement and claim to Carlos about the ’thumbs up’ not as coaching but as encouragement ’Come On’, she turned away, headed back toward the baseline, after a few steps away turns back toward Carlos shouts something in a strong tone, points her finger at him; Her words are not pickup by the microphones, but her non-verbal indicate something strong, perhaps intimidating-threatening. Her motion is not as strong nor anger was at the woman line judge in 2009, less, but along that line of similarity. Carlos ignores it.Many are quick to say about Carols Ramos known as a ’stickler’ or ’strict’ umpire. However, Carlos Ramos endures at least three separate onslaughts of verbal abuse. One after each code violation statement and penalty status. Each one is increasingly more abusive, with multiple abuses in each. After the third onslaught and barrage of verbal abuse finished, which contained intimidation, threat, demand of apology, questioning-refuting judgement and correctness, defamation of character [’liar’ and ’thief’], did Carlos Ramos rule Code Violation-Verbal Abuse-Game Penalty. The discussion with Tournament Director Brian Earley is not audible [intentionally], but as it completes a few words of Brian saying ” ... okay then it’s Verbal Abuse for ’thief’. Seems there was much more and maybe agreed to minimize it, else a greater penalty could be assessed as a Major Offence of ’Aggravated Behavior’ and disqualification. Perhaps agreeing that with this game penalty, Serena will stop her tirade, the match will be ending soon, and minimize any worse detriment to the tournament, at least the match will complete in a closer to normal proceeding, not by default.	Woman	Gender - General	1/352	0.284

It's because now you democrats only see us as votes and use us to feel better about yourselves as if we are lesser beings that need your help 24/7. The world democrats want to create with the sjw and censoring shit is very close to what the Nazi's used to do which is another reason I find it so funny you guys like to call people Nazi's. +Deku Heroic - Just so as you know, prejudice means to pre-judge and I'm afraid that's exactly what you have done here with me because not only am I not a Democrat but I'm not even an America either. I might also add too that naturally assuming that I could only be American is quite an insular attitude and in some ways a form of "racism" in itself.The trouble with those on the political right is that they think they have a monopoly on things like condemning crime and upholding law and order, a dislike for overly politically correct attitudes and showing patriotism, probably because they collectively place "the left" in one all encompassing bag. Yet if anyone tries to do that to those on the right and tags them by the most extreme and insane brigade from the right, then they will be the first to protest. Yes there are plenty of liberals and those on the left who like to unjustifiably play the victim via the race or sexism card, yet equally there are plenty of liberals or those on the left who will condemn that because it devalues it when it actually happens. Just as there are plenty on the right who at times will try to unjustifiably explain away any genuinely discrimination of any form, as if none ever exists.Also as a black person, unless you are worth millions and don't really care about others but yourself then voting Republican is like turkeys voting for Christmas if you really think Trump and Republicans value you and have your best interests at heart.Amway, my original point was that it's is total nonsense to say "Liberal is short for racist " as if there is only one kind of liberal, especially when as I alluded to above, the KKK are hardly colourblind and definitely are neither liberal nor of the left of the political spectrum. It's not crazy to assume these two things. If you are not an American democrat then I am sorry for assuming you are the worse thing in our country right now. I actually live here so my opinions on the matter I think hold a bit more weight than someone that doesn't. You don't know what it's been like here in the last 10 years. It's gotten really bad. serena was the sexist and racist on the court....it was disgusting to watch her behavior....js	Racist	Ethnicity - General	1/15	6.667
What is most annoying about Serena is that she is very good at using the strategy she used in this match to break down her opponents. She has done it many times. The anger and injustice that I am sure she actually felt she long ago realised she could use to either get a crowd on her side, fire up her own game and take the rhythm out of the opponent or both. It's called gamesmanship and she, like other superstars who should know better (Neymar, Ronaldo, McEnroe etc..), has tried to cover up her own failings with whataboutism. It's a politicians game. When things are going against you, find a distraction, put your opponent off, take them outside the game and maybe, just maybe you can come out victorious. So sexism ? Really. The points were taken from Serena and given to.... a man? Actually, I can't be bothered to get into that side of the debate because that is exactly what someone like Serena wants. Talk about the controversy that she, alone, created and forget about the fact that she was outplayed by a superior player. Well Done Osaka - you overcame the toughest hurdle out there, both athletically and mentally.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/202	0.495

I think she knew she was gonna lose already when he gave second penalty, so she came up with a brilliant idea to overshadow the success of Naomi , and create a controversy that could have Serena's name in all media. Then she purposefully called Ramos a liar and a thief , resulting in her losing a game point which she knew would happen, and then she played the Sexism card to make her look as a victim. So I think she orchestrated all this drama just to maintain her popularity and to be saved from criticism from her fans and media. What a loser!	Sexism	Gender - General	1/105	0.952

Know the sport before you flap your lips. Williams lost a game because she pushed it to strike three! Williams was in the wrong times three. The rules are well known by the players. Admonishment, point, game, and finally you risk being defaulted. Ask Nick Kyrgios about his meltdown experiences on today's tour when he gets out of line. Ask Nadal about his experience in this year's U.S. Open when he got out of line. Unlike Kyrgios and Williams, Nadal knows when to shut up, be a professional, and get back to competing. is the rule against coaching outdated, probably. But the rule is in place now and Williams knows she is responsible for her team's behavior. Instead of returning to a model of veteran professionalism, she chose to personalize the admonishment and martyr herself to hide the fact she felt she was going to lose. Williams could have pointed at her coach wagged her finger NO! and apologized for his actions. That would have ended it with the referee. But Serena being Serena, she has to blow it out of portion. When she smashed her racquet I knew, from having watched her for decades, that more was coming. She berated the umpire numerous times on a worldwide broadcast. How could he rule anything different? The attempt to demonstrate bias by dragging out decades old tolerated bad boy behavior is silly. How about we use the standards of the 1930s & 40s? Say Bill Tilden with the world celebrating his tennis excellence while turning a blind eye to his open pedophila. If Nastase, Connors, or McEnroe were to try their antics on today's tour they would be sanctioned just as quickly as Serena Williams. Williams threw the second set away with her actions and paid token pennies in fines when compared to her 2nd place prize money for a very poor performance while robbing a very fine young woman of her golden moment. So will Serena Williams close out her career allowing us all to remember her substantial accomplishments or will she leave us with the image of outrageous adult tantrums? I am a big fan of Serena, but I can definitely see both sides. Her behavior is not the greatest and nothing to be proud of, but not exactly over the top. And so sorry for Naomi. When you are competing at that level there is a lot adrenal flowing, and that makes for great competition and sometimes less than great behavior But it is true, that when men exhibit this behavior, sometimes it is not only excused, it is heralded. A very difficult call now. In the past it would be an easy call-any woman that did this was an animal A man that did this, well it is just boys being boys. I saw some screenshots in the clip and for former tennis players to say that they have never had a game docked for abusing the umpire is half truth. What most commentators missed was that Serena was not docked a point because she broke her racket or a game because she abused the umpire. Those are all code violations. She got docked the point because it was her second code violation and a game because it was her third code violation. To say other men players are not similarly penalised is false. If those code violations are their first. the players will only get a warning. How is it no one is speaking on this? Serena is a great tennis champ... just not a good person when loosing. Lost her temper in front of the whole audience and now has to stick to her " sexism victim" strategy not to lose completely her face. Observe her body language right when she says "I have never cheated in my life!" and you will see one of the classic tells of a human telling a lie. She pauses at the word "never", a small pause of hesitation. "You owe me an apology!" she continues. Horrible thing to say with that air of superiority. Because all that hostility didn't work, she goes for the crying strategy. She totally thinks it will get a free pass on being abusive. People saw the truth in her intentions and shameful behaviours. Serena Williams is a cry baby, a whiner and manipulative person who used every card in her persona to generate sympathy for herself. Serena was just a horrible sport and a disgrace to tennis and sports. Feel bad for how Naomi Osaka got sidelined. The umpire was in the right throughout the ridiculous show being put up by the returning champion. And I can't believe that she used being a mother to justify her shit fit. And anyone who thinks that male players or just players of any gender have earlier gotten away with worse is a moron cause what they are saying is that because something wrong happened in the past its OK for it to continue happening in the future. Very objective piece. One thing you missed: Ramos was over the top and excessive in his penalties. And EVERYONE is unanimous on that. Some have argued that it is up to his discretion and hes not wrong and that the cumulative nature of the sanctions are caution enough, but they all say it was too much, even if he had the right. And that right is very debatable on the first and last sanction. Which you very aptly covered.The fact that there are many men who have done more for extended periods of time is what led to Serena's accusation. Sexism ? Who knows, but we do know he has treated men in EXACTLY the same situation differently. Could be racism , could be American hate, could be Serenaism, who knows. But it is undeniably disparate treatment, thus her shock and outrage. The same shock and outrage we see in every sport from highly competitive elite athletes. The Williams sisters ushered in a change in the WTA from dainty tennis to powerful athletic, competitive tennis. When they first overheard volleyed, smashed returns and did body serves it was considered offensive and out of control too. Women's tennis just needs to decide if it wants to be a powerful competitive, sweaty sport or an elegant, country club, social game. Define it. Let everyone know what it is. Set the rules clearly and administer the rules equally. Serena believes she's playing a high level sport and thus is entitled to argue at a high level as all the other helmet throwing, mouth guard throwing, dugout emptying high level players. Im sick of hearing "he took a game" an umpire does not have the power to "take a game from her" he only has the capability to award code violations. Plenty of male players have said worse and plenty of players have received code violations for it (that is all an umpire can award) from then on the rules stipulate the penalty given the number of code violations. 1st = warning, 2nd = point penalty, 3rd=game penalty, 4th=game penalty or disqualification. Saying I've never seen an umpire take a game from a man even when they've said worse only means they know to bite their tongue and apply some self-control after the 2nd violation. It's also important to remark most umpires are told their blind , stupid, assholes, retards, that they couldn't tell their ass from their mouth, etc. plenty and they have pretty think skin when it comes to being told things like that but it is rare for a player to attack their character directly, and that rarely ends well. Let's frame it this way, most insults directed at referee reference incompetence, "you are one of these things, therefore, you can't do your job right and cant realize you were wrong on x call" these, most referees will give you a pass on, unless they are especially offensive. Other complaints and insults like the ones in Serena's case refer back to open dishonesty "you know you are wrong on this call and you are doing it on purpose because you're " these referees don't usually take very well (when was the last time any sports player said "how much did you get paid?" and got away with it?). I have seen male players lose their shit on the court, break rackets, yell at the umpire and call them names. The differences are these: 1. Anytime a male does that, he is given the appropriate fines2. The top class males (Murray, Federer, Nadal, Djokovic, etc) so rarely do it and when they do they usually simmer down within minutes and get on with the game. So it is easier for the umpire to leave it be. Serena just dragged it on and on and on and wouldn't stop. 100 right. I honeslty think the whole serena thing was a mixture of it being Serena and Ramos. Serena is known for having tantrums and losing her cool on the court. As with ANY sport, if you widely known for something then you are far more likely to be called for it. (E.G NHL's Tom Wilson is known for dirty hits, so he gets penalised for hits left and right even when they are perfectly legal ones). Ramos is also known for being stingy with the rules. Male, Female, Black , White or Alien . Ramos follows the rule books very strictly. Mix them together and the chances of what happened happening is so high. Serena got what she deserved. She was way out of line.	Alien, Black	Ethnicity - Black, Nationality - General	2/124	1.613

This was all just sad and unnecessary. Many tennis fans do love Serena. She is an unquestionable dominant athlete. And she is an American, and America has a lot of tennis players and fans. Unfortunately Serena is often not very likable. That is something that can, however, be overcome if one is willing to listen to others and make some minor concessions with respect to their outward personality. She has tried. She is often gracious to a fault winning AND losing.This display, however, was atrocious. She acknowledged she'd seen her coach and his gestures, at which point it is the chair's call on whether it was coaching or not. At that point it's just a warning. No different than what you get for hitting a ball into the stands intentionally. She could have just made her complaint and got back to playing tennis. But she did not. From there on out, one can only guess what was going on in her head. She was either really out of control, or she was staging all of it to try to disrupt her opponent. Both of course reflect poorly on her. WORST OF ALL, she tried to pin it all on sexism . And most of the leftist media is trying to spin that as well, fortunately with little success. yakitoriPB No... racism is partly to do with superiority and inferiority but also a person's assumption that because of someone's colour they are automatically going to behave in a negative way. Stating that because you are black you are probably a criminal is no different to your statements and even those who are slightly tolerant towards those types of comments would probably judge it to be ' racist '. You even say that in your life experience black people are aggressive and violent - which obviously doesn't include all black people. So your assumption, that because a person is black and a woman they will be aggressive, regardless of how you came to that conclusion, is a rather obvious racist statement. But then you double down and your true 'colour' shines through accusing black people of entitlement as if black people somehow have an advantage in this world. You clearly have a problem with black people - regardless of who they are. Bad behaviour is bad behaviour - Serena being an example of a person who behaves very badly and aggressively. But are therefore Sloane Stevens and Madison Keys automatically as badly behaved? You must see how your argument falls apart so easily. So just accept it. You have racist tendencies. It's up to you try to be a better person and not judge people by the colour of their skin.	Black, Racism, Racist, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	11/229	4.803

yakitoriPB Hey... your posts are here, verbatim. Just scroll up. You said exactly those things... You watched Serena and made a sweeping statement about black women - all 20 million of them(or 500 million if you include the rest of the world). Now you pull it down to the generous 'most' - which means that you have had experience that spans more than 10 million black women. In your next post you might be magnanimous enough to go down to 'many' and if pushed maybe even 'some' - but I have a sneaky suspicion you don't believe that. This is the classic path of racism - the heartfelt comment said in anger comes first - which usually has the racist remarks in them. Then it is slowly toned down as the person realises that this level of honesty is making them look bad... whereas everyone else heard what they said in the first place. Would you like a shovel?	Black, Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	4/159	2.516
Andreas Beltzér nope. Still wrong. I said typical black female and liberal. You're confirming my sentiments with your ignorant responses	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/20	5.0
Andreas Beltzér no... ignorant response is actually quite telling of your replies. Which is why I said it. Of course i stand by my response. At Least until I witness the general attitude of the black community go from one of white people owe me something because I'm black and my ancestors were enslaved to one of....I'm completely capable of achieving greatness through my outward projection to others...high moral character...earn your shit like the rest of us....I won't be changing it.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	2/81	2.469

yakitoriPB Yup. Just more digging. Are you not aware that you are trying to defend your comments as not being racist while just continuing to make more such remarks? Are you aware that this is what you are doing? Just curious. Are you an authority on the black community’s behavioural patterns throughout the US? Have you got some stats on this entitlement stuff or just a hunch from the handful of examples you claim to have witnessed? You see, this is where the problem lies because if you were an authority on this you wouldn’t be saying the above things. This is what ignorance looks like. But maybe your idea of ignorance is different. Maybe you think someone who challenges your personal experience as not being the objective truth is being ignorant in the sense that I, in this case, am ignorant of your specific observations. But that’s where you’ve got it wrong. Your assumption that - let’s get this right - most liberal black American women (so roughly 7 million people let’s say) - behave as you say is, by definition, an ignorant assumption. You have no idea if this is true. You also misjudge what is often a black person’s sentiment that they deserve an entitlement to equality as someone who is unfairly manipulating history for their benefit. It’s like the people who say Obama’s skin colour helped him become president when instead he had to overcome this fact to be successful. It’s a glaring misunderstanding of history, anthropology, sociology and common sense. In the same way - just because you are making these ignorant comments about the black community does not mean that I will assume that all white people are like that. Because why say something so ridiculous. Are you able to see that your comments only further enforce the notion of the ridiculous? I have a digger on standby.	Black, Common, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Social Class - Working class	6/314	1.911
Andreas Beltzér good ur dumb . U haven’t comprehend anything I’ve said. You cant cognitively grasp the difference between stereotype and RACISM . In fact you’ve demonstrated you don’t even understand what Racism is. There’s no point in continuing to converse with you	Dumb, Racism	Ethnicity - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/41	7.317

yakitoriPB Think the shoe is on the other foot. What you fail to understand is that hiding behind stereotyping doesn't save you in this case. Your comments very clearly state how you see yourself - presumably the white community - as being the 'us' in this comment: 'earn your shit like the rest of us' - thereby clearly putting yourself above 'them'. You are making assumptions based on their race which is different to, say, making assumptions about an Italian whose behaviour will be connected to nationality and the cultural implications that come with that. Stereotyping veers into xenophobia and racism when your assumptions about someone's nationality or skin colour goes towards the judgemental. It's when stereotyping - which is usually things like what food they eat or what hobbies they have or the subjects they speak about - turns to prejudice - which is when you make derogatory remarks about someone's daily behaviour and beliefs and attitude and position in society based on little to no logical reasoning. But there is a different way of testing the nature of your comments. Tell a black, liberal, American woman, next time you meet one, what you have said here and see how she responds to it. Reckon she will feel that you have undermined her for little more than what she looks like.	Black, Nationality, Race, Racism, Woman, Xenophobia	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Nationality - General	7/222	3.153
yakitoriPB, there a lot of points you could have made, but you had to bring in nationality and race which pretty much invalidates anything else you have to say. People are people regardless of where they come from or what their race is. You see despicable acts of humanity in all walks of life. That said Ms. William's actions speak to HER character, not her nationality or her race. Judge people by their character please. If this happens to apply negatively towards one race so be it, but that's the person's fault not their race or nationality.	Nationality, Race	Ethnicity - General, Nationality - General	8/97	8.247

Not going to argue with you, but let the facts be the facts. There is no need to call out race and in Serena's case it had not thing to do with race . It had everything to do with being "entitled" and "spoiled". Serena has no idea what it's like to live the upper, middle or lower class life. She has only ever known a life of wealth and entitlement. She is pampered like royalty wherever she goes. Did she earn it? Sure she did, she worked her ass off became a great tennis player, but her actions on this night will forever mark her for whom she truly is and that's pretty sad. I have witnessed colored folks playing the race card everywhere. They bring it on themselves.	Colored, Race	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	2/15	13.333
yakitoriPB OK. The swearing has started. I guess I'm getting through then. Which is a start. And you are only proving my point. You are accusing black people of not 'earning their shit' as opposed to... what? You, personally? So in that case not white people in general but just you are better than black people. That still makes you put yourself above another community based on race . And I'm not speaking 'for' a group but more about society and our place in it. I'm merely saying that no individual can presume to know what an entire group is like. And I'm saying that what tolerance is - as opposed to prejudice - is the ability to not make sweeping assumptions about a whole community of people based on one's narrow personal experience. It's like assuming that the headline news is the only thing happening at the moment and that one story about one individual should define all - sorry, 'most' other people similar to that person. So what I'm trying to get through to you is that instead of walking around with this automatic association in your mind between the black community and the various derogatory things you have said - be open to the idea that some black women are like Serena (to refer back to the tennis) - entitled, spoilt, sore losers; and others are like Sloane Stevens - dignified, humble and honourable. It is arrogant to presume you have the power to accurately judge others in the way you have. And the word 'racist' will be thrown at you when that judgement includes a race , which yours has. I hope you can see that. f you feel the need to swear at me some more go ahead. Anger is the first step towards insight.	Black, Race	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	6/298	2.013

This is what gets me:1. If a guy had broken his racket in a match, the punishment would have been lesser and the comments would be in the lines of 'the passion of the game...'2. If a guy would have argued with the umpire, the conversation would be different, but because she's a woman she gets criticized as 'unable to control her temper.'3.Since when are umpires so touchy-feely. Other players have done worse or said worse comments and the umpires just let it go.4.I love the fact that she is the one penalized and chastised for standing up for herself, but no one seems to understand that the one really at fault here is her coach. The big head decided it was ok to coach her, knowing it was against the rules, and she gets the short end of the stick for his actions.5. Sure, Serena could have handled it better, but then again, it would have not been necessary had the coach sat on his little hands and let her play.I honestly think she would have been ok with losing the match to her great opponent Osaka, but the issue is not the loss of the match, but the fact that because of a man, she gets punished by a man and then gets criticized by all other men as a woman unable to 'control her temper.' That's right, because unfortunately, some men are threatened by a strong woman .Serena, we love you, and know it was complete BS.	Woman	Gender - General	3/256	1.172

Sexism... Well let's see. Shes a woman playing against another woman . So while one woman 's cause was harmed by the ruling, another woman gained from it. Sooooooooo....no sexism there. Unless..... she is saying that it's unfair for a man to enforce the rules of the game if a woman breaks the rule. Of course these days it's sexist to be male and simply exist... I wonder if she will ever admit that she is wrong. I've noticed through the years that sometimes both men AND women have trouble in this area. Aggressive and competitive members of both sexes tend to avoid the admission of mistakes. I'm guessing that eventually her PR people will get through to her. THIS IS SO CLEAR!! 1) The men had an overwhelming majority of code violations overall in the tournament. 2) The 2nd, 3rd, etc code violation for any player DURING THE SAME MATCH will result in a more significant penalty (e.g. warning, point penalty, game penalty...a fact Serena knows "in her sleep!"). 3) Her behavior that "she doesnt cheat" is a thinly veiled lie as it implies she NEVER saw the NUMEROUS coaching signals from her box (Now, we all know how often players look to their box — pretty much after every point? Yeah, I'm gonna stand by that estimate). So, are we to believe that with her knowledge of the rules, her unavoidable awareness that her coach was signalling (which he immediately admitted post-match), her decision to NEVER GESTURE TO HER COACH TO STOP (Nadal has done this, for example, MANY, times), that her reactions to the 2nd and 3rd code violations were authentic, sincere, and surprising? Give me a break: this, IMO, would constitute an equal insult to Serena's knowledge of Grand Slam rules. 4) Finally, a logical overview of this situation is not a contrast of what men and women get code violations for. The data is clear: sexism cannot be supported by the statistical records of Serena 's generation including the ten years previous. THIS SITUATION IS SIMPLY AND ABSOLUTELY ABOUT A PLAYER "EARNING" MULTIPLE CODE VIOLATIONS IN A SINGLE MATCH — THUS THE PROGRESSIVE IMPACT OF THE PENALTIES. SHE KNEW THIS; SHE LOST CONTROL; SHE CHOSE A VERBAL ABUSE THAT HITS SQUARELY ON A SPECIFIED VIOLATION (LIAR, THIEF — RULE: "DISPARAGEMENT.....HONESTY"). SERENA IS A TERRIBLE LOSER!! Sore loser. She's pulled this act out before. She's crying sexism , thisism, thatism, the simple truth is she broke the rules. She feels that she can because. Men in today's tennis have been penalized for this type of behavior over 3 times as much: 26 to 12. As far as the McEnroe and Connor behavior of yesteryear? They didn't have the type of rules regarding the behavior. The current rules are BECAUSE of their behavior back then. It's all strawman arguments to excuse her egregious behavior. She's a spoiled rotten bully who was called out for her behavior. Simple as that. The sooner that she goes away the better.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/109	0.917

Franz-Dominik Imhof what the person was talking about was the fact that williams thought that she was losing due to the penalties and that she would have won if not for that (this is proven by the fact serena agreed to osaka when she apologised for winning). I think what he meant to say was egotistical but you cant just devoid the point of the comment because he said entitled, and plus maybe she is entitled on things outside of her game since she pulls out the sexism and racism card. UndertaleSkeleBros THANK GOD FOR SOMEBODY THINKING RATIONALLY. Serena's go to excuse is that 'people do way worse.' It's the same excuse she used in 2009. And her comment about male players doing the same thing or worse and getting away with it and not getting a game taken away is completely off kilter. First off, most males have short outbursts but they stop pretty quickly, she kept going on and on. Secondly, most male players yell about the call and they try to argue why they thought the call should have been different, Serena went straight to attacking the character of the umpire, most male players do not do that. And third, yeah make players do this and they DO get a warning, except usually it's not their third warning and the only reasons Serena got a game taken away is because it was her THIRD warning. Most men know when to stop so they don't have that happen and Serena has been pro for 20 years, she knows the rules. And last like you said, it doesn't matter what other umpires have done. She brings it up like men do things worse than her and don't get penalized and that because she got penalized it must be because of sexism but that does not being into account WHO is doing the penalizing. Ramos is known for being a stickler for the rules and he has always upheld them very strictly. There may be other umpires who are more relaxed and who would have let Serena's thing go, but that doesn't matter. What matters is consistency with each INDIVIDUAL umpire to tell if it's sexism. Ramos is extremely consistent. Serena has completely lost any respect I've ever had for her	Sexism	Gender - General	2/290	0.69

Serena Williams IS a champion woman's player, hands down. Her level of competitive drive, perseverance, and single -handedly changing the style of woman's tennis is nothing short of generational. Having said that, she was blatantly wrong in this case, and further tried to change the narrative so that the radical left media (and virtue signalling activists) would jump on board with the accusation of sexism . "Was there sexism at this year's us open? It's impossible to say." Ridiculous! Ramos has been completely consistent in how he has treated men and women. The fact that some other umpire may not have penalized some man is irrelevant. Also I have trouble with my temper playing games like tennis, but it would never cross my mind to say the sorts of things Serena said. Having a temper tantrum is bad enough, but verbal abuse is unconscionable. It doesn't matter if others have done worse. Serena had a point behind her accusations, but took it too far. However, I think the umpire could've of devoid from penalising Serena, since it was the final of a GS. Furthermore, Serena had a point behind the men and woman comparison when it comes to penalisation of verbal disputes. But, nevertheless, adding her child to defend her argument was completely uncalled for. I think Serena and the Umpire could learn from this mistake, and tie loose ends at both ends. But Naomi Osaka was the flower on the AAS unwilling to blossom, under the shade of Serena. We should forget the argument and focus on Naomi as she deserves the victory and the title, despite the major impact the stipulations around the on court has created....congrats Ms.Osaka. She isn't the only woman , from what I've seen the game is flooded with on court hysterics and hissy fits and verbal attacks against the ref. It is sexist in the sense that men get away with worse and more often. It is true that aggression and anger are more expected and accepted from men. If the rules are expected to be respected then the game needs to address this inconsistency. A rule needs to be upheld 100 of the time and currently its a farce because sometimes it is and sometimes it isn't. If Osaka was being coached throughout the match, then how on earth can only Serena be penalised? It isn't good enough to say that the ref didn't see it. Didn't he? Serena was counting on winning that 3.8 MILLION dollars. She and her coach would have done anything to win that money, including, taking the chance that they wouldn't get called out for coaching. With that much money on the line, they should have known that they were going to be scrutinized....both sides scrutinized. Nobody likes a sore loser, and it wasn't the judge that made you destroy your racquet honey, you did THAT out of frustration at losing the point. Serena has been the best. The greatest. wasn't she supposed to be playing this sport for years now? dear, you've had 2 violation calls already, you should have known what will come next if you don't (and she didn't) back down. sure, some players have said way worse things to umps before, and some don't get penalized. But what people fail to realize is that perhaps 1. the verbal abuse was their first offense (so they just get off with a warning as per rule), or 2. the verbal abuse, as mentioned in this video, were short outbursts that the ump was able to let go. On the other hand, Serena ran with her mouth for a good few minutes there before Ramos has had enough and called her 3rd violation. i'm all for fighting for equality, but please, let's not call something for what it isn't. As a world-class athlete, Serena should be the first to hold herself in high standards, because crying foul and saying, "why are there other [men] who can get away with worse but i can't?" for me is just lame . why even would you be committing the same violation as what those [men] did in the first place? We all witnessed the righteous, self-entitled tantrum of a narcissist blinded by rage. No one likes losing, some people feel they let themselves and others down, they feel deep disappointment and sadness. But when someone identifies one way or another with losing the way Serena did, there's a problem... That's when you HATE losing and you have to do something about it... I don't think it's any exaggeration to point out the potential for violence here... In fact this is something I read other females players talk about as being the reason they feel intimidated by her. As in "scared" and/or "guilty" for beating her. This is one of the classic dynamics created within the narcissist field/environment.I'll leave it there.. I'm just tired of seeing her vicious manipulations and people calling it something else...(afraid and intimidated they will be accused of being race motivated) Please, enough of "you wronged me and you owe me an apology" BS. Nope.. you cheated (amazing she used her daughter as a reason for never cheating and having impeccable character...) I mean, just priceless, and it couldn't have happened to a more manipulative FRAUD of a person; who wasted no time to accuse the umpire of being a "thief" (who was right to make the call in the first place) and threatened with taking his job away in future matches... There, the great Serena defined. I don't give a flying F— how many grand slams she won... So let me get this straight! Ramos hasn't fined men in the past for their foul mouths, but you state that Serena deserved her because she didn't back down! That in and of itself is a double standard! You're are judging an athletes interactions on nitpick points!

Serena didn't tell the umpire to go fuck himself, which several male players have admitted to and not gotten fined. Second, the umpire can decide to give a person a warning, a fine, give set or points or all three. In this case, he decided to give the tripple whammy. Meanwhile, when men play, it is business as usual and the male players can do what they want. I don't mind Ramos having a reputation for being a hardliner! What I take issue with is that he does it more to females than to males! That a player got away with the f bomb or worse is inconsequential in this argument if a person is watching the video. Second, Naomi may play for Japan, but she is also Haitian. She is the victim in this because she got fallout for Venus's poor sportsmanship and Ramos's sexist calls. That said, I watched the after match interviews with Naomi. I want to call Naomi's BS right here and now! Before I continue, I am not trying to make Naomi responsible for Serena's actions. Let's get this straight. However, what I saw at Naomi's press conference disturbed me. Naomi denied hearing or understanding what the debate was about! Nor did she make any comment about the situation or defend Serena for trying to help her out! WOW! You see Naomi is playing her Japanese kawaii card (kawaii means cuteness) while scheming over the fact that her father is Haitian. You see it's easier for her to do that because the majority make it so hard for people of color! When Naomi performed kawaii, she insulted Serena! Everything Serena is fighting for or has fought for, Naomi along with other players will benefit from. Case in point: Naomi is considered the victim, which should be. Yet, if the umpire association does indeed find Ramos has been unfair in his handling of matches, he along with others will get a clear message to clean up their acts. Speaking of umpire associations, I don't mind that the UA took supported Remos. That said, the UA should also make it a point to monitor their umpires to insure there is no misconduct on their part. Returning to kawaii, because Naomi plays her kawaii card, her voice is taken from her and she is made into a puppet of what the establishment wants: a person who simply plays tennis and does not demand anything from professional tennis associations who may or may not have her best interest in mind. By staying silent, Naomi may want to appear gracious, polite and sportsmanlike, but the truth is that she hurt women, especially Asian women by living the stereotype of what the public expects out of them: quiet, polite, obedient! Because of these things, the public is more accepting of her and empathizes with her despite the personal slight against Serena, who has been made public enemy number one in all this. I'd love to see what would happen if Naomi was playing for her father's country of Haiti or if Naomi had a bad day and openly argued with an umpire. Would the public be so understanding of Naomi whose homeland is the poorest country and has the highest poverty, AIDS and illiteracy rates? When I see Naomi walking around the ghettos of Haiti, giving tennis lessons, I'll be the first to

Serena was getting her ass beaten. Osaka had beaten her before. People forget that. So in her frustration Serena lashed out at everything. She played the female card, then victim card, then race card any card she could come up with. But bottom line she was out played. A sore loser is a sore loser. She knows the rules. She doesn't like the rules in tennis then go play golf. As for Trevor Noah stirring up the race card is just sad.	Race	Ethnicity - General	2/82	2.439

The whole fiasco is absurd. I really don't see any sexism evident. I wonder if the umpire was a woman Serena would have behaved the same way? She doesn't consider her verbal abuse towards a male umpire sexist. She made herself a loser in more ways than one & her opponent the winner in more ways than one. Even if Serena had been wronged, she completely mishandled the situation, or rather not at all. She has let herself down & set a poor example to her fans. WOW this video clearly explains all sides, was in-depth, showed the entirety of the situation, and addressed the incorrect sexist angle Serena decided to take, accurately. (Stephen A Smith made a good response video to this incident as well) I've done my own digging and reached the same conclusions this video made, when considering the strict umpire, the code violations, diminishing Osaka's historic victory, etc. I think if Serena was able to discern that the warning for cheating was inevitable, when the ump called it, she could've stayed more focused. I think in her situation I would've reacted the same, b/c I would feel mischaracterized and clearly deny something I'm not doing. But from this strict ump's view the coach made clear coaching signals and she even admitted to seeing a thumbs up. I don't believe Serena the tennis goat would rely on coaching, but the ump operated within the rules. The ump has that luxury to make that call, if she could've taken that as just a warning and moved on I think she would've maintained her composure. Also with that initial warning i think there's a clip where Serena and the ump came to an "Understanding", they both said they understood each other but I think Serena mistook that for the ump retracting the first warning. Which would explain why she got confused about the point awarded after racket abuse. She would've thought that her racket abuse, would be her first warning.This ump is a veteran, well known for being by-the-book, and because she did call him a thief, his third violation was correct. However, since every ump is different, one could argue that this ump could've let go of that 'thief comment' because that third violation would result in a game being awarded, in a Grand Slam final. Not only is that devastating but it rarely happens in Grand Slams, and I think for good reason. Stephen Smith also made a good point that an athlete prepares for the opponent and the ump. There have also been studies that talk about this 'uncontrollable rage' athletes can experience while in the game that may affect their behavior and performance. I think it is wrong/unprofessional for a professional athlete to succumb into this intense emotion, but it can also be very difficult to control this rage. Examples: losing in a video game and breaking your property or when Tyson bit off an ear. It think it starts when someone doesn't internalize their frustration, it can consume them. Its clear she was upset and retained her upset mentality. It made me think of times when I should've let go, instead of holding on to that state of being upset. But I think it's very difficult to realize that.It reminded me of when a teammate of mine in high school football messed up a play and fumbled the ball on a punt return. I've never seen him rage this way, he threw his helmet on the floor before getting off the field and yelled like a maniac. The coach immediately scolded him and benched him for that entire game.I think whether it's a verbal or physical meltdown it's still unprofessional, unsportsmanlike, and a lack of control over emotions from both men or women. Each sport deals with unsportsmanlike conduct their own way, so dont be comparing tennis to hockey.I think in this incident, it was a meltdown. With a physical aspect coming from racket abuse. The only reason I'm here is because the media backed her, wasted my time watching news with this frivolous racist and sexist crap. They are the ones pressing racism and sexism . Take those things out of the equation and she's just a bad sport. Nobody would pay attention. They do exactly what you are doing now - "Maybe you just hate Black people who wins"? Nobody minded her winning the previous 20 times. She didn't mind, either. Only when she was already down by a set and got a warning did she decide to throw a fit. Then she broke the rules repeatedly. That ref could have penalized her for a game stoppage the first time she appealed. Or the second. Or the third. He didn't. He only did it when she started insulting him. Maybe she knew she was going to lose and just put up a public struggle to win some support. Did that ever occur to you? As it was, she was losing even without the penalties. So what's your point? Serena is a baby, a big one & here is way: She is 36 something years old . She is suppose to be a veteran now in this sport. A veteran, yet on the field it was like Serena was the 20 year old & Osaka was the veteran. Her attitude was appalling. Having this kind of behaviour at this point in her career is just low. Heard Osaka looks up to Serena to. Is she still a fan after Serena did this? I would not be. Made the crowd turn on her & booing her when she got the award? Serena says "She stands for women"? yeah right. She did not do much, to support a half japanese-black young tennis player, who looks up to her. Yes, Serena is an unprecedented shame for all women, mothers, black people, tennis players and Americans.Additionally, if you read more carefully, Ramos was strict to Djokovic, Nadal & Kyrgios, they all received penalties too but were clever enough to shut up & stop making code violations. They did not rant, threaten, abuse. And they certainly would not go to extreme lengths to justify their misbehaviour afterwards. We also need to bear in mind that top athletes have plenty of psychological preparations & they are well in control of their emotions, that is why they can perform on that level, which implies that it is not just Serena's bad temper what we've seen, but her deliberate display of power. Serena has had an outstanding career and accomplished many things. But she is also getting on in years. You can't win against the 20 year olds forever. The fact that she is still so competitive at her age is a testament to her outstanding athleticism.But I don't see how a penalty could have been sexist. That was out of bounds. It was a woman's game and Osaka is a woman . The call perhaps could be construed as racist perhaps, but with Osaka also being a person of color that would also have been quite a stretch.Calling someone racist or sexist in today's world is one of the deepest insults you can level at them, especially if it isn't true. It's worse than liar or thief for sure, both of which also seem to be unfounded accusations she leveled at the ref.The original call of coaching might not have been necessary but what was the penalty? 1 "point"? I'm not sure exactly what that means but I think it would be equivalent to losing one serve. It should not have been a big deal. Then she smashed her racket, which is unprofessional and cost her another point. But calling the ref a thief, a liar, sexist, and threatening his livelihood was simply over the top.And anyway even without the penalties Osaka probably would have won. You can't win them all, not even if your name is Serena.Serena was gracious towards Osaka afterwards though, and that goes a long ways towards me being able to forgive the whole thing as just an outburst due to stress. She should probably publicly apologize for calling the ref sexist though.	Age, Racist, Woman	Age - General, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	4/280	1.429

That's proof 1 and also of your stupidity, there is no such country called America, it's a continent and here's where the ugly or arrogant "American" part come in, you believe you own the continent or should own it, and tried to, at least the north half in the war of 1812, when we kicked your ass and burnt down your capitol (Canadian if you haven't guessed). Speaking of war, here's a little joke that also explains why the world thinks of you as Ugly "Americans". The rest of the world gave shit to the US for joining WW II late and that pissed them of so much that to ever avoid that kind of criticism again, they've started every war since...lol. And finally the latest in a long list of things your country does to make the rest of the world hate you, you elected a racist , sexist, homophobic bully, who according to John Kerry on Real Time last night (Sept/14/2018) and I along with the rest of the world agree with, has the maturity of an 8 year old boy with the insecurity of a teenage girl. Dennis Robertson I agree with your point. It's just funny the way you said United Statian when we're called American when spoken of in a collective. I see why you see things the way you do, but Canada and Mexico are not part of the United States. We're still American. We're called the United States or the AMERICAS. United States was the original "America". So we're American. If spoken of in a collective sense continentally, Canada, Mexico and United States make up NORTH America. So they are called NORTH Americans. Just as Brazilian and Venezuelan people are Venezuelan and Brazilian separately, but when spoken of collectively combined, they're SOUTH Americans because of the continent. Just as South Africa is its own seperate country in Africa, but still part of the African continent. Make sense?	African	Ethnicity - Black	1/134	0.746

Serena owes the umpire an apology. She was a disgrace with her whining and carrying on. What an absolute embarrassment of a freak show Serena was. Tried playing the gender card saying that this is only happening bc she's a woman. It was her job to keep track of her penalties. She said that her coach just did a thumbs up and went on a ridiculous clueless rant berating the ump. Then the coach admits he was coaching and the replay showed that the coach was doing a lot more than a thumbs up. Strike 1 and a warning. Then she smashes her racket. 2nd offense and a point is awarded to her opponent. Then she gets all uppity and again starts berating and mouthing off to the ump culminating in calling the ump a thief. The ump had had enough of princess serena's mouthing off and rightly gave her strike 3 for verbal abuse. Game penalty awarded to Naomi. It was serena's job to know that she had 2 strikes and that the 3rd would mean a game penalty but no... she's still all uppity and makin' a jagoff outta herself. She starts blathering about how she's a champion on the court and a champion of issues away from the court. Translation: When she's done with tennis she wants to be some kinda ridiculous left wing mouthpiece, yawnnnnnn.... Go fuck yourself you disgrace. You stole the moment from Naomi with your childish tirades where you were WRONG on every aspect and point. Naomi crushed Serena and woulda beat her anyway but jesus christ what an embarrassment. Is it just me or what but it seems like all of Serena's game that she played up till now...many if not nearly all of her opponents looks more feminine? I don't think I'm racist since it's been proven that blacks or rather people of African decent tend to possess more athletic prowess than other race in general when it comes to activities being physical in nature. Yes...evolution does play a part as Africa is a harsh place therefore the people must evolved to adapt. She's blessed to have such prowess and wasn't expecting much to her current opponent when she started realizing she was starting to lose and that's when she basically used the "sexist" card against the empire. Osaka is half Haitian which is of African decent therefore she also possess some prowess in the field, add that to her age and she really is in her prime. Serena you are a sore loser simple as that! Arguing with the ref generally doesnt give you a penalty but arguing after every single game would give you one, most players dont do this, and even less go as further as to actually threat and insult the ref. I dont know what andy roddick said that was worst but if it was and the umpire didnt penalize then it was a bad call, and djokovic was penalized by ramos multiple times so i dont know what he is even arguing about. Good job. Fair and straight to the point. Any unbiased person can see whose behavior is in question here. Out of control behavior has no gender, race or nationality . It happens all the time, but more frequently from some who thinks he or she can get away with it. She was at home, so she felt she was in charge. She played a victim so she could get her supporters to back her up. The lauder them became the more she increased her barrage against a man who was just doing his job. A very good job we must say! Give this real man the $17,000.00 they collected from the abuser. She went home with more than a million. The penalty to be effective it needs to cause a pain in the pocket of the offender. The penalty amount should be a substantial percentage of what they are taking home. That will stop or decrease this abusive manipulation of the game (which is a form of cheating). This behavior is being used by some dishonest players not only in tennis but other sports as well. Humans will push the limits as long as they are allowed to. With all the attention they are getting for doing what is wrong, they won't be motivated to change. Can we honestly blame them for pushing the rules, if they are being allowed to? The decline in our society's morals is creating more opportunities for this barrage to be tolerated, encouraged, excused, and insanely justified. As one general famously said once, 'NUTS'. Serena was upset for two reasons. One: She was getting her butt kicked and was on the verge of losing anyway. Two: She was upset because her and her coach was caught cheating. She claimed she didn't see the coaching yet when she approached the umpire she told him just because her coach has two thumbs up that doesn't mean he is coaching. So that should tell you right there she was lying. The fact of the matter is she is a poor loser. She becomes emotionally unstable like a three year old brat , when she is losing. No. Her coach later admitted he was in fact coaching her with his hand gestures. So she knew exactly what he was doing. And guess what...so did the umpire. But to cover herself and her coach from embarrassment, she had to deny the accusations by attacking the umpire's judgement. In other words..."How dare you catch us cheating. I won't allow you to embarrass me in front of the world, so I have to protect my image and integrity by attacking yours. I have to accuse you of being ignorant and bias. The fact of the matter is, he has his hands moving from side to side in parallel encouraging her to move forwards and attack. However, stupid fat bints like Marion Bartoli have said there is no way he could have seen him which is obviously a load of bollocks as Williams interpreted his signal (according to her) as a thumbs up of encouragement. Why are so many people so hell-bent on denying the existence of sexism ? This video even admits that "like many great athletes, Serena Williams has a temper." The match went the way it went, Serena lost, and that part's not up for debate. I followed Serena from a very long time... If u think she did all this becoz she is losing, i think you should have watched the match, game penalty came when the score was serena 3-4 osaka and serena was the one to serve and the penalty gave osaka a game lead that means serena lost the opportunity to equal the score on her serve, if penalty is not there, osaka needs to break serena serve to get the match. I am saying all these, because i have seen serena coming back even at the last moments to claim the matches. I am saying all these because i have seen djokovic, murray saying things to umpire but never got any penalty. So i think her point is very clear. BTW i am not american, i am an indian and i support serena not because what she won, because of her oncourt grace. If you don't support serena that's absolutely fine but don't say bullshit things to her, because serena lost the match. Even if she won the match you guys would have told that she distracted osaka with her tantrums and won. Anyhow you guys will not say good things to serena, because you don't like her. Despicable behavior from Serena and the crowd. Have watched and played tennis for decades. Arguing a ruling (even passionately) is allowed in both the ATP and WTA, however umpire name calling crosses the line and is not tolerated in either, nor am I aware of any sport that tolerates it. Yes you have seen top players, Djokovic , Nadal,..., as well as female players, argue a call without penalty, but derogatory name calling is an instant red card (violation) for both. Carlos Ramos actually let it go on longer than I have seen some umpires tolerate it. Likely the greatest female player of all time. A good sport and honest? No! Shame of Serena, shame on the booing crowd. It is also interesting to me that nobody called out the USTA (who run the event) for breaking the rules and seating Serena 17th when see was actually 26th in order to protect her from losing in the early rounds to the top seeds. Serena brought our Sport into Disrepute. No ifs. No buts. To outsiders, we must look so incredibly dysfunctional if our Grand-Slam tournament can look as shambolic as it did by the hands of one single player. The essence of this sport, "Sportsmanship" died a miserable death on American soil by the hands of an American. Didn't anybody tell Serena "not to shit on your own door step"? Pity Mouratoglu didn't learn how to hand signal that message. He would have saved us and poor Naomi much anguish. It has taken Serena decades of hard work, tenacity and professionalism to build her reputation. Is it worth losing it all in Crazy moments like this? She will reflect upon this episode with regret I'm sure for years to come but will need to look long and hard at elements in her team and their destructive nature. I don't believe that Serena is calling sexism because she doesn't want to admit she was losing... I believe that she thinks she is SO GREAT that she couldn't possibly be losing without there being some form of discrimination. Obviously, there is some sexism involved by male players not being punished, but you can't use that excuse to clear your own wrong doings. Yes she is above the sports because she is The Serena Williams. No rules could be applied to her because she is The Serena Williams. She was fighting for women's rights because she is the chosen one. She wasn't bullying him, neither did she threaten him because she is a classy woman with character. She didn't pull out race card, women card, mother card, because she pulled out the truth card symbolising feminism. She wasn't upset or frustrated because someone is going to beat her twice in a row. She is a mother and that's why she could never cheat and couldn't be wrong ever. She is not a liar but her coach is. She didn't steal Naomi's moment because she was fighting for her. Both Williams sisters get practically in every match illegal coached; this is a FACT! Everybody in the circus knows this! How ever, she started this episode or theater first to break her opponent's rhythm = very unsportive and unfair. Then she lost temper and went against the chairman because he did NOT let himself intimidate, what is the general purpose of the "Williams show"; to intimidate people incl. the opponent on the other side of the net! Katy O'Neil I agree overall with your comments. The remarks made by Williams don't stand up to scrutiny. The sexism charge is bogus. Look at female tennis players getting the same prize money as men for working fewer hours. Last year a male Italian player got a far worse fine than Williams for his own misconduct with a suspended grand slam ban hanging over him after it. In 1990 John McEnroe was disqualified from the Australian open for his own misconduct. At the US Open far more code violations were given against men than women. Williams was not fighting for all women everywhere when she threatened a female line judge before her disqualification against Kim Clijsters there in 2009. She should have got her focus back after the first code violation and used her own experience to get back in the match against an inexperienced opponent. Instead she lost her discipline destroying any chance of a comeback. You cannot do that in any sport. Naomi Osaka deserved her victory and the way the presenters and the crowd treated her was a disgrace. In mitigation Williams did not take any of her anger out on Osaka but the poor atmosphere she stoked led to this.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/204	0.49

Making this about 'sexism' was a big mistake on Williams' part. Although it seems more likely from the evidence that she was being coached, there is still a large grey area with regard to that. It's entirely possible that the coach did it on his own, and she didn't use it, instead, realizing how it could be misconstrued, she openly admitted what the coach was doing. On the other hand, she may have been lying to cover it up. Who knows. What is justified is the second penalty. If implying 'dishonesty' about an 'official' is classified as verbal abuse, then she certainly did violate that one. Perhaps she was being treated unfairly at first, but not because of sexism. She just had a disagreement with the official on a judgement call, which happens all the time in sports, but instead of quietly and begrudgingly accepting the decision, she made a big scene and retaliated verbally. That is on her, not the official. Making this about sexism after the fact removes any sympathy I may have had for her. If instead she owed up to the facts and tried to be as accepting of the possibility of how she may be wrong, and then defended her actions, that would look a lot better on her part. Instead, she's being childish and just accusing the person she disagrees with of being a bad person (sexist). That's how a child responds to speech they don't like. Rather than respectfully disagreeing, they call each other names.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/252	0.794

I think he gave a very fair analysis. I don't know if calling the umpire a thief was what tipped it over the edge for him, but after she started threatening the umpire with "you will never work on the same court as me again", I really wasn't surprised she got the code violation.The point penalty for racket abuse was correct. If you totally break your racket it pretty much always gets you a code violation, for both men and women. If you slam your racket and don't "break" it, they'll usually let those slide. So that's why sometimes players slam their racket and then keep playing with it for another couple of points.And breaking your racket isn't very unusual. But normally players never break their racket after already having 1 code violation because nobody wants a point penalty.When Serena slammed her racket, she 100 knew that she was going to get a point penalty (being the 2nd code violation). Then she wanted the umpire to go back and remove the 1st code violation so she wouldn't get the point penalty. That literally never happens in tennis. She knew this. It's not really fair of her to freak out about that.So her getting that point penalty had nothing to do with sexism . She got that penalty because just lost a game that made it look like she would lose the match and she was pissed.Also, I don't think she should come out looking positive because she tried to salvage the ceremony that she ruined by creating a huge drama right before she was about to lose. Serena received a game penalty for verbal abuse on her 3rd violation. The rules are as follows: 1st violation = warning, 2nd violation = point penalty, 3rd violation = game penalty. Most players (men or women) do not reach a 3rd violation; they control their temper after the 1st or 2nd while Serena did not. For her to blame sexism is disingenuous and childish. It is not sexism it is racism . How is it racism you may ask as both are colored players? I would argue that in the racism hierarchy blacks are at the bottom...I am an Indian and I know how an Indian (brown) is racist towards blacks....My argument is simple...IF BOTH THE COACHES WERE COACHING WHY WARN SERENA ALONE? WHY NOT BOTH? THE ANSWER IS SIMPLE: THE UMPIRE EITHER DOES NOT LIKE SERENA (BLACK) OR JUST WANT ATTENTION.... It is unfortunate to see such behavior from Serena. This behavior only makes her look as a very bad loser, very weak person, with this episode the respect of her fans and people in general had for her is jeopardized and it will change. The rules apply to everyone, including Serena Williams. The fact that she can't accept that these rules are to be respected is something that she totally disregarded, I though she knew better. It is clear that coaching is not allowed in Gran Slams, period!!! Even Chris Evert while broadcasting this match, said that Serena was watching her coach when he was sending signals to Serena to move to the net. Besides that it doesn't matter if Serena saw the coach coaching her, if the coach is coaching even if the player doesn't see him/her, this is going to get the player a penalty.Who does she think she is? I think Serena is the one with double standard rather than the empire. If she portraits herself as a super champion, an advocate for equality, etc. etc. why can she not back all this up with fairness and intelligence? Why does she expect to be treated differently than any other player, male or female and hide herself in all kind of ridiculous causes that some of them don't merit to even be mentioned because they simply don't make any sense. She is simply an arrogant and weak person trying to convince the world differently. I am a mother of a daughter and son and it was pathetic and embarrassing to see her behavior. Not a role model at all or someone to admire regardless of of her victories, Serena is simply someone too hungry for another Grand Slam and she couldn't bear the possibility that she was going to lose and she took it up on the umpire. Who is the unfair person here, Serena or the Umpire? The rules are there to be applied. I feel sorry for the umpire who is told to apply the rules, but specially the WTA and ATP are backing up Serena, tennis fans are also very disappointed at these organizations for not keeping the sport with high moral standards and double standards like in this situation, they need to put it this together ASAP before they lose more credibility. In a nutshell, it is all about Serena. She didn't think for a minute that she was ruining the entire match, this includes, the real Champion Naomi Osaka, all the spectators, all the fans in the entire world, the tennis world, the young tennis players to name some,I find this absolutely irresponsible and acceptable. Then she tried to console Naomi during the ceremony which is a joke. Serena has received so much credit for this in circumstances that Serena created this horrific situation, but so many blind people are out there that can't see this clear because a lot of them don't know anything about the rules in Grand Slams or they just can't think objectively and without emotions.Serena, this is for you, it is time to retire, there are new gracious champions coming, i.e. Naomi Osaka!!! Want me to create double standards out of thin air? Watch me.Imagine that, instead of Serena, you had Djokovic at the US Open final. He receives the same punishment from, say Louise Engzell (Swedish female umpire in case you don't know). He proceeds to react the same exact way than Serena. Smashes his racket, shouts at her that he deserves an apology, calls her a thief and so and so. Then he calls the tournament director and cries that what she's done is unfair. Now please tell me who in their right mind is going to defend him?It's easy to yammer about sexism as soon as a man punishes a woman for violating the rules. Michael Tapia I see that you're nor getting it. I'll try to explain one more time, but that's it. Her temper is not what causes the flack she get in various aspects of her life. She gets it because of who she is and where she comes from. I can understand why she exploded the way she did; her character was questioned. It had nothing to do with her losing. She has lost before. That is nothing new to her. Also, she showed Naomi love because, for some reason, the crowd wasn't. She repeatedly stated how well of a player Naomi is. It's not about being a sore loser. It's about someone's character being questioned.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/115	1.739

ME She gets all the "flack" that she gets because she brings it upon herself with her petty feminazi ways of depending on double standards to justify her shortcomings and blaming it on society. In this instance alone she lied about not being coached because even her coach admitted to it, she tried using sexism as a smokescreen to blame her lost on the judge, consequently creating a spectacle all by herself that stole Naomi's hard earned moment of glory and she has tried using the race card in the past when it wasnt warranted like she tried using the gender card this time. So no your technicalities to justify her behavior are pure bs and that's what you dont want to understand. Nope. All I said was that I can understand why she did what she did. I also stated that she was in the wrong, though. Can you draw a map of that mental leap you just made? Comparing this situation to terrorist attacks and pedophilia/molestation is a huge reach. I can agree that there are so-called feminists who use the term to hide behind in order to oppress others, but I don't feel like this is one of those cases. We are going to have to agree to disagree, but coming up with hypotheticals that will never happen, me understanding terrorism and pedophilia/molestation, to try to justify your stance is absurd and derails the discussion. ME It is an example of people trying to justify actions that clearly wrong. What is Wrong is WRONG no matter the seriousness of the matter. Also, gotta love how easy it is to get technical when it comes to defending the wrongdoings of a woman for instance it is so easy to get technical to defend Killary, Serena or Argento but yet so hard to get technical to defend Trump, Weinstein or any other man in the wrong.	Woman	Gender - General	1/79	1.266

ME Prime example can be Andy Murray when he called the very same judge stupid and got penalized and still didnt go half as far into his rant and berating the judge and nobody ever dare get technical or try to justify his actions when it happen. The rules were simply the rules, Andy Murray deserved what he got and nobody try to sympathize with Andy Murray or question the judges decision. Why? Because Andy Murray is a man and he has to learn how to live and die by his decisions and learn how to be responsible for his mistakes. So if Andy Murray has to be responsible for his mistakes so does Serena because EQUALITY said so. The bottomline is that what is wrong is simply wrong no matter if it's a man or a woman no ifs or buts.	Nobody, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/142	2.113
Again, I said that I understood where she was coming from, but I do think she went over the line. What part of that do you not understand? A person who sped through a red light wouldn't/shouldn't be treated the same or receive the same punishment as someone who killed someone. Point. Blank. Period. It's things like this that make me criticize the left. How is this fair or right? It seams every time we victimize someone it ends up hurting someone else yet people always double down on who the victim is and attack the other person. It's especially true when we hear of sexism , racism or rape violations. These are extremely serious issues and we should tread lightly when accusing people of these things. Here in Australia, you can go to jail for discrimination and can get up to 3 years in prison for insulting someone based on race and of course you can get years and years in prison where you'll be beaten daily if you have a rape conviction. What I am saying is, no we obviously shouldn't blame the apparent victim but we should be listening to both sides of the story and sympathizing and empathizing with both parties. If we don't, it'll end up like White Australia or Jim Crow america where one woman has the power to have a man lynched for looking at her wrong. John Smith: Good! Any unbiased person can see whose behavior is in question here. Out of control behavior has no gender, race, nationality or excuses. It happens all the time, but more frequently from some who thinks he or she can get away with it. She was at home, so she felt she was in charge. She played a victim so she could get her supporters to back her up. The lauder them became the more she increased her barrage against a man who was just doing his job. A very good job we must say! Give this real man the $17,000.00 they collected from the abuser. She went home with more than a million. The penalty to be effective it needs to cause a pain in the pocket of the offender. The penalty amount should be a substantial percentage of what they are taking home. That will stop or decrease this abusive manipulation of the game (which as a form of cheating). This behavior is being used by some dishonest players not only in tennis but other sports as well. Humans will push the limits as long as they are allowed to. With all the attention they are getting for doing what is wrong, they won't be motivated to change. Can we honestly blame them for pushing the rules, if they are being allowed to? The decline in our society's morals is creating more opportunities for this barrage to be tolerated, encouraged, excused, and insanely justified. As one general famously said once, 'NUTS'. Koala Bare No, no you won't, because the men that it's happened with from this umpire were different scenarios. The thing is that they had out bursts, yet they were warned once, and then they STOPPED!!! She was warned repeatedly and was given a chance to cool down, however she doubled down and continued, so that's the reason. She was DEFINITELY CHEATING, her coach even admitted to it so that's why she was docked. Yes, there was 100 sexism taken place, yet again it was on Serena's behalf. Basically she was acting like a child, cheating, being reckless by breaking her racket, lied, and continued to break the rules by abusing the umpire! Male players may indeed have said worse things to their umpires, but how many of them did so after already receiving 2 previous code violations in the same match?This is not a case of sexism or gender inequality. It is a story of a sore loser and someone that clearly doesn't know when to STFU.All professional athletes know that a referee/umpire decision is never rescinded during a game, as it would undermine the authority of the referee/umpire. The correct way to deal with what you may feel is an unjust penalty is to follow the official appeals procedure laid out in the rules of your game.Take your first penalty on the chin, brush it off and carry on like a professional. Then appeal after the match if it means that much to you.It is extremely offensive and disrespectful of Serena Williams to claim sexism for this case, due to the fact that she truly did break the rules and received fair and just penalties according to the rules she agreed to play by.By claiming sexism , she is trivialising real sexism and gender inequality in the world and playing down all the experiences of women who have to deal with REAL sexism on a daily basis.No woman should be standing up for Serena's behaviour, it was unacceptable and playing the gender card simply took her petulance to the next level.You broke the rules, now " woman " up and take your medicine. I would love to see Serena Williams plays against a Goat because Goats don't give a damn about her PMS mood swings and Immaturity.What made me very Angry is the fact that Serena Williams has just robbed her fan, Naomi Osaka of her chance of a lifetime to compete with her in a grand event by throwing EMO tantrums like a Spoilt Child, threatening the Umpire and demanding for special treatments and privileges to Cheat, all because she is a GOAT.Therefore she is the Thief, not the tennis umpire Carlos Ramos.And what is even more Disgraceful about Serena Williams is that now she has become a Coward by trying to hide behind Political Correctness and Gender Cards instead of taking full responsibility for her own Failures and "Deranged Tennis Syndrome".By going SJW and turning her own Farce into issues of " Sexism ", Serena Williams has not only prove herself to be disrespecting the sports, but also Insulting other Sportswomen like Naomi Osaka who worked very Hard, never complain and Sacrifice Everything for the sports they love.But the most Stupid thing is that Billie Jean King even came out to support her Orwellian Nonsenses and Hypocrisy.In conclusion, Serena Williams' Immature EMO outbursts were clearly Not "Fight for Equality", but "Fight for Irrationality".Just like Colin Kaepernick's kneel protests aren't for fighting discriminations, but to support Slavery.And I can see why the Left PCs and SJWs are going to destroy the Western Civilizations and the Whole World too. first of all, the japanese player deserved to win. congrats to her. she should be celebrating.this isn't a clear cut black-and-white case. yes serena did violate the rules, BUT the umpire isn't consistent in his calls. it's not fair to portray serena like she's nothing but a sore loser.put yourself in her shoes. it's really not fair that other athletes basically get free passes or minor taps on the wrist, or even just warnings while she gets called out in a major way. even if she wasn't dealing with the umpire with decorum, i think it's still understandable that top athletes would get all fired up when they feel that the rules apply only to them and not everyone else.to everyone saying she is a sore loser, i don't see it that way. she even said that naomi osaka was good at the match and that she deserved to win.also, why do they refer to the umpire as a "stickler for rules" when he literally isn't consistent with other athletes who have openly said they don't get punished?what she's being ungracious about is with the umpire, not her opponent. nuance matters. this isn't black-and-white. She had already lost and she knew it. Naomi owned her in Miami, and she owned her Saturday too. She was plain and simply outclassed by Osaka in every possible way. This was a drama queen, intent on painting herself a victim in an attempt to save face. Any defense of this on court bully with an extensive history as such, is pathetic. Serena knows the rules, and the rules were applied fairly. In no other sport would the application of penalties be brought into question, you break those rules, you're penalized accordingly. Fact is, it had no effect on the outcome of the match, she was already dead in the water. The chair actually showed far more patience than he was obligated to by the rules of the game. Serena was to be the loser, and by her own actions, she's just a bigger one now. She was a disgrace! For that matter, so are all of the people defending the indefensible. chupei cycling No, it does make sense. Forget about the game itself, it's irrelevant. The point of sexism can be made and entertained when the context of the accusation is about a woman talking back and verbally abusing a man and the man not having thick skin with the woman when the man has, in recent incidents prior, ignored harsher verbal abuses from other men... Serena has noted this ref has taken worse words from men and done nothing but she calls him a thief at worst and loses the game. For obvious reasons however, her claims are not entirely sound and entertaining the accusation is nothing but a political agenda move. So yeah, it's not entirely irrational and has nothing to do with Osakas existence at all. Hahah ok. Next time it has to be a female. Oh and a black female. This avoids sexism and racism arguments, oh and the ref needs to have a history of giving penalties for every type of penalty on the book, and not just to males but also women and black women in particular, also of ref that... well you get the picture. You can't blame Serena Williams for her raging while losing - steroids can have menacing emotional side effects. Yes, "'roid rage" is real. Researchers have documented several cases of violent, aggressive behavior associated with anabolic-androgenic steroid use, even athletes with no prior history of violence (according to a paper published in 2010 in the journal Hormones and Behavior). Check out Serena's workout schedule - Jazzercise and running won't produce that body. Serena Williams is often called not just the greatest female athlete but also the greatest athlete period (what a joke). They said the very same thing about Marion Jones who finally admitted to doping. When Serena's coach admitted to cheating because "everyone does it," it sounded a lot like drug use - when you consider the people most likely to have an ADD diagnosis are Olympic athletes (so they can take uppers). Sharapova was caught. Nobody questioned whether Joyner was roided - just too much muscle in too short a time. Cox and White were caught. Thomas's facial hair was too obvious. It's not just the Russians. The other issue is once you start lying, becoming pathological is the natural end result. The claim men have done the same is not accurate. They're rages were short - they were all able to get control of themselves. It was so sad that beating her had to come with an apology from her opponent - not fair. Repeatedly, Trevor claims we should allow athletes whatever is common but then he chokes down almost saying "drugs." Google NFL "excessive rage." Trevor lies. The issue for many is their only source of news is comedians pandering to their biases. Serena did not get the penalty for her childishly slamming her racket but for her non-stop verbal abuse. Sounds like every person to get a speeding ticket like ever - why didn't everyone get one? It was not "amazing," only disgusting and juvenile. Serena has illegally threatened refs before. Richard Stead said "Tucson Jim you are dead right . STEROIDS."There have been all kind of rumors circulating around men in many sports over the years and even on rare occasions a few women (like Joyner)... why never Queen Serena? Doesn't her completely closed workouts further raise suspicion? We readily accept that men behave poorly but we refuse to suggest that women might ever be held accountable. Serena admits to seeing her coach but pretends she didn't understand the obvious sign to play closer to the net saying it was a "thumbs up" BUT then later lied saying she never saw him. People are saying the ref was incompetent (he wasn't) for going overboard when she called him a "thief" - it was for failing to ever stop her silly tantrum. Trevor's suggesting the problem was destroying her racket is a bold faced lie. He was there - he knows. At no time was she able to control herself like an adult. She uses the victim troupe women have been using forever. I'm a woman, I have a child, won't you rescue me? One might suggest it's unfair to blame Serena since girls are raised to be drama queens. There is nothing more pathetic than when Naomi Osaka was forced to apologize for beating Queen Serena. Shame on the mob for not allowing her to have her moment of glory. :-(And again, just look at real woman Naomi Osaka's body. My mother got a physics degree from Duke with my dad (and got better grades) and was easily able to get a better paying job than he even in the late 1940s. However, they couldn't afford to buy a home so my 5'2 mom volunteered to build it herself (eventually winning the Delco Home award in 1965). She could easily carry four cinder blocks at a time while my 6'4" Navy Commander dad gave himself a hernia trying to carry one. Mom ended working in construction for the next decade. I once saw two larger youths attempt to rob her - she had them both on the ground in seconds. Her body didn't look anything like Serena's. Get real. You are the first person to affirm such an opinion makes sense - I don't get why. I honestly believe women could compete with men in sports. There's no doubt mom could have taken my dad. Bruce Lee proved size doesn't matter. Women just aren't willing to make the same effort. Listen to the other female tennis players talking about how lifting weights would be too much effort... like the male tennis players do. It's the same with surgeons - there's no sexism just women raised with a more "healthy" life work balance. And oh, studies confirm that just like the guy who claims to do "it" the most usually doesn't at all (and doesn't even like it), those who scream "I never cheat" the loudest are cheating the most often. The Freakonomics statisticians showed the most corrupt people are those never held accountable, and by profession K-12 teachers are most likely to lie, cheat, and steal.	Nothing, Sexism, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	4/519	0.771

Stevia Sugar: Well said! Any unbiased person can see whose behavior is in question here. Out of control behavior has no gender, race or nationality . It happens all the time, but more frequently from some who thinks he or she can get away with it. She was at home, so she felt she was in charge. She played a victim so she could get her supporters to back her up. The lauder them became the more she increased her barrage against a man who was just doing his job. A very good job we must say! Give this real man the $17,000.00 they collected from the abuser. She went home with more than a million. The penalty to be effective it needs to cause a pain in the pocket of the offender. The penalty amount should be a substantial percentage of what they are taking home. That will stop or decrease this abusive manipulation of the game (which as a form of cheating). This behavior is being used by some dishonest players not only in tennis but other sports as well. Humans will push the limits as long as they are allowed to. With all the attention they are getting for doing what is wrong, they won't be motivated to change. Can we honestly blame them for pushing the rules, if they are being allowed to? The decline in our society's morals is creating more opportunities for this barrage to be tolerated, encouraged, excused, and insanely justified. As one general famously said once, 'NUTS'. Everyone must be held to the same standards and follow the same rules, or the standards and the rule are completely worthless. You see how social justice is always being exploited for a person's personal benefit? Notice how it's being exploited by corporations to turn a profit? Social justice has become cheap and superficial, and that's why society is doing the exact opposite of becoming a better place for everyone. Guess who's greatly enjoying the social instability and cultural degeneracy of the West? China and Russia. We make it way too easy for them to manipulate us. I've a friend who experimented with it, and it's really not hard to get an internet mob of hundreds to attack an individual or group for absolutely no reason at all. Their greatest achievement in the game of social engineering was to persuade a black rights Facebook group that the Jews were really behind the Atlantic Slave Trade and everything that followed. By now a few of them have probably adopted extremist ideologies and have become fervent anti-Semites. Ez Pz. Social justice has become a kind of market, and it's also become a kind of social credit. That's a pretty shallow attack on someones character. It's more a by the books technicality. plus you've just made an excuse for athletes. Plenty of people have stressful jobs, that doesn't mean you can blow up on people. If anything, that's less stress for Serena, she doesn't need to win to make rent, or keep her job, or provide for herself. The coach can send a signal. Who is to say if the player saw it? Every player can say, I never saw a signal. So, if a coach is spotted sending signals it has to be asserted the player saw it. This prevents the I Did Not See Any Signals. Everyone does it is not excuse. The fact the U.S. Open does not allow it is another battle for some other day. Persoally I'd love to see the players get real time coaching. It could make for some great tennis.Serena Williams kept stating she is not a cheater. The chair umpire could have told her that's not the issue. The issue is what her coach did. The rules require the player to bear the discipline. That may sorted it.Next up. We are all human and far from perfect. People will lose their temper. To believe they won't is crazy . Even someone as successful as Serena Wiliams is allowed to lose her cool.Finally, yes Serena is successful and wealthy. She is also 36 and trying to set a record. Time is not on her side. Well we all know Serena knew she was caught getting coached, otherwise it's impossible for her to know if her coach was giving her 'just a thumbs up'. So let's put it this way; When Serena gets paid a million bucks for being the runner up, will she cry sexism ? Women play much less than the men and yet they're paid the same in tennis. Will Serena give back a part of her money and say it's sexist towards men? I think we know the answer.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/86	1.163

KappaW a feminist is different to a sjw . Feminism is based on the notion that everyone is equal. I don't quite understand how Serena is depicted as a sjw just because of this one incident and the fact that she didn't understand that the umpire is strict to every tennis player. Making assumptions that Serena is a 'man-hating sexist' is ridiculous. I understand that she might appear that way because she called Carlos a thief, but that is totally unrelated to gender if you recall the 2009 us open incident (she threatened the lineswoman and called her way worse).	Gender	Gender - General	1/101	0.99
+Taylor - Serena isn't a SJW. Serena is a MTF. Serena wasn't out there playing for women's rights or her/his daughter. Serena was out there for the money. Serena didn't just have a baby because MTFs cannot have children you have to have a uterus and ovaries to have a baby. The baby was either adopted or is a surrogate courtesy of her husband's sperm. MTFs (and WTM) do not age well. Serena is 36 and the estrogen isn't working any longer. So each year Serena (and Venus) are reverting back into the males that they were when they were born. Unfortunately, they've had so much plastic surgery done with breast and buttocks and who knows what else, that this will not end very pretty. Can't you tell by looking at Serena's huge skull? Her skull didn't look like that when she was a teenager. Look at the eyebrow ridge, the slanted forehead and jaw line. Women do not have the kind of arm and leg massive skeletal muscle structure that Serena has. Can you think of any other woman tennis player that was that huge? Hell, she's bigger than most of the men! Serena is really pissed that the gig is up. I'd be pissed too. Serena and Venus never had a choice in the matter. Their father into the worship of the baphomet and he sacrificed both his two sons for wealth. He said as much in a magazine. He wanted out of Compton but was poor. So he sacrificed Serena and Venus to the baphomet. They were given estrogen from a very young age (Just like Shiloh Pitt is being sacrificed.) Serena and Venus were castrated before puberty and their penis was made into a "vagina." Their father is a bastard and should be put in prison. I'm sure Serena was very jealous of the beautiful young woman , Naomi Osaka she/he played against and that might actually be the reason Serena played so poorly. Naomi is at the beginning of her career and Serena is at the twilight of hers/his. Hell, even the referee got to live a more authentic life than Serena and Venus. How sad is that? +Taylor - As serious as a heart attack. If you cannot see it, there are plenty of anatomy charts on youtube specifically addressing this issue. Look at the shape of her head since she was in her early 20's (not hair, just eyebrow ridge, forehead slant and jawline). She is more muscular than most men. Frankly, I don't care how she/he chooses to live but it is not an honest competition for a MTF to play against a female. And since this is our new reality, it needs to be addressed. Oh they are, and they are punished the same most of the time. They are punished MORE than women, if you look at how many code violations are dished out to men as opposed to women at any grand slam in history.Just look at John Macenroe back in the 80's, and in 1990. He was disqualified for being just as bad as Serena.But you're right in how the violations are dished out. Warning, point, game. She kept pushing it, and as soon as you start insulting the umpire, calling him a thief and a liar, demanding an apology, she was guilty of another infraction. The umpire had no alternative.Her pulling the mother card and the woman card is just telling of how angry she was at losing to a virtual unknown, especially one that was a minority, so she couldn't pull the race card. These rules are made by the fucking lawn tennis association, and the international tennis association. These associations are made up of ex-players, founders, and owners of the clubs where tennis is taught and played. If they aren't the appropriate people to come up with rules, then I don't know who is.And of COURSE they aren't allowed to go breaking property, their own or otherwise. Act appropriately.And it's not that coaches can't coach. In a grand slam, they aren't allowed to coach during the game. In other championships they can, but not in grand slams, they are the pinnacle of the sport and rely on certain sets of rules. These rules have been in place since day one for the most part, and every player who plays knows the rules and agree's to abide by them.They don't have to agree, they can refuse to take part in grand slams if they don't like it. But Serena has been at the very top of this sport for over 15 years, she knows the rules.As you say, you don't like the sport anyway. Good for you. You're obviously just a SJW feminazi demanding everyone change the rules of a sport you know fuck all about. That is fascistic, don't you think?And regardless of whether she agreed with the umpire decision, claiming feminism and claiming "I'm a MOTHER" is just fucking ridiculous, and this is why people hate her. She had absolutely no right to claim it was because she was a woman, and claiming this old "I have a daughter" line is really fucking old now. We know you have a daughter Serena, you have been banging that drum for over a year now, since you're the only woman to ever give birth in the history of mankind (Sorry, PERSONkind. twat)	Feminazi, Old, Woman	Age - Over 65s, Gender - Female intelligence, Gender - General	5/303	1.65
"You're obviously just a SJW feminazi" - yep, obviously. 'Ex-players' - like who? Can you provide me a list of these people? Or are you making shit up again? I've played tennis for fun too. Am I now an Ex player? I'm reading a few things about Tennis & it seems as though, various rules have changed over time. So what makes the 2 rules, the most important? Don't show emotion, be a robot? How can anyone actually tell if a coach is coaching? What if a coach & player make up secret hand-signs? Kind of renders the rule useless. Not to mention the accusation by Serena's coach, who said that the Japanese coach was coaching more. So, now does the Japanese player get disqualified & the trophy gets handed over to Serena? Nah. I guess not. & where does the line of 'breaking stuff' stop? Can anyone rip a towel in half? Or does the rule only apply to the racket? These rules do not exist in - any other sport. So why is Tennis pretending to be better than any other sport?	Feminazi	Gender - Female intelligence	1/184	0.543

If by " colored complexion" you mean "not ethnically european," then yes, they're both of a " colored complexion". But Asians and Black people are not the "same color." They're literally on opposite ends of the skin color spectrum. No, I don't see what you're saying. Race and nationality are different things. I totally understand your logic there that if an athletic has a US Citizenship and he or she represents the US in the World Cup or the Olympics which athletic born in the respective nation should represent in that respective nation but it is probably her individual choice for some reason (US National Tennis Teams has full of young talents, the US National tennis team does not really need anymore young talents and there is really no spot for her in it so she is forced to represent the Japanese National Team instead or represent Japan) and same goes for Chinese Nationals who happened to be athletics which they could not find a spot in their national team because they had full of young talents in it so they are forced to represent other nations who doe not speak their language like the Mainland Chinese Table Tennis players like Li Jia Wei or Swimmers like Tao Li in here in Singapore & the US who happened not speak their language & of course they have to give up their Chinese citizenship automatically because of the Chinese Nationality law .
