I have a question for you and please respond to it if you can. Why is it bad to be a man? I mean it's not like men are out in the world trying to be bad or do bad things. Being a 15 year old boy I can't help but wonder why should I be punished for being a certain gender . Both men and women need each other to survive. Lastly it should be celebrated that your a man or a women because at the end of the day it sure beats being dead or non-existent.	Gender, Old	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	2/97	2.062
Sexism also hurts men because there is also discrimination against men based on their gender .	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	2/15	13.333

I have had to hold down emotions so long that I can barely cry on command. My grandpa who I was very close to died and I cried for real. An incredibly close family friend died and I kind of had to fake the crying. Then my father died when I was NINE. But I had already held in so many emotions that I had to cry on command. I didn't shed a tear at my baby cousins funeral because I couldn't even cry on command. The amount that my GF has told me to get in shape. I have a presidential ribbon in the USNSCC.thare is not much more I can do. I worked out and destroyed my body literally just so I could get in ONE relationship. I am pretty big for my age so I dont regret it and I enjoy it because I can protect my GF from anyone trying to... well you know. If they succeed I would literally hunt them down. It is just what we are taught. Also I forgot to mention, men and women operate on different sides of the brain. Women operate only on the left side so they is incredibly hard to confuse them. But men get confused very easily because our brain is constantly jumping between one side and the other. This is why the education system is unfair towards boys and why it is girls that are seen as the smart ones. Give us credit for what we go through. Also dont try to touch my GF or I will kick you in the liver.	Age	Age - General	1/267	0.375

she is NOT giving the fault to MEN nor women. she is pointing out that SOCIETY is pressuring us... not you as single human being but the whole construction.. it's the "cheerleader or sheep effect" you follow the "norms" you follow what you thing society expects from you. I have 2 brothers and i know they are not sexist assholes who just think about sex but i also know that they are sensitive and struggle a lot in society because of this "strong male" image they have to portray or they would just get beaten up by other "more masculine guys" ..they don't want to be aggressive and dominating but society ( male AND women) build this image of "strong virile sex crazy maniacs in our heads" Sexism IS bad not just for women but it also hurts men. Men can't take pictures of children or show them affection in public without people calling them "pedophiles" right away while women can take pictures of their babies butts kiss them on their lips in public and everyone goes just like "awwww sooo cuuutee".. sexism is bad because it says that women are weak, vulnerable and stupid, so clearly as man you DO'NT want to be associated in any kind of way with those degrading features and try to be the opposite.. which is also wrong. we need to find a balance in the middle.. btw being gay is the more manly thing i can imagine 2 men having sex with each other? 100 male ..no XX chromosomes involves.. how much manlier could it ever get? This is hard to hear for me not because your a girl but yeah you have right facts but I should let you know it's not just guys that bully each other I chuckled to a joke and got yelled at by a girl who made the joke and she told me that because it's 2018 that I could hit back a girl in self defence yet a few days earlier I had an argument with another girl who slapped me so obviously I push her back anyway she tells the teacher I get sent in and after saying my side (even with eye witnesses) she still gets me excluded so obviously the joke girl stands up for me right ? No instead she starts bullying me for hitting her back so even if it's true you haven't experienced the half of it you talk about gay men in your video well from my experience a lot of people just don't care I get that feminism is (somehow) for all genders but this standing around isn't gonna stop a guy with no feelings to suddenly fell them and did you know that the main reason suicide for men is higher because there's never a nice way out "well why don't you tell anyone about this???" Well we will get bulled for it "what joke was it" it was a dark joke about her dead dad that she told her friends and others and seas nothing when they chuckled so I had one "what were you arguing about" she was bullying a guy because he brought in to school an art book so I stud up for him "did you even know these girls" yes on was a friend turned bully joke girl the other an ex girlfriend	Gay, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Sexual Identity - General, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality	3/297	1.01

Awesome video - I myself as a man have been a victim of sexism and it has ruined many parts of my life - however I would like to state that you are literally explaining my personal ideology of EQUALISM. Equalism ignores all 'differentiating' factors in human beings and creates an equal society - I believe you fit into this ideology rather than feminism which is defined as being the "advocacy of female rights on the grounds of equality of the sexes"; you argue both sides, making you not a defined feminist, but an equalist. I highly respect this video and you are by far, one of my most respected Youtubers for this video! Thank you!	Sexism	Gender - General	1/116	0.862

women are top when they act sexist towards men, such as not understanding a women's period based on you being male, or easy too say that a man rape her based on his gender , or spreading you're legs is considered "man spreading" theres even a thing called "mansplaining" created by women who are feminist. I think we need to realize that not all men agree with the views of feminists. I know that our society feels that we need to fix all men but guess what I like who I am and would never impose my views on some one else for any reason. Try asking us what we want rather than assuming what you think they should act and think by using every legal and terroristic threat to make the man a better person.. It doesn't have to be man against woman as the vast majority of the vocal minority thrive on the whole idea that if one gets something then the other is at a disadvantage which isn't the case as each have challenges and each should realize that mandating change will only get the other feeling defensive. I've worked in construction for a long time...and I do believe in equality!! And believe woman should work in any field they choose to...but I have seen first hand woman who during the interview claim " I know how to work hard and I've been raised with boys so working hard has never been a problem just because I'm a girl" ... a few months later we see her trynna avoid the physically demanding tasks like digging and moving dirt and just going for the "easy" tasks like trynna operate machinery (risky and can be dangerous, but physically less demanding..you get the point) and when asked to help us guys out we heard " ugh...you guys are men you shouldn't need a woman 's help" ... and when she got in trouble by our foreman she pulled the " oh I get it because I'm a girl I'm in trouble , you guys just don't like that your working with a girl that's all this is.. " . Trust me when I say sexism is DEFINITELY not always men against woman and there are def girls out there who love to pull the equality card until it's inconvenient to them then they'll pull the " just because I'm a girl card"	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	4/211	1.896

lacigreen You are a good person. But do you know that feminism is not about equality(which the dictionary describes it as).even if we ignore the bragging of feminists about the wage gap and assuming every men are sexist, feminists are humiliating men in more way than you can imagine. Feminists say that men should get permission before even saying "hi" or "You're looking pretty"(if she is looking pretty). Aren't they taking away the freedom of speech from men? And what kind of thinking combines saying "You're gorgeous" with rape culture?Sure some men do some bad things. Some women do even worse things. But my point is, while every feminists are patting themselves on the back, more and more men are being abused by being falsely accused of sexism and sexual harassment by feminists.You know YouTube better than me. Search with the word "feminism", every video on the YouTube will show you exactly why men hate feminism. it is not because of men hating women or thinking that women are pets of men, but because how feminists actually harasses men(specially white men) without any logical cause. yeah those are only a few problems men face with sexism , other issues are employment, equal rights to children, equal rights to abortion; financial freedom to their own money they earn, equality with their voice because men aren't allowed to have an opinion, manspreading because apparently having physical organs in-between your legs all the time doesn't permit you to sit appropriately, men face harsher sentences for the exact same crimes that women commit, female phedophiles get away with rape always, men are accused of sexual harassment over the slightest of things of even asking for a number however women are never accused of sexual harassment even when they physically grab a man's genitals in public, men are burdened with the myth that they are more violent meanwhile women are more physically abusive even proven in lesbian relationships. Tbh I see more men on social media praised for their looks rather than their personality. Im not saying men are oppressed but I am saying I dont like it when women flirted with me even when i didnt have a girlfriend it just made me uncomfortable unless i approached them. When anyone posts a good picture of them shirtless all kinds of people will see it. there are just as many creepy girls as guys. Like commenting on a picture of a shirtless guy that their attractive and implying that you look at them in a sexual way is the same thing as if a guy were to say they look at a womans picture in a sexual way. From my specific expieriences, women have used this to do things how they want at expence of me. facepalm .... laci is a lot better than Anita Sarkesian, I believe she actually believes the shit she spouts, and I'm not sure if thats better or worse than Anita It's just hard to explain everything wrong with this video, though if I did then I doubt "feminists" would because I'm a "white cis male and I just wouldn't know the pain of anything women have to go though in a sexist, racist patriarchal society". I was honestly picked on and bullied throughout the whole of my school life, with no friends and everyone shat on me. Yea the pressure of patriarchy is so vast that it has even infected feminism with nonsense like, "If women don't agree with feminism it's because of the patriarchy ". Must be godlike in power to turn even feminist into patriarchy tools that tell women what to think and what is right from wrong.	Patriarchy	Gender - General	3/52	5.769
+jesse spence I'd actually extend your comment to be "If PEOPLE don't agree with feminism it's PROBABLY because of the patriarchy ". We instill this notion that men are superior. Through religion, sport, business, politics. There are a lot of US citizens who have said they won't vote for Hillary Clinton because President is a man's job. That a woman's place is at home. We act like this isn't a thing anymore but the truth is most of the world still believe it. Even the western world. We aren't beyond the stigma that women less than men, nor that men who don't want to be "macho" are just as manly.	Patriarchy	Gender - General	1/109	0.917
jesse spence Feminism isn't a group. It is a philosophy. You don't join it, you believe it. There might be groups that are feminist but they don't define feminism. The SJWs, MRAs and TERFs are examples of groups that claim to be feminist but are militant in their ways and generally hate one gender over another. So before you say "Feminism isn't about equality" ask yourself, is it feminism you disagree with or is it these groups?	Gender	Gender - General	1/77	1.299

And as far as I'm concerned pretty much everybody in the Western World has that.And I happen to believe in egalitarianism. Show me any evidence so far, in anything I've said that suggests that I treat people of any gender differently, or wish to see men treated better under the law or have any advantage afforded to men that they don't deserve. +Charlotte Joly ok, couple key parts that kinda shows it: men have pressure to "learn to see women as sex objects and struggle to have meaningful relationships with them", or how she goes on to say how sexism is about "shaming belittling and devaluing the feminine", and my personal favorite 1:11-1:34. but really pretty much all of it is from a male perspective due to how she is trying to devalue male traits by using blankets that don't apply to most men, and compare to female traits that aren't entirely accurate either. Upon clicking on this video I'm looking forward to hearing a feminist admit that sexism actually fing affects men (excuse my French) but it turns out this video is simply an anti man video that says all of the problems faced by men is based on a prejudice against women and not actually a problem that men face but an internalised need to be sexist or some crazy belief like this. If feminists want to attract the support of men and even none feminist women they need to accept that in this world everyone faces difficulties because of their gender or the colour of their skin and they also need to work towards making a difference for everyone and not spending all of their time complaining on the problems that directly affect them while doing nothing other than complaining about the problem and saying it's men's fault they face this great injustice for any social movement to be effective the focus needs to be on the world becoming a better place for everyone and to be based on the ideology of simply treating people better and making the world safer and better for everyone in a single push	Crazy, Gender, Nothing, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/232	1.724

Look, I see what you're trying to do here, but no. Most of those things you said about us guys being pressured into meaningless sex , suppressing emotion and making jokes to each other to establish dominance. I'm sorry, but it's utter bull.1. Men don't have sex to establish manliness/masculinity, a lot of the time, guys have sex with people because it's fun (let's be honest, it freaking is) not because they're looking to have a relationship. Sometimes you just want to root, that's it.2. We don't poke at each other to establish dominance either. I have no idea what this woman is talking about, because most of the pressures I faced were to not be all the things that she says men are pressured to be. I was told aggressive behaviour, especially sexual aggression, is bad. Displaying dominance, bad. Holding in emotions is bad. Being too competitive was bad. Wanting to be the leader, bad. Wanting to see girls naked, bad. If anything, I'd say that every effort was made to limit my masculinity when I was a child.What ended up happening, is that I realised that everything I was taught was bullshit. I grew up a strong, tall, competitive man, dominant over women, appropriately aggressive, and successful. I treat women very well, and I don't objectify women. OR just let us men be men, okay stereotypes are hard but stereotypical behaviour has logic behind it all and is mostly true as well.It's unnatural for men to behave like women and vice versa, that's why mockery on both sides on this isn't weird , sexes are there to establish some sort of specialism to enhance survival like how men protect and provide while women get pregnant and nurture.Unstereotypical behaviour or situations, like an unprotected pregnant women who has to provide for herself, is unhealthy for an unborn child causing genetic changes that last for his entire life. Transgender fobias, are first of all, not actual fobias, they are more of consciously avoiding transgender people based off past experiences. this is basically. yes, bit when you think about how most people come into contact, for the first time, with transgender people. its on middle or highschool. this a is point in development where people are , well, bitchy about everything. when a person accidently uses the wrong problem because a transgender or asexual person changes gender day to day, and gets yelled at and persecuted over nothing , why would they not have a disliking towards similar types of people? the human mind is biased on principle. you may have never seen a particular chair before, but you know it is a chair based off of prior knowledge, and because it meets certain criteria. and even if something is blocking the legs of the chair, I can assume, beyond a reasonable doubt, that that chair has legs, again based off of past experiences. if someone says they are transgender , asexual, etc, the human brain (yea, even you feminists), automatically starts making assumptions to try to make whatever data its receiving into logical and useful information. it does that based off of what it has experienced most. so, if, as most people have, had negative experiences with asexual, etc, you will have no choice to make assumptions. and when these negativities come from a developmental stage where thousands of others are developing along side someone who is trans, it is very hard to contain the prejudices. Finally, something about this subject that explores it into a minimum of depth. There is IMMENSE social pressure on men, especially minors, to fit into stereotypes. The difference between men and woman sexism is that we do not face revenue, housing, or job discrimination in most of fields. However we are being forced, constantly being molded into this "dominant" "alpha male" or "jock" role. For example, the concept of being un-delicate, unfeeling, un-refined... I think she's saying that the sexism put on men is like a product of their (men's) reactionary avoidance and not imposed by an outside "force", whereas sexism against the female is typically imposed by the social constructs which have been largely established by male-dominated systems. " Sexism " is like a double edged weapon, and it's wielded by a patriarchal system – even toward themselves. Her point is that this 'weapon' itself must be dropped. Where a lot of people miss the point is that they don't acknowledge a "patriarchal system" to exist in the first place, so naturally the rest doesn't make sense. I just believe that some men don't want to be brave, strong, or whatever society wants them to be.You were once a baby, and if you'd been raised the way girls usually do in our western societies, then you'd behave completely differently and wouldn't fit that very one-sided version of what you seem to be calling masculinity.Being masculine or feminine is a constant variable that is subject to historical changes, social influence and so on. It's not in your genes. You're not brave, tough, loyal, just because you were born with a dangling bit of flesh between your legs. Gender is a social construction, and you should read about it because asserting what male or female should be doesn't help anyone. Really. I hear it we men don't like to be wrong. Well, just grad a book, just look up all these things you think you know, and maybe you'll experience an epiphany. We're just using different sources then Gender has different acceptions, and I don't need to reference these because the internet can do that.Moving forward from the linguistic debate here, birth does not give us all our features. I just argue, as some people do, that our western societies and education (well, I don't even know where you are from, but I'm from France) don't encompass the complexity of gender identity. I wouldn't say I'm outside of the binary vision of things, but I feel it's crucial to acknowledge that some people do need to be detached from the label someone stuck on their forehead when on their birth.You might want to call a woman a person that looks like a woman to you, but they may identify as a man, and may want to be referred to as a man, whether they had an operation or not. Sexism works back and forth between men and women. Men can't be like women, women can't be like men. That's the whole thing, women are ostracised for being too "masculine" just like guys are for being to "feminine". We have to destroy these social values and start anew, everyone equal. That's my problem with everything, we promote anti sexism yet we still stick to out social groups. Stop the segregation to men, women and race . That's how we achieve equality. ”[Sexism] is about the shaming, belittling and devaluing the feminine.” (1:06)No, moron, it’s not all about you. Sexism means judging someone solely based on their sex. This is not dependent on ”structures of oppression”, and it is not dependent on your specific sex!That being said, many things that most feminists (including yourself) see as sexist are NOT. Women are better fit to look after children than men... because it’s a biological fact (I know you don’t believe in biology, but if I don’t believe in you that doesn’t mean you don’t exist)! Men tend to be more aggressive than women... because it’s a biological fact! Judging someone on their sex’ implications is not sexist, and repeating the phrase that it is doesn’t make it true.	Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	3/127	2.362
First: ”sexism” refers to a social system that discriminates on the basis of sex/gender. So, by definition, it needs a system where the ”oppressor” group holds the majority of positions of power and uses them to upheld the oppression.Second: feminists aren’t saying ”Women, don’t look after your children, make men do it”. They’re saying ”Women, you don’t HAVE to obligatorily be the parent who looks after your children. You and your husbands aren’t abnormal if your husband is the look-after-the-children one”.Third: prove that women look after children and men are more aggressive because biology. It’s not necessary that you prove that’s solely due to biology, but it’s necessary that you prove that biology overrides nurture and education in a good number of societies.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/125	0.8

Dario Carraresi 1. No, wrong. Simply plainly wrong. Here is the Wikipedia definition of sexism: "Sexism or gender discrimination is prejudice or discrimination based on a person's sex or gender." Sexism doesn't require structures of oppression; that's feminist propaganda. Using your logic, since there is no institutional oppression against women and very little against men, there could be no sexism. This is a dangerous mentality, since it invalidates sexist oppression that is not based on an institution; and this happens to both sexes. 2. Well, women are better fit to do it, see 3. Doesn't mean that you are doing it wrong when the man looks after the children; and in some cases the man might actually be better fit to do so. But in most cases you waste potential with this. 3. Men have higher levels of testosterone; it has been shown to make them more aggressive. It also increases the three-dimensional thinking and the physical strength. You can see this by watching little boys play. They will tend to play more active games. Women (biologically speaking) have one purpose, and that is birthing children. Despite the obvious facts (they have breasts, for instance), women are more social, they tend to be interested in people rather than things. This can be shown a few different ways. Firstly, a study has shown that babies (who have not been indoctrinated) tend to look at different pictures for different amounts of time. While boys preferred technical objects, girls preferred faces. Secondly, women are more likely to wake up from high-pitched noises. This is due to her having to care for her children, who cry in a high-pitched noise. Thirdly, despite all the effort to get women into STEM fields, they prefer other, more social jobs, like media. Even when women do go into STEM fields, they tend to choose fields like psychology, where the focus is on human interaction. You literally have to indoctrinate boys to behave like girls and the other way around. Was that proof enough?	Gender, Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	6/336	1.786

ScienceTube First of all, here's the definition of sexism from a sociological point of view. You know, from the guys who actually study that shit: [LINK] And my point still stands. You literally cannot compare systematic oppression with someone occasionally discriminating you. And yes, there is systemic oppression against women. For starters, the vast majority of positions of power (political, economical, religious, mediatic) are held by men. The only explanations possible are either (A) women are prevented from entering those positions due to discrimination; or (B) women are intrinsically inferior to men, in every way. Which one do you think is more probable? Second example: look at how many laws there are to regulate what men can do to their own bodies. Then look at how many laws there are to regulate what women can or cannot do with their own bodies - specifically, all the restrictions on pregnancy and abortion. About higher male aggressiveness: I have a question. Do you get offended when women are wary of men in general and about the risk of rape in particular? About toys: [LINK] And no, you don't have to "indoctrinate" boys to make them play with the "wrong" toy. In fact, calling a boy "girly" because he plays with dolls can be considered proof of social pressure on boys to remain a stereotypical "boy".> Women (biologically speaking) have one purpose, and that is birthing children. Suuuuuuuure. That must be why they were the tribe's gatherers back in the day. About STEM: first, here's two examples of biases against women. [LINK] [LINK] Second: isn't it funny how literally every field women choose loses prestige? And no, I'm not saying "Women, in general, tend to choose the jobs that pay less", I'm saying "When women move en masse into a jobfield, the wages of that jobfield drop". Dario CarraresiI will deal with your points one by one. This will be a looooong comment...1. "First of all, here's the definition of sexism from a sociological point of view. You know, from the guys who actually study that shit:"You think that this:"I know, the big 'S' word. Sexism. It seems abrasive &amp; maaaybe hyperbolic. Bra-burn-y and outdated. It can feel boolean and accusatory. Hang with me though, please."is meant to be serious scientific work? You've got to be kidding me.Look, I don't care about whether someone has studied something. My former geography teacher had studied, and she would litterally believe you if you told her that "of two C-atoms, one turns around to form an O-atom and CO2. Then the energy is squeezed out of the CO2" in a presentation on how a coal-fired power plant works (I didn't make this up, I promise. This really happened).I only care about whether something is logical and scientific or not, and the article (which is not a definition, by the way) you linked is clearly not.What I mean by this is thata) the article's content is unfalsifyable, thus unscientific.- "Point 1: Systemic Sexism has nothing at all to do with the values we identify ourselves with."Meaning that even if we don't personally encounter systemic sexism, it still lurks around the next corner. There is no falsifying this term.- "Repeat: systemic sexism is a problem of culture."Once more an unfalsifyable statement, since it is specifically designed to not allow for individual experiences to logically falsify the statement.- "Systemic Sexism is not about you. Ever."b) it is based on circular reasoning, thus is not logically valid.- "If you can accept that there is sexism, that is a systemic problem due to historic discrimination (c.f. Part 1), then you can begin to see why it can be so difficult to identify and challenge."Meaning that you first have to accept it in order to see it. This is not scientific, this is faith, this is religion.- "[...] that we need to accept [...]"- "Saying 'No, you can't do that!' is Patriarchal."c) It is based on certain beliefs that have not ever been shown to even exist.- "We do though, need to each be accountable to systemic sexism's perpetuation, passive acceptance, or elimination."- "The patriarchy' does not refer to a male conspiracy to seize power, but a society that privileges men."Do you get what I am trying to say with this? I am not saying that they didn't study. I am saying that they are wrong, and if they aren't then they have yet to deliver convincing evidence for their position. Instead, all I ever hear from them is pseudo-scientific bullshit like the article you linked.2. "And my point still stands. You literally cannot compare systemical oppression with someone occasionally discriminating you."Firstly: Yes you can. All systemical oppression must always be based on single cases of discrimination.And secondly, you are yet to provide me with any kind of evidence of systemical oppression. ScienceTube &gt; is meant to be serious scientific work? You've got to be kidding me.If you want, there's this, cited from the previous link. [LINK] Or this. [LINK] &gt; Look, I don't care about whether someone has studied something. My former geography teacher...Congratulations for missing the point by a mile. If you need information about, say, geography, you ask geographers. One geographer may be incompetent. But let me ask you this: is your experience with your former geography teacher justification enough to dismiss out of hand the general stance of geographerS out of hand?&gt; What I mean by this is that a) the article's content is unfalsifiable, thus unscientific.So is evolutionary theory. [LINK] Evolutionary theory and patriarchy have both a metric shitton of evidence backing them up, and next to no valid objection that could bring up a valid counter-theory.&gt; "Point 1: Systemic Sexism has nothing at all to do with the values we identify ourselves with."Meaning that even if we don't personally encounter systemic sexism, it still lurks around the next corner.Why, YES. If you personally don't experience the existance of X, it doesn't mean that X doesn't exist. The fact that you live in a society where there's discrimination against women on a systemic level means that you will be affected by said society, either negatively or positively, and that you will internalize sexist behaviours. For example, from the source:"I contribute to systemic sexism each time I tell a little girl how cute I think her outfit is. How pretty she looks. How big and important an adorably outfitted little boy looks. By always/only going to work with full makeup, a nice coif, and in some kind of formal-ish work attire (unless it's obviously a costume/act). By asking a woman colleague to be less Bossy, before questioning why I'm uncomfortable with her assertive behavior.See that? The author knows about sexism and gender roles, and she stills treats women and men differently. A girl is "pretty" (looks), a boy is "important" (personal value). She keeps going to work in full makeup, because it's proper for a working woman to be pretty, while the men have to be important. A woman colleague is bossy when a man colleague who does the exact same is "assertive". And so on.&gt; c) It is based on certain beliefs that have not ever been shown to even exist.See the above. And that's the behaviours of a woman who is actively against such sexist behaviours. They're learned. They're ingrained. But she tries to remove them.&gt; "The patriarchy' does not refer to a male conspiracy to seize power, but a society that privileges men."&gt; Do you get what I am trying to say with this? I am not saying that they didn't study. I am saying that they are wrong...So, in other words, you don't believe that there's a difference in how this society treats men and women differently. Random example: when was the last time there was a law specifically aimed at limiting men's body autonomy? Because there have plenty to limit women's - see: pregnancy and abortion.&gt; 2. "And my point still stands. You literally cannot compare systemical oppression with someone occasionally discriminating you."&gt; Firstly: Yes you can. My point is that people who have studied are often wrong, and certainly not necessarily right.2. "So is evolutionary theory."Are you a creationist? Even the rationalwiki page you linked shows ways how to disprove evolution.What I showed is that the article's content is unfalsifyable, that it's impossible to disprove. That is unscientific.3. So, your point really IS "I met someone who was educated and wrong, therefore I'm going to assume that those who are educated are wrong".2 > What I showed is that the article's content is unfalsifiable, that it's impossible to disprove. That is unscientific.Except for literally all the cases of biases against women which prove the existence of systemic sexism against women, as seen below. Your problem with "patriarchy" is the same one creationists have with "evolution": "I'm not seeing it happening RIGHT NOW, therefore it doesn't exist".3. I have given you a valid counter-theory to patriarchy. If there was a patriarchy, would you not expect that it takes action to protect its privilege? If you were suppressed, my privileged friend, you would probably be dead or in jail by now.So, what you're saying is that if I'm not killed, then there is no oppression. Strange world, the one you live in.4. > Despite this being no objection to my point, it is a complete nonsense.Nope. It points out that you get sexist behaviours and ideas ingrained on you whether you want it or not, because you grew up in a society that is sexist.> The author claims that this is systemic sexism.Nope. It's part of systemic sexism.> NO! It's not. This is not oppression, this is biology. Women are judged more on their look than men because biology!Prove it. ScienceTube Part two:10. What in hell are you talking about? When I can beat you with your own sources you are doing something wrong.Way to miss the point, which is: there ARE women who want to do dirty, dangerous "male" jobs, and they're discriminated against because they're women.11. "Or that women don't want to work in those job fields? That they are physically weaker and therefore less qualified? Nah, certainly patriarchy.See the above. Harassment and discrimination against women miners exists. This is a fact. You haven't disproven that fact.&gt; Also, let's appreciate for a moment that you literally say you want more women in jobs with high rates of fatal injuries.No, I've said that women shouldn't be discriminated because they're women.Also, please be clear: do you want more women in mining (and thus, you should be against women miners being harassed), or you don't want more women in mining (and thus losing all rights to whine that only men have to do mining)?12. But at some point, you can't climb higher with a risk-averse strategy. So in order to get to the top, you have to take risks.Like aggressively negotiating your salary, as already discussed back at point 5?13. There is a risk in negotiating salaries. Women tend not to take it. It's their own choice. Don't blame patriarchy for their free choices.Except that the issue here isn't "women don't negotiate as often as men"; it's "when women DO negotiate, they're disadvantaged, when men aren't disadvantaged when they apply the exact same behaviour". By the way: this unequal treatment is the reason women don't negotiate their salaries as often as men.14. The reason for the wage gap (and figures vary between 3 and 7, by the way) is that men are four times more likely to ask for raises than women.Even taking THAT in account, there's STILL that 7. And that's for white women, mind.&gt; There are even laws against gender discrimination, they already exist, there is no gender discrimination towards women!Guess what's also illegal? Meth. Guess what hasn't magically disappeared from this planet? Meth.Moreover, one such reasons why the wage gap is so high is biases against women. Women are considered less efficient than men for the same work - I've already shown you multiple examples, so this isn't up to debate. And this is at a social level, which means that not only is the employer biased (and thus valuing women's work as 8 when they'd value a man 10 for the exact same job), but also the judge and the juries that are supposed to see if the employer was fair or not (and since they're biased too, they'll see the woman job as 8 too).15. "women being harassed out of "male" jobfield, and the fact that "female" jobfields drop in prestige and wage for no reason other than sexism." Show me the fucking evidence! Because it has happened at literally every jobfield that got filled with women. Additionally, they've found multiple evidence of devaluation (women go in jobfield, then jobfield's value and wages start to drop), but not of queing (jobfield's value and wages drop, then women start going in jobfield). [LINK] [LINK] 16. "In the same way nobody can force you to donate your kidney even if there's someone right now who needs it," False analogy.Nope. Nobody can force you to donate your kidney to someone else even if that's literally the only thing that can save that someone's life.	Gender, Nobody, Patriarchy, Sexism, Woman, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	15/1424	1.053

Do I even need to call false analogy on that one?Evolution is a process that takes millions of years to happen. This is the reason why we can't observe it in ten seconds.Patriarchy is a condition. A condition doesn't have a limit in time. If there was patriarchy, you would expect to see its effect, wouldn't you?Yet I am still waiting for that $100,000 male privilege bonus, and I am still waiting to hear of a woman who is truly oppressed.3. You are making one strawman argument after the other. I didn't say you can't be oppressed if you haven't been killed, I say you don't know what a real oppressive system looks like.You know, dear privileged friend, an oppressive system usually doesn't invite its opponents in for a cup of tea. An oppressive system is called oppressive because it oppresses different opinions. But your opinion I hear way too frequently for this to be true.To your points:a) If you are paid less than another person for sexist reasons only, then this is obviously oppression. Now that I think about it, this might perhaps be the reason why it's illegal to do this.If you are paid less than a co-worker for no other reason but sexism, don't cry about it on the internet, go to the police!b) If you are valued less, this is not oppression. You may find it offensive. But that doesn't mean you're oppressed.c) If you were denied your body autonomy for no reason, that would be oppression, yes.Thankfully, there is a reason, and I have told you repeatedly.Don't you think that the protection of a human life, of your child's life, is more important than what you feel like this day?4. "It points out that you get sexist behaviours and ideas ingrained on you whether you want it or not, because you grew up in a society that is sexist."Let's all take a moment to appreciate the beauty of this piece of circular reasoning.No, seriously, don't you see that your argument looks like this (almost literally):Assumption: Society is sexist.Conclusion: Society is sexist.Is that what they tell you about scientific work in gender studies class? Well... you're wrong :-)As for your A) and B), provide me with your sources, so I can pick them apart.Fact is, even blind people prefer the body proportions we usually refer to as "sexy". ScienceTubeGeneral discussion of patriarchy:&gt; "Should've studied professional misunderstanding. I said that studying doesn't prevent you from being wrong; and, in my opinion, gender studies encourages you to be wrong." - Third time where you insinuate that those who have studied social matters are wrong. Either prove it, or drop the argument.&gt; "Patriarchy is a condition. A condition doesn't have a limit in time. If there was patriarchy, you would expect to see its effect, wouldn't you?" - And we see it. See: gender pay gap, rape culture, lack of representation, et cetera and cetera.Moreover: nowhere it has been said that patriarchy is impossible to spot. It has been said that those who benefit from it often don't see it. Example: you claimed that now women have equal representation in movies because of the upcoming Ghostbusters movie. Meaning: you believed that representation was almost equal, and that it got equal with a single movie with an all-female cast. However, this is not the case: in the 500 top movies of 2007-12, only 11 had an equally split cast, and only 31 of characters were female. Moreover, 29 of female characters wore sexually revealing clothes on-screen, and 26 were at least partially naked. (Male characters: 7 and 9 respectively.) [LINK] This is undeniable. But you didn't notice it. Because you believed we already had equality. And women don't have it - not even in this fabled West World. [LINK] &gt; "Yet I am still waiting for that $100,000 male privilege bonus..." - Men earn 1.3$ for every dollar a woman makes due to a combination of: higher chance to get hired (biases against women), higher chance to get promoted (same), getting more money if you aggressively negotiate your salary (while women twho do the exact same are penalized for that), getting more promotions if you have a family to take care of (women are penalized regardless of whether they'll be the stay-at-home parent or the bread-winning one), and the fact that "women's job" are devalued and lose wages for no reason other than the fact that there's more women who do that job than the men. Men are at a much lower risk of being victims of domestic and sexual violence than women - and they are the vast majority of perpetrators of said violence. And that's just two big ones.&gt; "...and I am still waiting to hear of a woman who is truly oppressed." - Let me guess, the old "There are women in the Middle East that have it worse than you, so shut up Western woman". Also known as the "There are women in the farmlands that have it worse than you, so shut up Muslim woman". Also known as the "There are women who are killed or disfigured by their husbands, so shut up Muslim farmland woman". And, conveniently, the killed women can't speak up in the first place, so the problem is solved.Hey. Guess what? Not only that bullshit is designed to silence women; not only it's stupid, because people can care about multiple issues, not just the issue they happen to be talking about in this microinstant; not only it bases itself on the "white savior who educates third world countries" myth that has literally never worked in history; not only everyone who's made this same argumen chides western feminists for "wasting time on Western issues", without realizing that they themselves are "wasting time" chiding western feminists instead of helping third world countries; but it's also	Gender, Nothing, Old, Patriarchy, Sex, Sexism, Sexual, Woman, Zero, Zilch, alcohol	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol, Gender - General	32/2587	1.237

ScienceTube You need to believe that there is gender bias in order to follow your arguments to show that there is gender bias.Nope. The gender bias is proven, among other things, by:- The Columbia Business School study, which proved that STEM employers tend to favor men over women when the only information available is "which gender are these candidates" and "how well did they score on the preliminary test" (and women got equal results to men).- The Yale University study, which shows that women who send their resumes to STEM faculties are less likely to be called back and offered way less money (4.000$/year less on average) than men when the only difference between all the resumes sent to a given faculty was the name.- The Harvard study that shows that women who aggressively negotiate their salaries are penalized in comparison to the women who don't aggressively negotiate, but men who aggressively negotiate in the exact same way are advantaged in comparison to the men and women who don't.- The Oxford study about how every job that goes from men-filled to women-filled loses prestige and wages - and not the other way around.And that's just about the gender wage gap. There's still more in the comment that you blatantly ignored. It's right above your "And since you claimed that the adjusted gender wage gap has to be caused by gender bias..." comment.	Gender	Gender - General	7/238	2.941
Dario Carraresi Given that this was true (I couldn't get the information needed for disproving the Yale study, so I'll accept it for now), that still doesn't make this a big issue.There is no way that this could have an effect on society as a whole. The " patriarchy " is simply plainly bullshit - no matter whether there is gender bias or not.For further arguments, read the points in my last long response. ScienceTube 4.000$/year less for being a woman isn't a big issue? It's one of the factors for why that gap is at 23.Having every job filled with women being devalued because it's "women's work" now it's "plainly bullshit"?The massive amount of women who have been raped is "plain bullshit"?The massive difference in sexual and DV victimization is "plain bullshit"?The harassment women face in "male" jobfields is "plain bullshit"?The massive difference in representation - that you completely failed to recognize, given that you believe that a Ghostbusters reboot with an all-female cast was enough to have equality - is "plain bullshit"?By the way: I've already answered your long response. Maybe you should check it out - it's the long comment right below your last long comment and right above your little addition about the gender wage gap. In the meantime, please answer this question specifically: do you have any problem with rape being defined as one of these three things, or it's too broad?1) Having sexual intercourse when you didn't want to because someone threatened or used some degree of physical force (twisting your arm, holding you down, etc.) to make you.2) Having other sex acts (like: anal intercourse, oral intercourse, penetration with an object instead of a penis) when you didn't want to because someone threatened or used some degree of physical force to make you?3) Having sexual intercourse when you didn't want to but were so intoxicated under the influence of alcohol or drugs that you could not stop it or object? Dario Carraresi I can't find your response, I'm sorry.I have problems with your third definition, since it allows for unconscious rape. This is not a thing that is possible. If the woman doesn't express her discomfort, it's not rape.It's another thing to say that being drugged intentionally and then abused is rape. But as it is, I would have to object to 3).The 4000$/year are a hypothetical sum, and I haven't yet collected enough information to maked an educated response to this study. I haven't studied this, so maybe it'll take a little longer than it does for you.It is also very interesting to ask the question why this doesn't translate into female-dominated fields such as biology or sociology."Having every job filled with women being devalued because it's "women's work" now it's "plainly bullshit"? "Yes, I think so. This is clearly overdoing the issue. There are much better explanations than sexism for this one, and I gave them."The massive amount of women who have been raped is "plain bullshit"? "No. That this should be part of "rape culture" is bullshit."The massive difference in sexual and DV victimization is "plain bullshit"? "I don't understand what you are trying to say. DV? What are you talking about?"The harassment women face in "male" jobfields is "plain bullshit"? "Maybe, it's certainly not caused by the patriarchy."The massive difference in representation - that you completely failed to recognize, given that you believe that a Ghostbusters reboot with an all-female cast was enough to have equality - is "plain bullshit"? "I have a problem with this argument, since it misrepresents my position on the matter.1. Rebooting the Ghostbusters with all female characters, just because they are female now, not to serve any purpose, does not only not serve the film, it is also incredibly sexist.2. Yes, there is no difference in representation, I'm sorry. ScienceTube > I can't find your response, I'm sorry.Well hello, André Smith.> I have problems with your third definition, since it allows for unconscious rape. This is not a thing that is possible.In other words, you think that having sex with someone who's asleep is perfectly fine. No exceptions - you've claimed that raping someone unconscious is impossible.> The 4000$/year are a hypothetical sum...False. The researchers sent the resumes to various STEM faculties - and the only difference between all the resumes sent to any given faculty is the gender and name of the applicant. That's it. The only possible explanation for a 4.000$/year difference is sexism.> It is also very interesting to ask the question why this doesn't translate into female-dominated fields such as biology or sociology.Know what's also interesting? That men don't face nearly the same amount of harassment or bias that women do, in any jobfield.> "Having every job filled with women being devalued because it's "women's work" now it's "plainly bullshit"?" Yes, I think so. This is clearly overdoing the issue. There are much better explanations than sexism for this one, and I gave them.Except that (A) the researchers specifically searched for any factor that would've favored the "queuing" theory (a job loses prestige and wages for whatever reason, and then women queue in that specific job) and barely found any, while they found ample evidence in support of the "devaluation" theory (women pour into a job, and then that job gets devalued, losing prestige and wages); and (B) the same thing happened for literally any job in the USA from 1950 to 2000 that went from "man-filled" to "woman-filled".Also, I've noticed how you don't believe that a bunch of wide-spread discriminations which have men as the majority of perpetrators and women as the majority of victims without any wide-spread discrimination happening in the opposite sense, all in a system where men just-so-happen to be occupying the majority of positions of power to not be "patriarchy". Except that's what patriarchy actually is: a system where men hold the majority of power and where there's wide-spread discrimination from men against women.Now, about the Ghosbusters reboot. You said, and I quote: "and if you had seen the Ghostbusters trailer, replacing an originally male-played film legend with all women, you can't tell me that women aren't represented. (1) Of course, if you dismiss all women you don't like as "eye candy", you will get to a point of underrepresentation. (2) I smell conformation bias.(1) shows that you believed that now, with the Ghostbusters reboot, women are represented. Except that women make up only a third of characters, nevermind the main ones.(2) Shows two issues. First: that you don't believe that women are treated as eye candy. Except that a third of all female characters in movies are sexualixed - three to four times more often than the male ones. And two: that you don't believe being represented as a pretty prop first and as a person second can cause any problem. Unsurprisingly, you're wrong: lack of representation in media is directly correlated with a loss of self-esteem. [LINK] > 1. Booting the Ghostbusters with all female characters, just because they are female now, not to serve any purpose, does not only not serve the film, it is also incredibly sexist.> Whines that women dare complain

Dario Carraresi André Smith? I legitimately can't find your response. Maybe it would help if you posted it again.Do you want a screenshot?!"The only possible explanation for a 4.000$/year difference is sexism."For just one moment, I thought you may have brought up an argument that can hold water scientifically. And now you re-affirm that the only reason you believe in this is that you first of all assert that your conclusion has to be true? How disappointing.Do I really need to do all the work for you in order to make your argument valid?"That men don't face nearly the same amount of harassment of bias that women do, in any jobfield."That itself, my friend, is biased. It's called conformation bias. Maybe you should try to step back from your radical ideology and look at what you just said.A) I am not talking about the queuing theory. I am talking about the fact that women favor family friendly and socially comfortable working conditions over high wage. Of course, if women don't demand as much pay as men would, wages decrease.Not to mention that women are less likely to ask for raises.Also, I don't really care about the prestige part, since it isa) a subjective matter andb) obviously not really representative of the rest of the world (there is a lot of jobs without much prestige that are male-dominated).B) Yes, I accepted that as the premise of your study."all in a system where men just-so-happen to be occupying the majority of positions of power to not be "patriarchy"Are you aware that women are a majority? They have every single legal right, opposed to men who are subject to legal discrimination. Women are not oppressed, deal with it. ScienceTube > For just one moment, I thought you may have brought up an argument that can hold water scientifically. And now you re-affirm that the only reason you believe in this is that you first of all assert that your conclusion has to be true? How disappointing.Let's hear your explanation then.- You've prepared a bunch of resumes to send to various STEM faculties. All the resumes sent to a specific faculty (for example, math) are about a neo-laureate student in that specific field, and they're all word-by-word identical except for the name and gender of the "applicant".- You then send the resumes to various top research-intensive universities in the USA, as appropriate ("math" resumes sent at math universities, etc.), asking the professors there to evaluate the students' competence, the likeliness of them being hired in their own university, how much they'd pay them if they were hired, and how willing they would be to mentor them.- Results: all the faculties show that they value women as less competent than men (roughly 15 less, on average), less likely to hire women (-20), less likely to mentor women (-15), and offer less money (-4.000$/year).Please explain what other possible reason there is for this disparity, besides sexism. Prove that men face harassment as much as women. I've brought multiple proof of the harassment and biases women face. Why were you incapable of proving the opposite?> A) I am not talking about the queuing theory.Irrelevant to whether or not "women's work" is devalued.> I am talking about the fact that women favor family friendly and socially comfortable working conditions over high wage. Except that there still are hiring biases, promoting biases and motherhood penalties.> Of course, if women don't demand as much pay as men would, wages decrease. Except that women are less likely to be hired if they ask for more money. Specifically, male employers are less likely to hire a woman who demands for more money than a woman who asks for less, but are more likely to hire a man who does the exact same thing over a man who doesn't ask for much.> Not to mention that women are less likely to ask for raises.See the above.> Also, I don't really care about the prestige part, since it is a) a subjective matter and b) obviously not really representative of the rest of the world (there is a lot of jobs without much prestige that are male-dominated).Except that it's relevant to the gender wage gap. Specifically, if whatever job women choose is paid less because it's seen as "women's work" and thus less deserving of pay, then it's a problem. There's no rational reason that a job that's male-filled and an equivalent one in terms of effort and risks that's female-filled to be paid differently.Let me put it this way: let's suppose that all the jobs suddenly get their wages cut by 0,1 for every 1 of men in it. You would be fine with that, right?> Are you aware that women are a majority?Are you aware that women are not a majority of positions of power?Are you aware that anyone non-man, non-hetero, non-cis, non-able, non-rich is not a majority of positions of power?> They have every single legal right, opposed to men who are subject to legal discrimination. But you don't give a shit about women, so that's expected.&gt; "In the civilized non-social justice warrior world we call [abortion] murder" - Nope. If forbidding a person from using someone else's organs to survive is "murder", then donating organs should be mandatory for everyone. Which means that, if someone needs a kidney and your kidney is compatible, by your own logic you have no right to say "no". Negating your kidney would result in someone else's death, which would be murder according to your own logic.&gt; "Would you allow murdering the baby if the mother decides that she doesn't want it? GamerGate was about nothing but harassment. You want an example? Let's talk about what sparked GG - Zoe Quinn.- A disgruntled boyfriend of Quinn claimed that she slept with reviewers in order to have positive reviews, and thus have more people buy her game, Depression Quest. Key word being claimed - there was zero proof of that.- In fact, the only reviewer that may have slept with her did NOT write any review about her game. Quoting from the WHTM article (emphasis mine):I decided to examine each occurrence of the name 'Zoe' in order to see just what 4channers thought of her. After about 6 hours on this particular quest, I've only made it through roughly one-third of the mentions. But the results are not pretty.The 4channers express their hatred and disgust towards her; they express their glee at the thought of ruining her career; they fantasize about her being raped and killed. They wonder if all the harassment will drive her to suicide, and only the thought of 4chan getting bad publicity convinces some of them that this isn't something they should hope for.They gleefully distribute nude pictures of her, posting links to online archives of them and emailing them directly both to Quinn's supporters.They dig up all sorts of information about her and her family and do their best to track down anyone and everyone with even the most tenuous links to her. One industrious researcher even manages to find a picture of Quinn at age 13; while acknowledging that it had no relevance whatsoever to issues of gaming ethics, she posts a link to it anyway.And then there is the ongoing discussion of her vagina, described variously as 'wide,' large enough to 'fit 12 dicks at once, and 'a festering cheese-filled vagina' that leaves 'a trail of cunt slime' wherever she goes. Several 4channers speculate about its smell.It's not clear how exactly the size or shape or smell of Quinn's vagina relates to the high-minded issues of gaming ethics that the GamerGaters are said to be concerned with. But in the IRC log no one ever seems to call out any of those talking about Quinn in the crudest sexual terms. Dario Carraresi I was writing the response to your comment, and I realized that you did a few things:1. You re-used old arguments of yours I had already refuted. Our debate has gone in a circle, and I don't see much use in refuting them over and over and over with the same arguments.2. You asked for proof where it is either a) impossible to give or b) not required.You asked for proof of an explanation; you even ask for proof where the burden of proof isn't on me.I don't think that such an attitude will bring us anywhere.3. If you didn't use the above, you used ad hominem attacks that had no merit but to hurt me personally, and since this is something I do in my spare time, I don't see the necessity to allow for such behaviour.You base your opinion on the belief that there is a patriarchy that oppresses everyone but "cis" straight white men. That this belief actually has an opportunity to exist proves the very opposite, and I have already listed a bunch of problems with this hypothesis.It is kind of sad, really, that, in the age of enlightenment, after we have overthrown religion, people are looking for a new god; and a new devil. Without even realizing what they are doing, they are making their lives unnecessarily hard; and worse, they are making everyone's life harder as well by imposing such absurd beliefs on society.These are the reasons why I will no further take part in this debate. I don't think there is any merit in debating someone who will not make up their mind regardless.I really hope that you can overcome your new god.Have a nice day.	Age, Old, Patriarchy	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	3/295	1.017

ScienceTube 1. You re-used old arguments of yours I had already refuted.You haven't refuted anything. You only had hypotheticals backed up by zero evidence, a single study that directly contradicted many others and had various issues in its methodology, and outright lies.&gt; 2. You asked for proof where it is either a) impossible to give or b) not required.False. The only applicable case was when I directly challenged you about the Yale University study, and that was because you claimed, without any proof to back up your assertion, that the study's results weren't caused by sexism. Which is why I challenged you to bring up an explanation that wasn't "sexism". You failed - because you didn't have any explanation.&gt; ...you even ask for proof where the burden of proof isn't on me.False again. The massive amount of links and sources I provided is proof of that. You, on the other hand, provided next to nothing, nor to address your own points nor to counteract whatever proof I gave you.&gt; 3. If you didn't use the above, you used ad hominem attacks...Insults and "ad hominem" are two different things. "Ad hominem" is when I dismiss your arguments without proving them to be invalid, instead just assuming that they're invalid on the basis of a characteristic you possess. "You're a misogynist, therefore your argument is wrong" is an ad hominem.What I did is to prove that your arguments are fucking wrong and biased and, on top of that, calling you a misogynist for using misogynistic bullshit as arguments. As long as I keep addressing your arguments, insulting you is not an ad hominem.&gt; You base your opinion on the belief that there is a patriarchy that oppresses everyone but "cis" straight white men.No, I base my opinion on the fact that (1) There's a literal metric ton of evidence that such systemic oppression exist, for every single axis of oppression; and that (2) more and more objections towards the theory of oppression get shot down. It's like with evolution. I don't see evolution happening right in this instant, but I can see that the evidence is overwhelmingly leaning towards the "evolution exists" side, so that's why my opinion is that "evolution exists". The same with oppression.Your actions are those of an hyperskeptic - someone that has already decided a priori his own opinion (that there is no oppression) and he'll hold on to it as long as there's a single, infinitesimally chance that your opinion is right. Which is like saying "Well, what if God doesn't do anything and cannot interact or be perceived by us mortals? Until you prove that such a God doesn't exist, I'm gonna keep believing that God exists".As for your last paragraph: get off that cross.	Misogynist, Nothing, Old, Patriarchy, Sexism, Zero	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	8/471	1.699

"She concludes by arguing that the fight against sexism is inherently valid in its advocacy for women's equality, but that it benefits everyone in the process."Obviously, you're the owner of the channel, so why speak of yourself in the third person?And seriously, if you really want to fight Sexism and bring about equality for women, do it where there is NO EQUALITY FOR WOMEN. Saudi Arabia for one. And quit acting like Sexism is specifically against women (this video pretends to back the male side, but you're just using the male gender to boost your argument). Women are just as likely to commit rape of a man as a guy is to a woman . Think women are under-privileged? Call the police on some guy in school, tell them he raped you. They won't believe a word he says, and he'll go to jail for years. They don't even need evidence, cause most cases a woman's word is all the evidence they need. And that was proven with a guy who spent close to 12 years in jail, he was to get out after 15 years. The woman who accused him came forward an said she lied. Her punishment? LESS THAN A YEAR and was allowed to get bailed out, she didn't stay in jail for more than a month. Would you say that's fair?Also, there are women's basketball, there are women in the Olympics, there's a woman who directed two of the BEST video games (Legacy of Kain & Uncharted) in the industry, hell there's a woman running for president WHILE being investigated by the fucking FBI. What about harassment? How many guys reported women for harassment vs Women to guys? Women have more control over that than guys.And Feminism isn't what many today think it is. Its certainly NOT about equality for both sexes, if it was, then Feminists wouldn't be bitching about what men do while ignoring what women do.	Gender, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	8/326	2.454

This is so backwards. Gender roles exist for a reason. Men and women are different. Societal norms dictate expectations of each gender . That, coupled with our natural biology, guide both men and women to behave the way we do to fulfil our evolutionary goals. Nobody is stopping men from being nurturing and emotional or women from being aggressive leaders. However, a man who is too weak or soft, for example, will have difficulty attracting females, the majority of whom look for strong, emotionally stable men. Same for a very aggressive women.Crossing gender lines is acceptable in our modern time but may affect the individuals desirability somewhat when taken to extremes. This video is promoting doing away with gender roles altogether. That is an immature view of the world. These norms have created a stable society. Why break them just for the sake of it. ThEwAcKySiBIInGs Sexism towards women is vocal and dominant and in my experience is based on oppression of men as ipposed to equality. It is also largely false or heavily padded. Prime example is the 4/5 college girls get sexually assaulted. That was one survey in one college that was only answered by a disproportionately female group 4/5 had been sexually assaulted. The rest of those ask to take the survey did not as they felt it was irrelevant to them which makes the survey completely inaccurate as if they had accounted for those who weren't assaulted and therefore didnt take a survey called " Sexual assault survey" the number is closer to 1/53 in America which is not surprising considering it's America. Sexism towards men is that 48 of domestic abuse is against men with men being physically threatened way more than women and a great example is a video where a male and female actor pretend to be an abusive couple and when the man slaps the woman , the police are called, he's held down and kicked but when the woman slaps the man almost 190 people walk by and some fucking cunt begins cheering. Dario Carraresi Well actually it's closer to 40-60 male and female victims respectively. Surprisingly, sexual assault amongst lesbian couples is sky-high at nearly 30. Also, men are almost 3 times more likely to commit suicide than women because lack of services or "women only" therapy groups. In fact, suicide is the number 1 killer of men between roughly 15-40 in some countries. I'll leave the links. [LINK] [LINK] [LINK]	Lesbian, Sexual	Gender - General, Sexual Identity - Female homosexuality	2/69	2.899
Lúcás Ó'Daimhín The first link talks solely about lesbian couples. However, I found this from the study's abstract: "when items were weighted to create an indicator of severity, no significant differences between lesbians and gay men were found." [LINK] The second link points out that, although men successfully commit suicide more often than women, women attempt suicide more often than men. In the "Prevention" paragraph, they note that one of the possible explanations for that difference is related to the different suicide methods used by men and women. Specifically: there seems to be a correlation between the presence of a gun in the household and death by suicide. Makes sense, as suicide by firearm is a lot more probable to cause death than, say, pill overdose. I also don't buy their explanation that "men are more resolved to die", since there hasn't been found any difference in desire to die between men and women, despite one tending to choose less painful and less "reliable" methods. They do, however, point to social stressors that men face, such as occupational stress (like being fired). I do think that there's massive stigma for men to "show weakness", including going to a therapist to deal with stressful situations instead of bottling them up. I found this. It's not specifically about male suicide, but it does focus on how the social pressure to "be strong" can be massively damaging to men and boys. [LINK] And lastly, the third link. The exact study isn't cited, but I've already seen that "40" statistic in studies that used the CTS scale - and that instrument isn't good. [LINK] Basically, not only the Conflict Tactics Scale study was flawed (for example: the response rate was way too low to be acceptable), but the scale itself was massively bullshit: not only there is no mention of sexual violence, but it considers all single acts of violence as the same "value" regardless of context (mock-kicks that neither partner finds threatening are judged more severe than being shoved against the wall) and result (a shove in self-defense to get your attacker off of you is considered as violent as showing someone down the stairs). So I'll have to take those studies with a grain of salt. Anyway, I'm gonna just leave this link list of resources/books/blogs for male survivors of abuse (USA-centric), in case anyone needs it. UndertaleSkeleBros I hear you and appreciate your perspective.I think men and women make different decisions when it comes to work choices. A man can't physically have a child so there is a social expectation that he will work hard for his family while his wife is pregnant. A great deal of a man's social value (and self esteem) is tied to his ability to provide for and protect his family. This results in a man typically pushing himself on the job and doing more hazardous forms of work.If a man and woman do the same job I agree with you, gender roles should take a back seat. It would be sexist to have a female colleague of equal rank go fetch coffee for example. If their is something heavy to lift, though, it is understandable that a man be asked to lift it (if he is able). There is also the fact that women potentially requiring maternity leave, so the scale isn't perfectly level.Men and women tend to be wired a bit differently. Different motivations, different social expectations, different ways of coping with stress, anger, grief etc. Laci is advocating a 1 size fits all policy out a misguided understanding of equality. Well, I already fail the definition of masculinity. Other than trying my best at being a gentle...man. Other than that, I am a pianist, I don't work out, I have cried in public before on several occasions. Basically, I'm what society humorously looks at and calls a 'faggot' because I don't match up to their ideals. I can honestly say that when I started piano 6 years ago, I told somebody on the bus whom, at the time, I considered a friend. He laughed at me of course. That never stopped me though. Aside that, some of the best pianists were males: Vladimir Horowitz, Wladysaw Szpielman, Sergio Rachmaninoff, Frederic Chopin (who would have been considered very feminine like, even for his time, especially in comparison to his lover, George Sand who was quite the opposite). So, in conclusion to all that riff-raff, I can honestly say fuck sexism . It's most high on the list of bullshit ideas that humanity has come up with. I don't believe anybody should ACT how society thinks they should act based on their gender, race , origins, past, etc. Anyways, that's my opinion on the matter. Feminism excludes men by definition, its about empowering women, not men. If you say you believe in empowering both men and women equally then you are an Equalist, and believe in Equalism, not feminism. That's where the problem is with the feminist movement, they claim to be all for equality but they fail to acknowledge that women also have huge expectations of men that are also unrealistic and emotionally damaging. Just like how she said it's not socially acceptable for a man to be feminine, but you don't see very many women calling feminine men sexy or attractive. However, they expect the reverse to be true and want men to find all body types and personalities attractive, while they also want to see photoshopped guys with huge muscles that wear only underwear so you can see their photoshopped dick bulging out like they have a 16 inch 3rd arm for a penis. Stop ignoring the fact that your gender is not the only one with unfair beauty and behavior standards, and that men are inevitably just as oppressed as women are. This isn't even including things like being the protector, which is why men tend to not live as long as women, being expected to suppress your emotions, being expected to be a "gentleman" which is the gender equivalent to being a "lady", which they hate. The fact that the suicide rate for men is 3 times higher than it is for women could be a good indication to men feeling helpless and put down just as much as women, if not more because the media and the general public have so far refused to bring the up topic of sexism against men as a serious issue in society.	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	3/289	1.038

I'm sorry but I have to point this out, sexism , racism , ageism and any other isms are nothing to do with position in society, they are prejudice that people hold to a group of people.What you are saying is that a French man in England CANNOT be racist to english people because they are the majority, but as soon as he goes home to France he becomes racist because he is in an area that is now predominantly French? No wrong if you hold something against a group of people due to where they are from or skin colour you ARE a racist , if you hate men for generalised bullshit reasons you ARE a sexist. "It is about shaming and devaluing the feminine" — aaand you lost me there. I mean, sexism is ALSO that.Claiming that pressure to perform and succeed is sexist is true. Claiming it's being "not like girls" is terribly sexist, since you're saying that girls can't perform and succeed. :PThe thing is, the pressures for a man, are not about whether they're feminine or not, for the most part, they're about failing as a man. You can probably already imagine masculinity-femininity as an axis, but a better way of looking at it is as a two-dimensional plane, where masculinity and femininity are the axes. You can be "low" on masculinity without conversely being "high" in femininity. Of course, even that is an oversimplification, and probably not even the best way to put it. But, you're correct, sexism can hurt everyone. However, it's not all negative, either - if someone is a strong macho man, and you tell them, "you can do X because you're a man", you're being sexist, but they might also enjoy it. Sexism is after all, discrimination, meaning "making a distinction IN FAVOR or AGAINST." Did she really link sexism against men to sexism against women?Does that mean that sexism against women is caused because they can't be like men?Thus SEXISM AGAINST WOMEN IS CAUSED BY SEXISM AGAINST MEN AND SEXISM AGAINST MEN IS CAUSED BY SEXISM AGAINST WOMEN??? An infinite loop of sexism ?Sorry, but sexism against men is because they have to be manly, not because they have to not be womanly. Even though manhood and womanhood are considered opposite poles, pulling one way is not pushing against the other. Sexism against men is caused by the same thing that sexism against women is caused by - an ideal image of what something should be. As well, though the point on discrimination against gays because they're not "manly" was pretty valid, it's mostly caused by "God said so." and "I don't hate them, God hates them". Which is just as wrong.	Sexism	Gender - General	11/150	7.333
How about we teach boys the truth. Masculinity shouldn't be based entirely on physical appearance, but should also consider one's character, how he treats the people, (how he treats women I might add,) his intelligence, and charisma. Because let's face it, not every guy on this planet is a fucking body builder. Some of us, like myself, are actually fairly skinny with only a small portion of muscle. But that's besides the point. The point is, society has just built a negative stigma towards men in which men have to support their wife and children, men have to pay all the bills to support their house, and most importantly, men have to be masculine and are not allowed to express human emotion, because apparently doing so will only strip them of their masculinity. This is just absolute bullshit and complete lunacy. As a result of this stigma, men are more likely to commit suicide, men are more likely to lose the right to their children in divorce cases, and men are more likely to get involved and die of drug and alcohol abuse. You claim, and generalize men as being sexist and, by shear genetics, are forever bound to be rapists later in life. I can and will backup what I'm saying with statistics just to proove how utterly wrong you, and the people who've tarnished this movement have become. An P.S: Men are just as likely to be raped as women are. So enough with this biased propaganda.	Skinny, alcohol	Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol, Physical Identity - Physical Features	2/249	0.803

The main issue I have won this video is that she said that men are "pressured to define themselves against women" which is weird because I'm fairly certain that women are raised under the same pretext, just towards men. Plus some of the most feminine men are still quite masculine in their own right, and vice versa for women. The other thing that irritated me was the fact that she stated the most extreme cases from being taught that way, also that each one is inherently bad. A lot of those ways of teaching tend to turn out for the better, yes some do more damage than they fix, but if that is the case then we learn from it. Using it to help shape us into the better man that we choose to become.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/135	0.741

That stereotype of men being under pressure not to cry is complete rubbish. No we are not taught to look at women as just sex object, consider the fact that we do have a mother and possibly a sister who obviously wouldn't influence us that way. We are neither under pressure of being buff, although we are competitive in that sense. When it comes to height, that's normal because you wouldn't enjoy being towered by a women, so there is more pressure on us there. Of course we're under pressure of being the protector, isn't that what you women want? Also you're suggesting that our society should support gender equality, I don't think that's what you really want, I think what you is gender justice. There are several problems with this video:1) You can't say in one video men are hurt by sexism and in another one men are privileged pigs under the patriarchy .2) You probably don't realize gender roles benefitted women a lot more then men. A man was expected (and still is) to protect, provide and be willing to sacrifice his life to save women. You could not be emotional because it was fucking needed and still is in a lot of sectors: police, firemen, military, even top level businessmen. Can you imagine Bill Gates crying in the boardroom before a deal?3)Feminists use gender roles A LOT when they try to recruit men into their movement (heforshe campaign).4)The entire movement of feminism lies on the premise "we women are poor frail helpless creatures that need special protection". As a final result in fact feminism perpetuates the stereotype of female as an inferior gender .And that's why feminsm sucks. :)	Gender, PIGS, Patriarchy, Sexism	Gender - General, Nationality - Southern European	6/160	3.75

I'm not saying females are worse in any way (please don't get me wrong) but men do have more muscle strength than women, not all but most. Well, clearly she has no idea what she's talking about. Masculinity is not pressure to distance men from women. In fact, it's pressure to PLEASE women, because females (not just in the human species) generally prefer males who are big, strong, leading, etc. It's called sexual selection. Men are driven toward "manliness" to please ungrateful bitches like her, and yet she's trying to say that it's a result of misogyny . We live in a gynocentric culture. MarieLinnea Laci made no such point. The problem with this video wasn't that she was addressing societal pressures on men, but that she misrepresented the root cause to push a feminist agenda. The drive to masculinity is based on traits that women generally find attractive in men, yet here she is trying to say that it's based on misogyny , because third-wave feminists just have to push women into victimhood at all times. Also, no, I don't think that attractiveness is just a social construct perpetuated by the media. Again, this is something you can observe in many other species.	Misogyny	Gender - General	1/99	1.01

Compared to the other feminists on youtube, I like Laci Green. She brings up quite a few valid points and doesn't degrade into hating men. She is the type feminist that I could and would be around in person and have an intelligent conversation with. If more feminist would think how she does, I'm sure the movement would progress further. What I mean by this, is quite literally, be for true equality of both men and women. Not degrading men and saying that they aren't subject to sexism when as Laci has stated is the case. Men can be raped and assaulted by women, just as women can be raped and assaulted by men. The fact that the courts are set up to be in favor of a woman in a custody hearing and not based on which parent would be better for the child. We as a society should try to get girls interested in the higher paying jobs such as engineering, software development, science, and mathematics; While at the same time, teaching men that it is okay to go for jobs that women tend to dominate in the market place. Yes it is true , guys want have a lot of casual sex . Guys have extreme potency with enormous sperm account during their life-span . Considering situation where world is in need of abruptly making kids , healthy male could be constantly laboured to do so , ladies need about nine months for another "spawn session " . Meanwhile healthy woman with her limited count of egg would be looking for a healthy , attractive male , preferably with hint of power , position or fame ... and NOT with good heart or healthy brain . The point is a women rather choose powerful man with dismissal of His marital status , than single one with not much to offer . Even a casual sex could become a love affair with many years to flourish . Give the guy a chance and You may be for pleasant surprise , because time is not constant ; someone on the top could be on the bottom again , and vice versa . Don't look for Your superhero ; don't look for a supermodel - because there is none . Look into heart and brain because it pays off . My point is - do not jump into conclusion to have many casual dating accounts , but instead , grow some trust and stop fearing , which is very important , in a way to avoid hate . Fear is really common these days , brought mostly by media. So ladies stop looking for Your perfect man (if You do , you are looking for very lonely life ) , even those less attractive ones have something beautiful to offer . Why don't you want women quotas in garbage collection jobs/construction/ocean fishing/heavy lifting jobs etc you want women quotas just in well paid easy office jobs.Why don't you want to equalize the life expectancy, usually women live 7 years longer, just make full medical care for all men free, that will equalize it!!! but do you want to do that?? NO, you just want more money for your breast/uterus cancers, only for that.Also give 50-50 custody of kids rights not 95 to women like it is now, here including child support and alimony which are paid 99 by men,make it 50-50.In case of war, obligatory draft into military 50-50 not 100 men like it is now.Make women's sexual manipulation of men for money/attention a crime like rape/ sexual assault is now, no evidence needed to put a woman in jail like it is now for women to do to men.There are more but this IS EQUALITY ,you don't want equality, you just want to enslave men, you had equality(more or less in some areas but was the same for men)you just did not have the vote but neither did men much sooner than you because voting is something new. Lyanna Stark I think you're wrong in my opinion men are the main victim of sexism as of right nowJust a few examples: 1. Women get custody way more often than men2. When women are beat by men the men are seen as monsters but when a woman beats a man the man is seen as weak and don't say you wouldn't see a man getting beat by a woman as weak because it doesn't matter plenty of men would see him as weak which just as men make fun of men who are "weak" Women make fun of women for being "Sluts" . The majority of slut shaming is done by other women after all.3. Men are pressured by society to be unemotional and strong from a young age but men are not emotionless and bottling up our emotions like this can be damaging causing it to be difficult for some men to have emotional relationships with other human beings but if you see a woman crying she gets so much comfort and support4. Rape, many of you feminists think rape helps your case that "women are the main victims of sexism" but the truth is the majority of rape is seen in prisons and is male on male. Another thing feminists do is they tell you not to normalize the word rape when they themselves are the ones normalizing the word rape by saying things like, touching you in any way because touching a woman is not rape its sexual harassmtent there is a difference. Sexual Harassment: the making of unwanted sexual advances or obscene remarksRape: Rape is a type of sexual assault usually involving sexual intercourse or other forms of sexual penetration perpetrated against a person without that person's consentRape=penetrative sex anything else is either a form of sexual harassmtent or assault5. Rape, again. Men get falsely accused of rape all the time and everyone believes the woman accusing them and even if they are proven innocent it's already too late by then everyone hates them for being a rapist and word isn't going to get around about a man being falsely accused of rape.Not only do men get falsely accused of rape but men are often made fun of if they come out about getting raped by a woman not only this but the women who committed the act get a substantial amount less prison time for the same crime.6. Priviledge: Are you going to be one of those people yelling you're a white male so what if you're a white male this in no way means you have privilege and how does being privileged subtract from your opinion just because someone doesn't have the same problems as someone else doesn't mean they cannot sympathize and understand their struggles If you say tl;dr you can go fuck yourself	Age, Sex, Sexism, Sexual, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	17/481	3.534

"its about shaming, belittling and devaluating the feminine" thats quite onesided. how often the boys are the "bad ones", the "emotional uncapable", the rascals, while women or girls are the "reasonable", "nice" ones, that are way more "mature" than boys?! look how often in tv-shows the women are defined - in contrast to men - as smarter. and look how often men have - especially in romantic movies - to apologize to a woman sooner or later.even in your video you attribute the bad traits to man (power, dominance, aggression written in RED ) and at least indicate that the good traits are female (equality, respect, nonviolence, written in GREEN ). feminism itself is about devaluating the masculine in fundamental way.and there is no need for social power in sexism , its just another way to attribute sexism to men. Men have 10x more testosterone than woman . Testosterone gives sex drive, height and muscle growth, aggression/anger which explains roid rage, and many others. Before I start, I'd just like to let everybody know that this was a great video, and that it was articulate and thoughtful. It can be very difficult to communicate complex ideologies and belief systems in the format of an 8-minute video, and this short clip did a tremendous job with that. Feminism, no matter where you are in the argument, is a very pertinent topic. I have a couple questions though.1) As with any ideology, any labeling will immediately tie participants to the most radical sections of the movement: if you're conservative, you'll be called "bible belt"; if you're socialist, you'll be called a "marxist"; if you're a statist, you'll be called a "nazi" and; if you're a feminism, you'll be called a "feminazi".This is the problem with all ideologies, and why I try not to associate myself with any of them. My first question is, why does radical feminism exist, and is it at all supported by moderate feminism? 2) Feminists often claim that "men's issues" exist as a result of men being over-masculinized, their feelings not being allowed to show. Is it possible that there are any other "men's issues": unfair treatment in divorce cases, higher rape statistics for men etc. etc. which don't result from being perceived as "too feminine" ? 3) Feminists seldom reveal any existence of the matriarchy(s), of which there have always been some. Is it possible that oversimplifying sexism as solely patriarchal could be harmful, or at least intellectually dishonest? 4) I'm sure you can agree that men and women have equal rights in the first world. Even though men can be mistreated in divorce cases, this is a result of judicial bias, which is considered illegal. Legally, men and women have equal rights. Legally, equality exists. There is no institutional sexism, in either direction, in the first world. In this way, aren't cases of misogyny or misandry confined to individual sexism, which can be prevented by simply teaching people to "not be assholes"? 5) When referring to the "patriarchy", wouldn't it make far more sense to simply call it "society"; considering "patriarchy" is such a divisive term as it stands, and rife with connotations of a global, male conspiracy systematically oppressing women, wouldn't it make more sense to simply call it "society" ? These are all very minor points though. Gender roles. Gender roles are everywhere, from the workplace to the kitchen. Gender roles have historically been reinforced by society, politics, and the cultural framework: art, music, literature. As Heraclitus said, "the only constant is change", however there is another constant: gender roles. Every. Single. Sexually-reproducing society has gender roles. Bats have a sexual devision of labour. Cats have a sexual devision of labour. Every manner of avian creatures have a sexual devision of labour. Gingko-biloba Japanese trees have some form of sexual devision of tasks. Literally every single life form on this planet at least DEFINES the sexes by some characteristics. Every single one. If all other life on this planet accepts some form of gender roles, then what gives feminism the authority to remove them? Gender roles are probably the most natural thing on this planet, above and beyond quinoa and kale. If you want to truly be "organic", reinforce gender roles. Why is there a double standard when it comes to nature? 1:00 well it was going good until then. i mean there were a few things which dont fit in with what i see but i mean i cant blame a female for not being entirely accurate on her description of the experience of a gender she is notbut then oops, sexism is usually against women and that is where the problem starts. it seems as though you cant comprehend the fact that society might few some stereotypically masculine traits as negative. it seems like you cant see how they view stereotypically feminine traits as overwhelmingly positive. and how men are encouraged more and more in society to be like women even in places where it is psychologically unhealthy to do so and is damaging to our romantic relationships.yeah some of the pressure is "hey dont be a pussy bro, grow some balls". but the pressure exists for females as well to not be too masculine. people often want others to fit in the gendered boxes. but women are viewed as so inherently good and stuffs that we give them more freedom in that area.please, i implore you, try to get to the truth of the problems faced by men. dont just shove it into your feminist narrative. dont just listen to the guys who buy into the feminist narrative because their view of the oppression they face will be warped by those ideologies. in fact i recommend you taking everything anypony says about the oppression they face (including what i have said) with a grain of salt. focus on the facts in their stories and work to figure out what is going on not just what fits your ideas about patriarchy or whatever.here are the discriminations i, as a man, have faced that i can think of off the top of my head: first of all i am confronted with the discrimination that i must make the first move in a relationship. must ask her out, no option to just make it obvious im interested and wait for her to make the move. that being said i have been asked out but it is simply not as common. secondly i dont have the support system and scholarships available that women do. none of these support systems or scholarships were gendered for me however there are plenty just for women only. my interpretation of this is that women are considered more worth helping and more "oppressed" so we need affirmative action to help them. but we really dont, there are already more females than males in collegesthird the only career which interests me in the slightest is being a stay at home husband or something of the sort. however i struggle with the idea of that because i have been indoctrinated that men arent good enough at that sort of things. and also because i know women are likely to dump any guy like that so... i guess i will try to find some monotonous job i hate so i can be the breadwinner or whatever and actually have a significant other.fourth the more i learn the more terrified i become because of my gender. men are more likely to be the victims of violence. men get raped about as much as women but must fear doing anything about it because they will be thought less of and even hated for being raped. men can get accused of rape and have their lives ruined even when they didnt. men have no reproductive rights, if i accidentally get a girl pregnant she can take my money for the next 18 years and i have no say in that and no hope of seeing the child if she doesnt want me to. if there is a draft as a man i can be called to war, and that is twice as likely as it should be because no women can be called

I hope you understand that male and females have different roles in society for said society to actually function. Encouraging men to be whiny and feminine is a serious down play of masculinity, the fact you have little boys told not to hit girls and protect their sisters en-stills in them a sense of putting priority and security of others before their own, that is why its more men than women that actually die to save another, and now you want them to lose that sense of priority and be more inward thinkers? The only reason this way of thinking is alright for women is because they are a prized commodity for society to exist, one male is sufficient to breed a thousand offspring if there are sufficient interested females, which doesn't work the other way around. The issues you raise don't exist because men tend to be more emotionally self restrained, its because women neglect and downplay the fact that men are ready to die for them by saying that they don't require them and are independent women. There is no such thing as an independent individual, society works because of how integrated we are, every man needs a woman and it's plain idiocy to assume women don't need men. men and women are supposed to be different if not there would be only one gender . We should be more equal but also we can't because men were made to be dominate. Believe me I have nothing against feminism (I am a male) i actually believe in equality which i think makes me a feminist? But I think we should get people more well informed of what is a feminist and what isn't, for example a feminist is someone who believes in equality, but sometimes there are people who call there selfs feminists but aren't, again for example a they believe women are superior to men and they should all be locked up because the are all "rapists" and they can just use their sperm to conceive a child themselves. So Laci's argument essentially boils down to "Men are pressured to be masculine, and masculinity is a bad thing." I may be oversimplifying, but I think that it is sums it up on the most basic level. At any rate, she encourages men to be more feminine, but never asks women to be more masculine. This is why I have a problem with her argument. I don't quite think she realizes that most men say things like "be a man," and behave in masculine ways, because they see masculinity as a GOOD thing. I have rarely ever felt that I was not free to be myself because I needed to "man up." I quite like my masculinity, I have rarely ever seen it as a bad thing, and I think most men share my view. Furthermore, it has been my experience that women in general admire and are attracted to masculine men, so apparently, they don't think masculinity is a bad thing either. Her conclusion to the video basically stated that " gender roles are bad." I would agree with this, but only if gender roles are physically forced upon all members of our society. Today, gender roles are more like " gender guidelines," and I'm just fine with that. As long as we understand that you are not less of a person for violating the gender roles, then the existence of gender roles is not neccesarily a bad thing. Firstly following the logic of this video then you could equally state that pressures on women stem from the fact they have to conform to their gender role and not be like a man, so everything relates to society's pressures on men... Besides I don't like Laci Green, listen to her at 3:35 the clear disdain in her voice is symbolic of the fact she doesn't believe that men can have gender related issues. This is the 1 in 100 male issues video in a sea of male bashing propaganda and even this brings sexism back round to women in the first couple of minutes. People like Laci are the reason that I don't identify with the term feminism and call myself an egalitarian because I believe in equality, in its true form and not a society in which only women are confronted with pressures and bias. I have a religious question (I haven't read the bible). Why were women built worse than men? The majority of men have more strength than women do. Also women get periods, which tends to slow them down. Why is that? If both genders are truly equal, then why weren't we built the same? Why did women have to carry babies and not males? What would happen if a man left his pregnant lover in the wild? Would she be able to hunt, build a shelter, or deliver the baby on her own? I think God may have made man to protect and care for woman . So why are we all arguing if nature already gave us the answer. Males are apparently the dominate gender . No question. Hello I'm a male and today I would like to share my story of when I got raped, and yes it wasn't by a man it was by an ex-wife. She forced herself onto me and performed sexual acts with me and when I tried to get back up she would begin to punch me in the face. Even though she was I didn't fight back because I'm not that kind of person. After she was done with me she kicked me out of my house and said if I called the cops she would kill me. I shouldn't have believed her but I was too scared at the time to question it. All I had with me when I left was the clothes on my back and my phone I had no money because she had taken my wallet from me. I tried calling friends and family trying to find a place to stay that night but because how late it was nobody picked up, then I tried googling a safe house for abuse but all I found only took in women. I was a mess with blood and tears all over my face I had nowhere else to go until a car stopped next with the guy in the car pulled down his window and asked what was wrong, so I told him my story and he told me to get in the car. After i got in the car he took me into the police station and it turns out he was an off duty officer. So for the next hour or so they calmed me down and written down my story and they went to arrest her. Luckily this story has a happy ending because she is spending 2 years in jail now. Thank you for reading my story and please remember women aren't the only ones who get abused but when they do they have a place to go.	Nobody, Sexual	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/324	0.617

Oh no... it's so sexist how men are encouraged to act in a masculine way, and how they aspire to masculine standards. All you say in this when you say men are often pressured to act in a way that is "not like women" is that men should be acting like women: you hold men up to female behavioural standards when biologically we are simply different, both physiologically and psychologically. By saying that the male identity is bad, and that men shouldn't behave like men, YOU Laci are in fact the one being sexist. All you are doing is making men feel like they shouldn't act in a way which they have been encouraged to due to biology.I hate how whenever feminists try to talk about how sexism exists against men too, they just make it about themselves. Well not only does that make your argument invalid for the fact that you can't stay on the topic, and can't even take your own advice. Now I have no problem with the +Dario Carraresi as he has actually put up an intelligent point. Also, to disprove your wage gap theory, since you just stated that it existed and did not provide any evidence, which goes against what you said earlier. There cannot actually be a wage gap. I will give you the benefit of the doubt and say that women do the same work if not better than men. But if that is true, and I can pay a man $1000 a week, and a women $850 a week. Then why would I ever hire a man if they both complete the same task with little to no difference in work. So tell me how there is a wage gap, when a business owner would never pay more for the same work. While this is not direct evidence towards my argument, I am at least backing up my statement with factual evidence about business owners. If you do not reply, then I completely understand. David Young Again: you haven't even seen what were in those Tumblr posts. Here's what you've dismissed so far:1) A bunch of statistics on women's oppression in the Western World. Some of the sources used: the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the YWCA, the National Sexual Violence Resource Center, NIJ, RAINN, the National Center for Biotechnology Information, the United Nations Development Programme, the Kaiser Family Foundation, HIPS, the Guttmacher Institute, CAADA, YWCA Canada, Stonewall and the Royal Canada Mounted Police. According to you, none of these are evidence.2) A list of male privileges compiled by a guy. All of these are easily verifiable. But you dismissed them all as "not evidence".3) A post that explains that the concept of "first world problems" is bullshit. For example, here's a quote from Nigerian writer Teju Cole: "I don't like this expression "First World problems." It is false and it is condescending. Yes, Nigerians struggle with floods or infant mortality. But these same Nigerians also deal with mundane and seemingly luxurious hassles. Connectivity issues on your BlackBerry, cost of car repair, how to sync your iPad, what brand of noodles to buy: Third World problems. All the silly stuff of life doesn't disappear just because you're black and live in a poorer country. People in the richer nations need a more robust sense of the lives being lived in the darker nations. Here's a First World problem: the inability to see that others are as fully complex and as keen on technology and pleasure as you are". But according to you, what people of the third world say is "not evidence".4) An experience of someone who explains how "Shut up, women in the third world have it worse" is nothing but silencing. 1st world feminists are told to stop complaining, because at least they aren't in the 3rd world. 3rd world feminists are told to stop complaining, because at least they aren't born in rural areas and forced into marriage when still underage. The maid who was born in a rural area and was forced into marriage while still underage was told to stop complaining because at least she isn't beaten up or disfigured with acid. See the pattern? No, of course you don't. It isn't "evidence", after all.5 through 11) Are all posts about women in science and history, which disproves your assumption that "men invented everything". The last post goes all the way back to the 23rd century BC. All of those women's existence and accomplishments are easily verifiable on Wikipedia. But, according to you, it's not "evidence".And here, have another link: a non-complete list of inventions that were created by non-white people. Has nothing to do with feminism. These are men's issues. Masculinity, and no it isn't evil. Just as you can embrace your femininity, men should embrace their masculinity. I think you need to also realize - that a movement created by women and for women cannot effectively speak for and address the issues faced by young men. This would require a voice that included them - not one that excluded their issues. I think it is important to remember that the current ratio in university is nearly 3 to 2 female - and media income for younger people (under 30) is higher for women. It is also important to remember that most American women - still want their husband to be the primary breadwinner in the family - meaning that he will be under tremendous pressure to make it so. However, because feminism - is by women for women - they will not be able to effectively understand - or really absorb this - because it is a problem that is primarily faced by men (hence 93 of work place deaths being male) and this would require actually permitting a male voice and perspective to gain voice within the movement. While feminism is still required - in the west, another voice also needs to be heard, as the situation for the young - is radically different than the old - those born prior to 1961 have a very different lived experience (those are todays in power people) from those born after 1980. Also - note your point about rape is really important - so much so that a minor who is male - who is sexually assaulted by a woman of 30 - if it results in a child - he can expect to be required to pay child support upon reaching 18 - in many states. However - this is another issue - that requires a voice outside women dominated organizations - to actually get traction.	Old, Woman	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	2/299	0.669

I'm not sure why everyone decides to just pick out her making connections between male and female sexism and claim she is focussing only on women, she is using this to emphasise that both parties are being hurt. She isn't just saying "a guy can't do this because it's too feminine" but she's also saying that "a women can't do this because its too masculine" and in a way she is being equal by recognising that both parties have been restricted. She clearly states that it is part of being human to have masculinity AND femininity. If two elephants, whales, dolphins, camels, horses (whatever) stood next to each other you would notice small physical differences but probably wouldn't be able to distinguish the male from female. This is what she is talking about! Why must we segregate gender in a way that defines how someone should feel, act, dress and LIVE based on their genitals? Genders don't have to be exclusive, and it's wrong to say that they should be! A guy should be able to wear a dress without someone saying shit about it! Feminism's end goal as I understand it is to strive for gender equality is all aspects of life. What will happen to the feminist movement once this is achieved? Take women and higher education as an example: If women ever overtake males in graduation rates, will they, with gender equality in mind, fight to keep these rates equal? Actually, this has happened as most here know (between 60-70 respectively), but for the life of me, I cannot find a feminist that would devote any attention or awareness to slipping male graduation rates. I'm really not anti feminist, but if gender equality really is a goal of feminism, you would see feminists fighting for men in areas where they struggle as well? Dario Carraresi women get lesser sentences in court most of the time and they get child custody about 80 of the time. They also get away with sexism more easily	Sexism	Gender - General	1/30	3.333

dumb gal&gt; women get lesser sentences in court most of the time...First: take in account the different rates of crimes between the genders - read: women make up the vast minority of murder, physical assault, and sexual assault perpetrators.Second: the higher the percentage of women in a judicial district, the lower the sentencing disparity, to the point that a district filled with women judges is estimated to give harsher sentences to women. So, no, the sentencing disparity is NOT women's fault. [LINK] &gt; ...and they get child custody about 80 of the time.Only if you consider all divorces - including those where the couple pacifically decides who's gonna get child custody. That's because (A) most of the time fathers do NOT ask for custody; and (B) the vast majority of the time, the mother is the parent who stays at home and takes care of the children. And since the stay-at-home parent is favored by family courts because it's more beneficial for the kids to stay with the "primary care-giver", that means that mothers get custody more often. [LINK] Now, feminists want to tear down gender roles - including the social expectation for women to be the stay-at-home parent. So, opposing feminists on this would worsen the custody disparity, not solve it.Also: when men bother to ask for custody, they get it at LEAST 50 of the time. [LINK] &gt; They also get away with sexism discrimination§ more easilyCitation needed.(§: Sexism isn't merely "discrimination based on gender", but "a social system that discriminates on the basis of gender". dumb gal Yes, because women are considered weak and useless.That's the upside to being looked down upon by society. And men get child custody quite a lot when they actually try. Ian The Alien&gt; "No, but treating them solely as eye candy is objectification."The only thing is the vast majority of men don't do that.Except that there's still a lot of men who do that. And then there's the matter of how women are represented in media. Specifically, the vast majority of the time (A) women are solely eye candy; and (B) men are not. It's the unequal treatment that is the problem.&gt; And how is a little eye candy sexual objectification?Because it's not "a little". It's widespread, and it's unequal.&gt; "Magic Mike" is nothing, but ice candy for women.You've named one show that is eye candy for men. I can name the entire James Bond series. For starters."And don't think that I've missed how you referred to men as "men", and to women as "feeeemales"."&gt; Does it really matter? Males, Men. Females, Women.Except that it's more like "men, males, female, sometimes women". Once again, unequal treatment.&gt; HAHAHAAAAHA! You think feminists view men as humans?Citation?&gt; Feminists love using that as an insult...It's not an insult. It's a reference of how boys are pardoned a lot of stuff because "They're boys, that's what boys do", but girls aren't given the same benefit. For example: a boy throwing a tantrum? Normal. A girl throwing a tantrum? Unwomanly.&gt; ...but now I'm starting to think there's so true behind that phrase. When boys hit puberty, they hit it hard.I'm sure that you have citations about that. Any year now.&gt; I wasn't jacking off under the table uncontrollably, but yes, boys look.And grope. And catcall. And harass. But it's alllllrighty, because, well, that's just what boys do!&gt; Their already partially fucked when it comes the teaching system since it's geared more towards girls...Prove it. The only thing I've seen in five years that supports that affirmation is that boys tend to be less composed than girls, and thus punished more for unruly behaviour. Which is expected, considering that boys grow up with far less limits than girls.&gt; ...but they can't even peak a glance at a girl without being called perverts or treated like dogs from feminists that think they need to be straight self control.Prove it. Prove that feminists believe that a single glance is enough to call someone a pervert. Because chances are, it's more like hundreds of glances, catcallings, gropings and more every single day of their entire lives.&gt; Because men tend to wear less reviling clothes.That doesn't explain why the dress codes are so different.&gt; They're less likely to break dress code.Because their dress codes are more lax. Seriously, that doesn't explain why the dress codes are so different.&gt; They're upset they can't wear booty shorts in school? Their upset they can't be half naked in school?No, they're upset because there's a double standard in place. Are you paying attention.&gt; "when you look at how men are represented" Where? In playgirl?No, everywhere. Because I've seen guys trying to claim that Rambo is to men what a Playgirl is to women. Not even close.To be blunt: Rambo is presented as what men should want to be, and a Playgirl is presented as what men should want to fuck. Big difference.&gt; "the problem is that the vast majority of women are represented as eye candy and nothing else." And men aren't?Not nearly at the same level. Yes but men don't see them as Sex Objects though. Because then that means they can be owned. Men just admire and is turned on by women because of their beauty sure 9 times out of 10 the men wants to have sex with the women. but that man also wants to know more about the women not just have sex with her and then leave her on the bed like some prostitute. especially how successful and beautiful women can be. Chris -0 Well Men obviously look forward to sex more than women. Why do you think there are more male viewers for porn sites than females? Or why the whole " men being perverts " stereotype even existed? Because for centuries and even now. a lot of men love beautiful women who have boobs and ass and are simply lustful and why there are more men commenting about asses in a twerking video then " I wonder if she has the same hobbies as I do? " or " What does she do for a living? " . instead men usually say " Dat ass " " damn she thicc " or " Booty clap! " Now it's not all men care about. But it's definitely important to them. But it's unrealistic for a man to just have sex with a woman and then just leave her there. Especially if they were kinda building up their relationship and it led to that point and they liked each other. Obviously the man isn't just gonna leave after he's done. Use your head. A lot of men can be desperate. Especially if there is no make-up to make us look pretty and especially when men have to be the ones to ask girls out since the majority of communities it's the men flirting with the girl first. Since literally all the girl has to do is look pretty and guys will be lined up for her. I know i would if she looked like jennifer aniston or megan fox.	Sex, Woman	Gender - General	3/257	1.167
Giving up my penis for a beautiful girl is no freaking problem. but for a woman most of the time it's different, something besides lust needs to be there. for it to happen. I mean come on. A person taking away their virginity makes them bleed literally. Of course girls aren't going to jump in and say " Hey! Let's have sex " And men during puberty start getting erections when they wake up. It's like it's done on purpose. Sex For women it's harder and for men it's easier which is why people may think men see women as sex objects. Which they probably do if they are in their teenage years and don't have much respect for girls and all that boy can think about it banging then...yeah she's a sex object.but into adulthood with maturity it's different. + ZERO 'ZEROHOOTGANG5000' HOOTS Pretty much everything in human society is filtered through a males lens, even the delivery of teaching a woman that femininity is a beautiful thing, can be a bad thing. A lot of the time.. the things classed as feminine, the certain standards placed upon women etc, are methods of conditioning, suppressing, and setting them up for a life that isn't as intellectually fulfilling, because of the silly socially constructed limitations we as humans have been conditioned to believe. Why is femininity encouraged in women? Because it makes it easier for men to be 'superior'.. Quite a big percentage of the problems that men have related to sexism , all stem from the latent belief that femininity is shameful. I as a trans woman know this all too well. Men aren't just told to love their masculinity, they're embraced for it. It's actually quite heavily pushed on them. The problem is not masculinity, the problem is sexism . Exposing these quite well concealed bullshit problems, and challenging them, is essential for a more equal society. One in which looking down on men for their perceived feminine characteristics, isn't a thing. Because We actually recognise femininity as a valid thing that anyone of any gender can possess and not be ridiculed for. Men seen as brutes, unintelligent, or 'frat boys", are probably just idiots. I don't think it's fair to equate masculinity to that. A lot of society are afraid of men, because they have a reason.. Sir Hayler Being masculine isn't the same as raping someone. Maybe cat calls are the product of men trying to be masculine, but that's not the only reason I'm concerned. Men are why less likely to seek help when they're in abusive situation or have been raped and when they do, they often times are not taken seriously. And why? Because they're men and they should be strong, able and masculine enough to help themselves. "Masculine men don't need help, they're active and help themselves. Men who can't are pussys and should be ridiculed." This is an important reason why masculinity is harmful when it's expected. There's nothing wrong with being masculine, but in our culture it's expected of men to be masculine. And that's why it's a problem.And even if none of the problems that often come along with masculinity apply to you, how does that make the whole thing false? Just because you haven't experienced it doesn't mean it's not true.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/164	0.61

SuperIcelight My argument had absolutely nothing to do with any that, which I agree with, only that masculinity is not a dirty word, I could equally associate negative behaviours with femininity, for example passivity. Also I have experience in exactly what you've mentioned, I had to face my problems and overcome stigma's for mental health, but I don't put it down to my masculine traits but rather social stigma, the problem is down to expectations, of what constitutes as manliness, the problem is the definition, of social constructs. Sexuality is multi faceted and the real change comes from how people perceive things, remember there are also positive aspects of masculinity, chivalry, guardianship, paternity. Something that comes to mind is how my father nearly died saving me from drowning in a rip tide, his paternal bond is surely a masculine aspect that's worth celebrating.	Mental, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/143	1.399
Sir Hayler My comment was made with the context of the original comment. Masculinty isn't inherently wrong, but there are parts of it wich need to be fought, just like with femininity. But it's way more acceptable for women to be masculine than for men to be feminine, so it's not that big of a problem. Transgender women (mtf) have a way higher chance than getting murdered than transgender men (ftm). Do you not think this is related to stigmas about men having to be masculine? Girls who wear dresses are allowed in school and so are women in "boys clothing", oants. But boys get expelled for wearing dresses. This, together with other issues, is why masculinity is being talked about, not femininity.	Transgender	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	2/123	1.626
Sir Hayler Actually, many feminists fight for the same cause, but for different reasons. This is a bit more complecated.A men being feminine is seen as shameful. Femininity is associated with women, therefore you could say that the stigma comes from an old sexist believe that women aren't as good as men. So fighting to make it acceptable for men to be feminine can be a feminist issue and it often times is.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/74	1.351

Sir Hayler &gt; You do know women have equal rights in the west right? In fact women are MORE privileged than men.False. [LINK] But please, do continue.&gt; Women receive lower prison sentences.The Starr study explains that the sentencing discrepancy is conditioned by arrest offense (ie. what you were charged with on arrest), criminal history, and whether you take a plea bargain or not. In other words: you're whining that women receive less years of conviction when they (A) commit lighter crimes than men; (B) commit less crimes than men, and thus are less likely to be repeated offenders; and (C) more likely to take a plea bargain that results in minimal jail time, which is further restricted by A and B.I raise with Schazenbach's study on how the demographics of judicial districts influence the sentences of said districts. TL;dr: there is a gender gap that disfavors men, but only due to male judges. The higher the percentage of female judges, the smaller the gap, to the point that a judicial district with 100 female judges is estimated to give harsher sentences to women. [LINK] &gt; Women are more likely to be hired over men in the same position.The Ceci and Williams study has multiple problems. Namely: it only studied one part of the hiring process; and there's the chance that the "hirers" caught on to the fact that they were tested, and thus gave "politically correct" answers, instead of what they would've actually done. [LINK] I raise with these two studies. In the first, the candidates were required to run a test in roder to gauge their efficiency (both men and women resulted roughly equal); then, the "employers" were required to choose between a man and a woman, having no information beside their appearance. Results: 2 men picked for every woman. The vas majority of "mistakes" (picking the less efficient candidate) were of the "man picked over more capable woman" kind. Another group of "employers" was instead allowed to know the candidates' scores; the bias was reduced, but not fully eliminated (3:2 ratio). [LINK] The second one was instead done by Yale University. Various resumes were sent to various STEM faculties. Here's the catch: all resumes sent to a specific faculty were word-by-word identical except for the candidate's name. Not only were women much less likely to be called back, they were offered much less money. We're talking about 4.000$ per year less. [LINK] &gt; Young women earn more than young men.Women in their 20s have reversed the gender pay gap, but their earning power is still overtaken by men later in life.This is literally the FIRST LINE of that article. Sir HaylerLet's see what O'Neilly, aka The Spectator's writer says...1) He says that women and black people are more likely to attend higher levels of education than men and white people, respectively. Are men/white people being prevented from entering those colleges? No; the vast majority of scholarships go to white people. [LINK] And there's evident proof of discrimination in favor of men. [LINK] Does the fact that "more women go to college than men" disprove the fact that women are discriminated when it comes to being hired/promoted? No. But here's an interesting fact: women need a PhD to make as much in their life as a man with a bachelor's degree. That may be an explanation for the gender discrepancy in college attendance - because men don't have to go to college, if they want a high salary. Women don't have the same luck.2) Second point: white men are "derided" in a test. Oh, you poor, poor thing. Whatever shall we do. This is much worse than being constantly harassed on the streets, of being discriminated at your job, or being raped/killed by the police... wait...Not to mention: the survey doesn't divide the respondents by race, but it DOES divide them by gender. Here's the average scores that were given to "white men in his 20s":By everyone: 8By men: 6By women: 123) "Young women now earn more than young men". This article again. Here's the FIRST line: "Women in their 20s have reversed the gender pay gap, but their earning power is still overtaken by men later in life."What do they mean by "overtaken"? Well, if we only consider a man and a woman doing the exact same job for the exact same amount of time and with the exact same efficiency, and if we exclude things like hiring and promoting biases, the motherhood penalty, and the fact that women who aggressively negotiate their own salaries are more likely to get less money - or to not get hired at all - than if they just accepted what was offered them (while men who aggressively negotiate their own salaries in the exact same way obtain higher salaries than the men who don't), there'd STILL be a 7 difference. And that's for white women, mind you. [LINK] 4) Then there's this paragraph: "Partly this is just bad science: feminists, leftists and others see that parliament and the boardroom still have a hefty number of white men in them and they extrapolate from this to argue that all white men must have lovely lives. Hence they always use the ridiculously sweeping terms 'white men' or 'male privilege', as if whiteness and maleness were inherently beneficial. As if loads of white men aren't dirt poor and awfully underprivileged." Which reveals how little does O'Neill understand the concept of "white privilege"."White privilege" means that white people get specific advantages that non-white people do not have. That does NOT mean "all white people have good lives"; it means that white people have it better than non-white people, that white men have it better than non-white men, that white women have it better than non-white women, that rich white people have it better than rich non-white people, that poor white people have it better than poor non-white people, that hetero white people have it better than hetero non-white men, that LGBT+ white people have it better than LGBT+ non-white people...Another concept is "intersectionality": privilege and oppression intersect with

Specifically, prove that scholarships in the UK are DISCRIMINATORY against non-white people.&gt; Infact all of these statistics apply to Britain and I already told you why the gap exists in later life because of life CHOICES not gender discrimination.False. Even when comparing a man and a woman doing the exact same choices in regards to job, position, time worked, and efficiency, there's STILL a 7 difference.Not to mention that it still doesn't explain WHY do women take up those choices. Or why a job's prestige changes depending on how the gender balance shifts (for example, the more men enter in nursing, the more the wages rise - and a gender gap forms in favor of men, one that cannot be explained by differences in efficiency).2)"Does the fact that "more women go to college than men" disprove the fact that women are discriminated when it comes to being hired/promoted?"&gt; I've already shown you that women are 2:1 and sometimes even 4:1 more likely to be hired for STEM positions so now you are just lying.And I've already shown you three more reliable tests that directly show you how women are less likely to be hired (up to half as likely), more likely to be offered less money than a man with the exact same copy-pasted qualifications, and how women who negotiate their salaries have, on average, lower salaries than the women who don't, while the men who negotiate their own salaries in the same way as those women have a HIGHER salary than the men who don't.&gt; 3)I've already shown that the gap is a mere 7 according to the AUUW...First: "mere" my fucking ass. Apply that over a fucking lifetime, see if that's "mere". Second: that's 7 after excluding all of these from the equation:- "Female" jobs having lower salaries and prestige than "male" ones, in the sense that, if a job (ex: teaching) starts being filled with women the wages go DOWN for no apparent reason other than sexism. [LINK] - The reverse is also true: if a job gets progressively filled with men (ex: computer programming), the wages and prestige raise. Again: no possible reason other than sexism. (Yes, they've already checked for differences in efficiency. Still didn't explain the variation.) [LINK] - Social pressures that push women away from "male" jobs, because "That's a job for men". Thus: women are pushed away from higher-pay jobs.- Hiring biases. Which means longer periods of unemployment. Which means less lifetime earnings.- Promoting biases. Which means less lifetimes earnings.- Harassment against women in "male" jobfields. Which pushes women out of those high-pay workfields.- Women being pressured to be the stay-at-home parent. Which means being unable to have a full-time high-pay career.- "Motherhood penalty", which means that employers are less likely to give promotions to a family-age woman because "She'll go take care of the children soon, right?", unless she specifically and repeatedly displays otherwise.- Women being treated as "selfish" if they do pursue their careers instead of being the stay-at-home parent.And third: that's a 77 gap for white women. What's your explanation for black or latina women?&gt; ...everything else you speak of comes down to personal choice not discrimination...See the above.&gt;	Black, Gender, Race, Racist, Sexism, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	24/1261	1.903

Dario Carraresi1) You mean are DISCRIMINATORY against white people right? I never said they were discriminatory your assumption proves my point, that any discrepancies aren't looked at with logic applied but your conclusion is always that discrepancies equate to discrimination, I could argue that anyway due to male success rate since education was overhauled from o-levels that boys pass rates have become worse and there has been a massive gender role reversal in teaching staff, there are a lack of male role models for young boys in the education system. [LINK] 2)What so the Cornell Institute for Women in Science is unreliable is it? You repeatedly use the AAUW a FEMINIST charity, they wouldn't have any need to propagate feminist myths right? It's not like it's there whole basis for existing and it's data isn't to be greatly skewed in it's own favour?3)Wtf are you talking about? You misunderstand what the 7 means obviously... it's 7 of the ENTIRE population of women, if you break it down into individual monetary value per person it's cents, literal cents. You clearly have no grasp of economics. And the guardian article you linked me has the exact same economic trappings, women are working less again, "The two measures differ because the ONS compares median hourly earnings – rather than annual earnings – and excludes overtime. It does this because overtime can skew results, given that men work relatively more overtime than women. Using hourly earnings better accounts for the fact that men work on average more hours than women, in the ONS view) why can't you grasp that if you work less hours you earn less pay... you keep going on about how women are punished for having children but I will respond the same, having children ISN'T mandatory, if you chose to have children you have to except the financial consequences ffs, in fact if you don't earn enough you get child tax credits anyway to compensate. 4)Do you really need a citation to show that fathers don't get the same paid leave as mothers? Come on dude. [LINK] 52 weeks for women, For men "You may not get both leave and pay, and there are rules on how to claim and when your leave can start." and 1 or 2 weeks paid Paternity Leave. I would have thought that was obvious anyway...5) "Not to mention that (A) the police repeatedly over-inspects black people and is much more likely to arrest on flimsy charges, while white people are much more likely to get a pass.And (B), we're talking about police Misconduct? As in "They killed those people without any legitimate reason"? "Sigh, it's exactly for the same reasons I've already said, ALL police tend to be more sceptical with black suspects because unfortunately crime rates are so high within the black community, yes it's an unfortunate side effect of high black crime rates, and my point remains the same for B, more black crime equals more occurrence for police misconduct, come on think about it, if 8/10 times the perpetrator is black then the majority of misconduct is going to happen to the most prevalent criminal type, including innocent people for the reason I stated first, that because of a higher amount of black crime a higher amount of mistakes are going to correlate with it."You know black people kill more other black people than white people do, are they racist towards themselves?" Drue staatz first confessionIf you're talking about me, I have absolutely no interest in privilege, if anything it's a stupid ideological fallacy, society isn't perfect but it's swings and roundabouts, there are various aspects that benefit different cultures, race , gender that aren't intrinsically discriminatory and have roots in REALITY, I have plenty of rights because I live in the developed world some things benefit me other things do not, we all have the same rights as dictated by law, I am disabled , I know plenty about discrimination and am entirely realistic. I do the research because these misconceptions on human rights are regressive and harmful, they promote sexism , racism and cisphobia.You want laws that prioritise different groups over others? Andzia MikolajActually modern feminism promotes misandry I can find you some sources of feminist identifiers who actively hate men, what you're referring to is the definition for first wave feminism, suffragettes etc, it's an archaic definition. Egalitarianism is what you're describing, the fact that you don't know the difference is the problem. If feminism as a movement currently cared about equality of the sexes then surely we wouldn't need MRA's?	Misandry	Gender - General	1/71	1.408
Sir Hayler 1) Bring the citations about modern feminism promoting misandry .2) The MRAs have done fuck all besides being misogynistic assholes and irremediably forcing anyone who wants to deal with men's issues to clarify that they don't have anything to do with MRAs.3) Egalitarianism, as a movement, has accomplished absolutely nothing .4) The suffragettes were considered, by the men of the time, "man-hating witches". Dario Carraresi1)Valerie Solanas, the radical feminist who shot Andy Warhol in 1968, provides a famous example of misandry in her self-published SCUM Manifesto. In case you're wondering, SCUM is an acronym for 'Society for Cutting Up Men', practically a call for genocide, the culling of men. Quite literally, Solanas expressed her desire to 'institute complete automation and destroy the male sex .'2)You're talking extremism, I can apply the exact same logic to feminist extremism so you make a redundant point.3)I can argue about damage done by feminism I can also argue the positives of Humanism since the renaissance, again why are you so trite? Not to mention you don't understand the difference between a movement and an ideology.4)The suffragettes were opposed by women also... Sir Hayler &gt; 1)Valerie Solanas, the radical feminist who shot Andy Warhol in 1968...Not because of feminism. Solanas shot Warhol because of personal grudges against him. Sir Hayler&gt; 1)I know all that it was an example of something that’s found it’s way into feminist thinking directly from her SCUM manifesto...No. All you have is that Solanas wrote that thing. You still have to prove that feminists want to kill all men. Feminists as a group, not ONE feminist.&gt; If you scroll up I already linked you an article on feminisms image problem...Oh, right, I missed that one. And by ”missed”, I mean ”already seen a million times, already debunked a million times”. Let’s see...- NOW didn’t oppose fathers having equal custodial rights. It opposed 50/50 custody being the default instead of favoring the primary caregiver. The hell is a ”primary caregiver”? It’s the parent (father or mother or whatever) who spends the most time with the children. Why is the PG favored in custodial rights? Because that’s what’s most beneficial for the kid - being able to stay with the parent who knows their needs, what with being the parent who spends most of their times with them. Are feminists preventing fathers from being the PG? No - in fact, since they’re against the imposition of traditional gender roles that put the mother in the ”stay at home and take care of the children” role, they’re all for fathers being the ”stay at home” parent if that’s what they want.- Yes, a father who gets accused of being an abuser doesn’t get less likely to get custody. Know what does reduce your chances at custodial rights? Being a mother who is abused and accuses her abuser. [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] - Funny that the only ones reporting this are all anti-feminist sites. Funny how there’s absolutely nothing on NOW’s side talking about this.- Yes, I’m all for opposing so-called ”fathers’ rights” who use lies such as ”many women lie about being abused/raped” in order to destroy women’s chances at escaping their abusers without having to leave their children behind. [LINK] - Feminists didn’t ”divert” anything. They simply asked for ”female” jobs to be helped too.- Note that some feminists campaigned so that the ad campaign included acknowledgment of domestic violence that wasn’t solely male-on-female. Note that Glenn Sacks &amp; co didn’t campaign to make female-on-male DV acknowledged - they campaigned for the awareness campaign to be removed. [LINK] - No, feminists opposed Farrell because he was a fucking incest apologist and general scumbag. (Also, the ”fire alarm incident” happened at a different event. Check your sources.) [LINK] - Oh, yes, ”Big Red”, who snapped at MRAs after they spent various minutes insulting her in an attempt to silence her. Clearly she deserves being harassed for years and doxxed because of the crime of not being a good polite smiling woman. &lt;/lethalsarcasm&gt; [LINK] - Yeah, about the ”fire alarm” thing: was it determined that it was a feminist for doing that? Or did you just assume, like anti-feminists just assume that women are stupid idiots who are incapable of doing anything important in our society AND controlling every position of power in our society and censoring any dissenting opinion?- Oh, no. Feminists believe rape victims. Whatever shall we do. I mean, it’s not like false rape accusations are actually less common than the average false accusation. Dario Carraresi>No. All you have is that Solanas wrote that thing. You still have to prove that feminists want to kill all men. Feminists as a group, not ONE feminist.Again you're being obtuse, it's a generalisation, I'm not claiming it's endemic to the entire feminist movement but you'll still get feminist identifiers who are openly prejudiced towards men, a good example is the comment above which tries to diminish my views based on my gender, pretty hypocritical and kind of proves my point. > If you scroll up I already linked you an article on feminisms image problem...>Oh, right, I missed that one. And by "missed", I mean "already seen a million times, already debunked a million times". Let's see...If I and a large percentage of people are automatically turned off by feminism despite identifying as pro equality then how is feminisms image problem not a fact? It's really that simple."According to the survey, just 20 percent of Americans — including 23 percent of women and 16 percent of men — consider themselves feminists. Another 8 percent consider themselves anti-feminists, while 63 percent said they are neither." [LINK] You seem to be under the impression I am anti women's rights, which couldn't be further from the truth but when I see something like news stations promoting the fight against air conditioning in the work place being too cold calling it an act of sexism I can't help but think A) Really? Is this a problem that requires media coverage and B) Women are afforded far more variety in the way they can dress in an office environment than men, if men get too hot in the office they can't stick on a tank top but a woman can wear a sleeveless blouse no problem, so for me it's an example of a non issue and a failure of common sense. Then I see tumblr posts calling all men rapists, or I see double standards of outrage towards to depiction of women in media but non towards men e.g hot men used for diet coke or stupid male characters, it seriously ostracises me. Privilege is another thing that gets on my nerves, I'm poor, white and disabled yet apparently society favours me because I'm male, I'm liable to rape at any time because I have a penis and no sense of decency, perhaps I'm quick to make generalisations of feminism but it's equally quick to do the same of me, you see to me if decent feminists started to call themselves egalitarian it would do a lot to mend negative assumptions of feminist issues, would feel more incisive and would weed out misandrists. Another reason I dislike the social justice movement is it's anti free speech, you just have to look at the behaviour on American campuses towards conservative speakers or the promulgation of safe spaces and trigger warnings, the perfect way to discourage the exchange of different view points and coddle developing minds. At least if we disagree with each other I respect the fact that we're even able to have a discussion without the trigglypuff style discourse being normalised in universities or SJW internet culture. [LINK] >One last thing: when feminists will literally organize concentration camps or sympathize with Nazis, then it's appropriate to call them "nazis" When people use that analogy it's because they can see similarities between aspects of the fem movement and the Nazi party, like it or not.How the Nazis Used Propaganda to Rally SupportA decade after losing World War I, the German

Some men are murderers. Which means that my point that men aren't worth following is completely valid. See how you sound?&gt; If I and a large percentage of people are automatically turned off by feminism despite identifying as pro equality then how is feminism's image problem not a fact? If by "image problem" you mean "A lot of people believe a lot of bullshit that anti-feminists have said about feminists", then yes, feminism does have an "image problem". But I fail to see how it's feminism's fault. And yes, it IS bullshit. I've literally lost count of so much bullshit, lies and unfounded accusations there was on that list. And many of the "common criticism" against feminists? "Feminists are ugly", "Feminists became feminists because they couldn't get a man", "Feminists hate men and want to beat them"? They were thrown around at the suffragettes as they are thrown today at modern feminists, and they are as much bullshit back then as they are now.&gt; You seem to be under the impression I am anti women's rights, which couldn't be further from the truth... Let me guess, this is about Schrodinger's Rapist, isn't it?&gt; or I see double standards of outrage towards depiction of women in media but none towards men e.g. hot men used for diet coke or stupid male characters, it seriously ostracises me. First: feminists aren't against men or women being used as eye candy. They're against having the vast majority of women's depictions as solely eye candy. Second: there's a difference between a power fantasy and a sexual fantasy. You're supposed to want to be James Bond; you're supposed to want to fuck the Bond Girl.&gt; Privilege is another thing that gets on my nerves, I'm poor, white and disabled yet apparently society favours me because I'm male... The rich hold up the vast majority of the positions of power (political, economical, mediatic, religious etc.), and they use that power to keep the oppressed - in this case the poor - down. The rich also have privilege, which isn't solely "I can do things that poor people can't for no reason other than the fact that I'm rich and therefore can get away with it, thanks to the system that backs me up", but also "I am exempt from the bad stuff that plagues poor	Ableism, Black, Common, Disabled, Dumb, Gender, Misogynist, Misogyny, Nazi, Red, Sex, Sexism, Sexual, Zero	Ideological and Political Identity - General, Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - Native-American, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Social Class - Working class	19/2107	0.902

Ian The Alien &gt; I'll give you one great one. BanBossy That goes under, "Policing Languge."Oh no. Pointing out that when a boy has a tendency to command, he's a "little leader", but when a girl does the exact same thing she's "bossy". Whatever shall we do.&gt; The Wage Gap and "Rape Culture." A half truth and a blatant lie that retards such as yourself honestly still believe. Which isn't even funny to me, it's sad. It truly is because you seem like you're intelligent enough to understand they're not true.Except that they're both true. I'm going to address common "complaints" about them both even if you haven't specifically said what your complaints are, since what you actually said is that both the wage gap and rape culture don't exist because you said so.Wage gap: It's only a 21 gap (2016) if you consider the average pay of all women workers with the average pay of all men workers. If you consider a man and a woman doing the exact same job, for the exact same amount of hours and with the exact same efficiency, the wage gap disappears.First problem with that reasoning: its conclusion is false. Even when we take in account all the differences in jobs, hours worked and efficiency, there's STILL a 7 difference that cannot be explained that way.Second: have you asked yourself why women choose different jobs (that pay less than "male" jobs), why they work for less hours, and why they don't get as much promotions than men? Some explanations:&gt; The social education and pressure (for example: shaming a boy who wants to be a nurse by telling him "That's a GIRLY job!") that pushes boys and girls into different carrer paths;&gt; Jobs who are filled with women being considered "easy" and thus less prestigious and less paid;&gt; Women being seen as "bossy" (and thus being offered less money when aggressively negotiating their own salaries - IF they get hired at all) while men are seen as "decise" (and thus being offered MORE money when aggressively negotiating their own salaries) for the exact same behaviour;&gt; Biases against women's efficiency, which leads to them being hired and promoted less often than men for the same qualifications/job done;&gt; Women in "male" jobfields being subjected to harassment and hostile work environments by the men within them;&gt; Women being expected to eventually leave the career, stay at home and raise children, thus being shamed if they don't (a woman in a couple who concentrates on her carrreer is seen as "selfish" because she denies her husband the chance of having children - nevermind that feminists don't care what parent is the stay-at-home one, so they're all for fathers being tha role if they want to);&gt; Related to the above: motherhood penalty - employers give less promotions to women in a couple because "She's gonna leave her carreer to raise children, right? So why bother?". And no, it doesn't matter what the woman in question actually wants - to focus on her career or to stay at home, or even to have children or not - all it matters is whether her employers believe that she wants a family or not.Third objection: that wage gap statistic (21) refers mostly to white women. White women in 2014 made, specifically, 78 cents for every 1$ white men make. African-american men: 71c. African-american women: 63c. Hispanic or Latino men: 61c. Hispanic or Latina women: 56c. Ian The Alien I've already tried to explain why the wage gap is bullshit but they won't have it, his words "First problem with that reasoning: its conclusion is false. Even when we take in account all the differences in jobs, hours worked and efficiency, there's STILL a 7 difference that cannot be explained that way." 7 is absolutely nothing in perspective, you apply that per person and it becomes a negligible amount, it's stretched across 104million women, it's not 7 per person, Dario doesn't seem to understand economics. Not to mention it's decreasing as time goes on but in the age gap of 20-30 it's gone completely the other way, and this is the best control group due to the lack of having other life responsibilities and that is purely because of social pressure put on employers. His last point is also stupid because Asian Women out earn White men which completely disproves any minority bias and the statistics he goes on to list are just Median statistics again which we already know don't explain anything...The rest of his rape spiel is also dumb as fuck "Not to mention another myth that goes around: that women lie all the time about having been raped. It's just that: a myth. False rape accusations are no more common than false accusations in general, and they're very unlikely to result in an unjust conviction (200 wrongful convictions for rape from 1989 to 2013, not all of which were due to false accusations; versus 80.000 rape cases in 2012 alone.)" Yes Dario... rape cases not fucking rape convictions which are at 5.7 found guilty, so we have false accusation of 2-8 and rape convictions where guilt is proven at 5.7 and the other 90ish being unproven, so that's 90 of RAPE CASES where the justice system can't determine it either way but in Dario's mind it's fine to just assume the 90 of cases thrown out in court due to lack of evidence actual rapes took place 100 of the time, because he knows more than the justice system. The reason it had been issued was because you tried to argue the following:1) A source (say, Sir Hayler) makes an argument (for example, about the existence of "gynocentrism"). Let's suppose, for the sake of this example, that said argument is valid.2) A Tumblr anti-feminists writes a post about said argument ["gynocentrism" exists], using that same source [Hayler].3) I, who am trying to promote the same argument ["gynocentrism" exists], link you to that Tumblr post.4) You declare that Tumblr post to be invalid without even reading it, because, according to you, anything on Tumblr is retroactively invalid. (Note the bolded part.)5) I then link you directly to that source [Sir Hayler].6) You declare the source [Sir Hayler] because it was used as a source by that Tumblr post, despite the fact that the Tumblr post was made well after the original source [Sir Hayler].Now, what will you do?A) Mantain the bullshit "any argument made on Tumblr is retroactively invalid" rule, but apply it equally - aka you renounce your anti-feminism, since there's anti-feminism on Tumblr.B) You renounce to that bullshit rule and actually check those sources.C) Do neither, which proves that you're either completely and irrimedably dishonest, or completely incapable at logic. In either case, you completely lose any shred of validity you may ever have left, and I block you again - this time permanently - because talking further with you would be completely pointless, since any further bullshit I'd uncover wouldn't be able to lower your credibility any further than that. Ian The Alien Na, I was never particularly interested, I did follow the controversy though. I just imagined it'd be a mediocre film with some agenda pushing. Seems to of been the case. Just another crappy reboot. I did find it funny that they just replaced the male characters with women and fart jokes with queef jokes, and sounds like Leslie Jones basically played a Minstrel. Not really sure what they were getting at, the characters just sound like teenage boys with the wrong genitals. gender roles are actually linked to evolution and hormones. Men having higher testosterone are naturally physically stronger since they were evolutionarily designed to hunt, fight, protect... while women have higher estrogen and were designed to take care of caves, cleans, raise kids.... gender roles are linked to millions of years ago but now times have changed and we no longer require them. for the first time, i agree with laci green.	Gender	Gender - General	2/71	2.817

People need to focus on changing the way people are raised as children rather than just shouting out that one way of acting is wrong. I agree with this video and in general most of what Laci says, though I'm still afraid of calling myself a feminist because often when i think if the word I get images of people shouting out for equal right yet going about it in a way that demonizes or belittles specific people, often times men, as if it's entirely a man's fault that sexism exists. Sexism in our culture isn't something men actively go out into the world looking to force upon women any more than society as a whole does. From an early age, birth, people are forced into a gender role by their parents and that becomes a defining factor for who that person is raised to be. This happens to both men and women and there are benefits and disadvantages to both roles. Men often grow to be more confident and assertive in their general outtakes on life than women but much less social and accepting of feelings and emotion. A boy runs through the yard he is encouraged but a girl runs through the yard she's told to be more careful... these sorts of attitudes in raising our children are what create the massive problem of sexism. it leads to men seeking and finding more leadership like roles in the workforce while most woman feel more comfortable with other careers. The attitudes we are raised with are then re enforced by the adults in our lives and the very society adults before us designed and put into place. If we change how children are raised, teach more gender neutral concepts, then the next generation will be in a far better position to make real change for equality than the feminism movement of today. Rather than blaming men, how about we tell it like it is, a problem that's ingrained into the very fabric of society and affects not only women, but men too and transgender people more than both aforementioned. If we look to the source and try to make a change in that way rather than blaming specific groups or individuals we'll all be far better off.Laci often points out great topics and in this video she even addresses sexism as it is, something against women that affects everyone in our society, not just women. Laci's probably the most inspirational feminist I've come into contact with and I'm certain glad to have found her videos, even if on some rare occasions i do happen to disagree. As a man who has never been into sport or these manly hobbies you speak of, and a man who is is of a slim build. I personally have yet to see how that has limited me in any aspect of life. I have a deep meaningful relationship. I am challenged from time to time on various topics, but doe's this mean I need to assert my dominates as a alpha male like you say no instead I resolve these clash of ideals with logic,reasoning and critical thought. I do refrain from crying or becoming hysterical in front of others does this mean I am ashamed to show this emotions in fear of being devalued by my fellow men? no I refrain from it because it doesn't help the situation to become emotional instead I think how will I solve the problem at hand without emotions clogging my judgment which my lead to me making the wrong decision based off my emotions rather then taking the most logical approach. one last thing I find it quiet offensive for you to make a video claiming to talk and understand about problems men face and then turn it around to try reinforced your feminist ideals. yes that right because you know how men feel that's why you make videos to represent a movement that is more socially damaging and harmful to easily influenced women and men in general. Woman	Gender - General	1/288	0.347

actually a few more points you never talked about a array of problems which only apply to men I think most of my fellow commenters have mentioned them. But if you want this world to be truly equal in terms of gender . Then you need to talk about privileges women have over men. such as men can be forced to fight for their country, women are the recipient of child custody in most cases and the man basically has to prove that the mother is mentally unstable or a danger to the child to have a remote chance of winning. men have no say in regard to whether or not a abortion should happen if a unwanted pregnancy occurs but if the child is born the men still have to pay half a lifetime of child support for something he had no say in. a man faces a more severe sentence if found guilty of the same crime as opposed to women. 40 of domestic violence victims are men but their are little to no facilities to help them were as women in most countries have plenty of facilities. women are on average double as likely to get a job as if a man when going for the same job. the so called feminist movement made that happen. I know from personal experience what happens to men that have been raped be women. when a close friend told me how the local police were laughing at him after attempts to report it. so you tell me In what aspects of modern life in the western world are women oppressed and or discriminated against due to the gender they are. if you want real equality these are some of the topics which need sorting. kind of ironic how you talk about feminism and equality and the truths I am more of a real feminist then you. some of the things you mentioned are genuine mens rights concerns. the rest was the condescending assertion that masculinity is a disability that society has unfairly placed on us. It is truly a shame to watch humanity fall victim to a larger group of victim's, who believe women shall not e held responsible for their safety(rape culture), actions(violence and discrimination), and must be protected from the evils of society such as; words, reality, dissenting opinions, and criticism. If we all open our eyes and stop being irrational cretins and realize what life is truly about, not who said what to hurt your precious feminist feelings, you can't eradicate stupidity to stop people from being bad people, and if you could feminism wouldn't exist. +Vriska Serket women should pay for meals when they are on a date with a guy, they should open the door for men all the time, they should be doing roofing work, masonry work among other construction. Women should buy men diamond engagement rings that comes very close to bankruptcy just to keep the man happy. Women should be playing in men's leagues such as going going against a 330 pound linebacker in football, i mean women want equality right? You should lift all the heavy objects when a man asks you to do so. Women should stop to change a man's tire on the side of the highway when it goes flat too. If you leave the other parent of the child you have together, the woman should pay the man for child support, no matter what the circumstance, (courts are set up entirely in favor of the woman no matter what the situation). Majority of the time, if a man leaves a family situation, he is entitled to his things and financial status AND he is entitled to half of what she made as well. (Because you know, the woman barely ever gets what the man earned even though she didnt do a thing to earn it). Women should be the majority of the military for some wars because in real life, a man's life is not seen as valuable as a woman's even though men are the ones who have invented and created pretty much everything that women love. LIKE YOUR COZY HOMES AND YOUR SMARTPHONES AND YOUR AIR CONDITIONING. Yeah men are worthless. These are just a few things to create equality. But women pick and choose what should be equal, and what men should continue to be dominant at. Like doing the heavy lifting in a construction job. (women holding signs for traffic is not a construction job). But then they want equal pay to the man who is getting his hands bloody and dirty. Men also have absolutely no final say if a baby is born, in the very end, the woman is the one who has total control if the baby comes into this world or not. The man has zero input, whether he wants it or not.	Woman, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	5/375	1.333

+theendman Yes, it would be impossible to solve. Let's take, for example, the problem with "the vast majority of combat roles deaths are men". Yes, it's true, but why? Because there's a gender ban that exempts women from being drafted. Okay, so the problem is this gender ban.Now, who made this gender ban? Was it women? No - in fact, the National Organization for Women has placed a lawsuit against the gender ban since 1980. Who opposed that lawsuit?- The USA Senate (98 male in 1980);- The USA House of Representatives (97 male);- The Supreme Court (100 male). [LINK] - Why did they do that? Because of misogyny . Specifically, because of the prejudice that women are physically weaker than men, more emotional than men, more hysterical than men, and overall incapable of being a soldier - unlike men.Here's why misogynists cannot resolve the problem of the combat deaths disparity: because it's caused by their own misogyny .Men die in combat because they're forced to be drafted, but women are not! How do we balance this disequality? By lifting the gender ban and letting women in the army! But women are weak, which means they can't be soldiers! Only men can soldiers - therefore only men die in combat roles! Men die in combat because they're forced to be drafted, but women are not! Et cetera and cetera.The same goes for workplace deaths. Misogynists want it so that it's not only men who have to get in dangerous workplaces and risk their lives, but at the same time they don't want women in "men's jobs" (aka dangerous workplaces).	Gender, Misogyny	Gender - General	7/273	2.564

theendman "Getting it easy"?1) How so?2) If women do have "advantages" due to bias, did feminists cause said bias?3) Are feminists against solving these bias that men face?As for your "Women COULD get job in dangerous/remunerative workplaces if they really wanted to" argument...- Women are expected to stay at home and raise the kids. It's literally impossible to do that and pursue a full-time high-pay career.- Only half of employers give women any sort of maternity pay. [LINK] - Women are hired less often than men, independently from their efficiency. In the linked study below, 2 men were hired for each woman , but for every "mistake" where the hiring manager hired the less efficient candidate, 90 of the time it picked the man instead of the more efficient woman . [LINK] - Women are offered less money than their male co-applicants with the exact same copy-pasted qualifications. We're talking 4.000$ less. [LINK] - Women are also being given promotions a lot less than men. [LINK] - There are female sewer workers. They're discriminated, because sewer work is considered a "man's job". [LINK] - There are female mining unions, because they were - and still are - discriminated against. Because mining is considered a "man's job". [LINK] [LINK] - The gender ban against women in combat roles will be lifted only in 2016. Again, the gender ban was put in place by men, and women were the ones who wanted to lift it. [LINK]	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	4/248	1.613
theendman You forgot point 2 and 3. Specifically: no, feminists were NOT the ones that made it so that women were excluded from combat roles. Misogynists did.In 1980, when there was talking about whether to re-instate the draft or not, various feminists organizations such as the National Organization for Women and ACLU's Women's Right Project opposed the draft period, but also pushed that, if the draft was to be re-instated, then women should've been included. Both the Senate (98 male at the time) and the House of Representatives (97 male) voted against allowing women in combat roles. Why? Because women were considered to be weaker, more emotional, more hysterical than men, and overall bad soldiers.NOW then filed a lawsuit to the Supreme Court, in order to reverse the decision. The Court rejected the lawsuit. It was 1980; the first female judge would've been allowed in the Supreme court in 1981. [LINK] As for this bit of yours:You must be living in the 1970's if you believe that "women are expected to stay home" Live in the new times please.Have you missed the massive discriminations that women face in pretty much any workfield that isn't considered to be "feminine"? Including sewer workers, miners, firefighters, and the Army?Have you missed the shit a woman faces if she decides that she prefers to pursue her career, and not care about being a housekeeper? [LINK]	Woman	Gender - General	1/236	0.424

theendman I wouldn't want inferior soldiers but if they want to try they can.First: no, they cannot. I repeat: there's a ban in the USA army that forbids women from being assigned combat roles. This is a fucking LAW. Until the law is changed, USA women CANNOT be put in combat roles. Did men try to change the law? No, they didn't. I've already pointed to you how the USA institutions had the opportunity to lift the gender ban in 1980, and refused to do it. The prevalently male (Senate 98, House of Rep. 97, Supreme Court 100) institutions, I add.Second: so you've admitted that you consider women to be inferior soldiers than men. that's the root of the problem. If you believe women to be inferior soldiers to men no matter what, then you don't want them to be in combat roles, because you don't want weak soldiers. Is the exact same reasoning the USA institutions had in 1980 when they confirmed the gender ban: they prohibit women from getting in the Army because they believed (wrongly) that women were overall incapable of being soldiers.And if women, by that logic, cannot be soldiers, only men can. As long as you people continue to push misogynistic bullshit like this one, you will NEVER solve the combat death disparity.> It is beneficial to them because they don't have to get up and do something dangerous and therefore it is inequality for men because they are FORCED at times to do these things were women just get to laugh and play and laugh at men because they think they are better because they don't need to do ANYTHING!!!!Really? Not being allowed to work is "laugh and play"?Not being allowed to vote is "laugh and play"?Not being allowed to participate in the political life of your own country is "laugh and play"?Having to obey your spouse in everything no matter what you want is "laugh and play"?Because that's what this evopsych bullshit ultimately comes to: the idea that men, the "real people", are the ones who make civilization; women instead are nothing more than emotional, frail children, who should be allowed only to stay at home and take care of the husband and the kids, the poor things.PS: in case you didn't noticed, women didn't "do ANYTHING!!!!" when it came to the draft. The National Organization for Women protested against it. ACLU Women's Rights Project protested against it. They also protested against the gender ban. They got the fucking President Jimmy Carter to acknowledge the problem, and to urge the Congress to lift it. The Congress didn't. The Supreme Court didn't. All because they were men who believed the prejudice that women are "weak", are "hysterical", are "too emotional". They had similar beliefs to yours. And they caused the combat deaths disparity that you're whining about.So go on. Keep blaming women. Keep holding to that misogyny. Keep hurting women, and keep hurting men, and never realize that it's your belief's fault. [LINK]

The sexism I face as a man is a lot more about the general misandry of society and the shaming of masculinity.Yes, I naturally value and admire strength and power. I feel proud of myself when I accomplish things. I need hardship. Being comfortable tend to depress me as there's nothing for me to be proud of.No, I don't like to "share my feelings". As I don't have the natural instinct to ask for support from someone else, sharing my feelings doesn't reward me with anything. Someone knowing about my feelings won't change the reason why I feel this way.The only thing sharing my feelings can accomplish is to give tools to someone else to manipulate me.Yes, I do like sports (in my case running) and I never felt satisfaction doing more "social" activities. Activities without competition or clearly defined goals are just boring to me.The idea that men feel pressure to use violence or intimidation to solve problem, so indirectly that women don't do it, is just sexist. I was the victim of vicious intimidation from women a lot more than from men.I really don't need social pressure to desire sex. This is quite natural for me, thank you. Also, as I naturally rely on myself rather than on someone else to solve my problems, romantic relationship don't bring me much, apart from easy sex. I don't consider women as sex objects, I'm fully aware of their emotions and individuality, but as I don't need support, sex is the only thing of value a woman can offer me.The social organization I'm most comfortable with is one which is hierarchical and where tasks are clearly distributed. I like clear social organization where everyone is responsible of his own task, I hate when it is muddy and based on constant negotiation. The only "negotiation" which is acceptable for me is the punctual challenging of authority. So yes, for me it's natural to establish "dominance" as this is what defines hierarchy.All the rest are consequence of this.Yes, I do like to feel as the protector. This is an obvious consequence of valuing strength.Yes, I do like dangerous jobs. This is again an obvious consequence of having the need to accomplish things.Yes, I do feel the need to "lead", but only when this leadership is related to my tasks and when I feel I'm the most competent. This is a consequence of wanting a social organization based on hierarchy.So that's who I am and this is what I value. And this video is hinting at the idea that I'm really not like that, that what I desire is only the consequence of "sexism" and that I'm a victim. Bethlehem Ashagrie Actually, it is kind of a gender thing. Men have masculine hormones, (testosterone), therefore having more masculine attributes. Masculinity leads to being more aggressive and wanting to be strong and lead. Men do have a natural advantage in leading, but I believe personality comes more into play when leadership is really put into effect. Men and women with leadership qualities are more likely to lead, men are just more aggressive.	Gender	Gender - General	1/72	1.389

I think a lot of the people in the comments who are upset with the way she portrayed this issue in her video have some valid points, BUT I'm still very pleased she decided to address this issue at all. Here's a way-too-long reason why:In seventh grade a girl slapped me. I slapped her back. A fight happened. I went to report what happened to a school faculty member, everyone said I had started it, because guys don't hit girls. It's not that there was anything okay with me slapping her; it's that not only would it not have happened if she hadn't slapped me first (not saying as an excuse, simply a cause and effect), but even if I hadn't slapped her back, everyone still would've thought it was okay for her to do that. It was aggressive of her. I was just supposed to take it. That's a side of sexism that I don't see addressed in this video.About three years later, a completely unrelated argument led to a girl saying straight to my face "You can't be sexist to a man". Not because I provoked her, but because she did (and still does) truly believe that. That hurt worse, because in spite of what happened to me in the seventh grade, I had never had someone outright say to me that I didn't even have a RIGHT to feel like what happened was wrong. It hurt more than if I had just got hit in the face again (which, ironically, did happen... my track record's not great :(Tl;dr I absolutely do NOT like the way that Laci talked about this issue in her video. But I greatly appreciate the fact that she talked about it at all. People can complain about her "feminist" way of looking at things, but feminist or not, there's nothing worse than simply pretending it's not an issue at all. And Laci is at least above that.Just my two cents.	Nothing, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/331	0.604

wow at least for once you're telling the truth and pointing it out how it has to be, but the main problem is, this video is under a false flag, because your fellow feminsit leaders are destroying this opinion of yours, so join the real movement, no ism, maybe just call it to be a human being, without any gender specific note in the name of your flag.this would change the whole support level, because you loose all the guys that are left behind.and you know yourself, you know what you did, and whom you send sexy pics, it's always the buff boys, so you women need to start to act not on your gender role, what you do, ord did, haven't heard for a longer time, that you were hunting some of the asshole boys that treat women exactly how most feminsist want to be treated, women are as accountable for the problem as the male demographic is.so laci if you're that open to new impulses, ask yourself why it has to be under a feminsit flag, if feminsim in the first world already reached all their goals, but still is running wild to change more in the empowering of the women, because you depowerized the males to a very low point. ask yourself how life will be for his brother, already having a hard time getting in to college, finding work because women tend to be more obedient workers and don't question the why often, and always getting a special treatment, i was working at a moving company, because of the female quota they hired one woman, she was 2 times with a moving team, and it was to hard for her, and in the end, she was driving around testlab animals. you see, that's the main problem with quotas and stuff like that, it isn't going to work, because a woman has to want it, so that she isn't going to proclaim, that it is to hard for her.your movements tend to create more victims then it does fix them.so why don't we just creat a movement for free humans, with no bias, and no gender specification in the title?because that isn't the plan, who would want to loose all the special treatment, and in the end, you just want to save the status quo for the women.in the end a woman mostly will choose the guy that uses her like a condom, he pulls her over his interesst, he pulles her personality over his and same goes the sexy time way, you want a guy that decides, but most of these guys throw you away, as soon as you would fit in their lifes.and that's the main problem with women knowadays, they just know affection, but forgot what love realy is since feminsim most women tend to live alone, and can't hold on for too long to one man, and that's the toxicity of your movement, you declare us as two types of persons, nice guy asshole, and as in your female view, bitch and nice girl, but all the bitches and nice girls cling to the same type of guy, because in women you don't see the base that both of these parts are in you, but in every man, there is an asshole.if you hurt somebody he will change, and most women still don't know what behaviour hurts man, and if you tell them, you can bet your ass she's going to use it against you.i'm fed up with this behaviour, i'm one of these man, that stopped dating all together because of naggynes, never being happy, and straiving for way too much than you need.

Bart Bols Oh my God, you are a complete idiot if you believe that hormones is what makes girls like what society tells girls to like and the same with boys.Yes we do impose gender roles that are completely unnecessary. On the contrary.Im not forcing anyone to choose or not. I believe that any person can choose what he wants regardless of his gender and thats why gender roles are bullshit, they are a human invention that does no one a favor.Just look how society imposes these roles. as a male if i become a hair dresser, a model a dress designer, a makeup artist, if i like the color pink, if i cry, if i show emotion, i will be heavily criticized as a pussy , a girl,a woman etc.... and this happens even with our children, when boys don't behave in a "boyish" way they get feedback like "he talks like a girl" "he walks like girls" "he throws like a girl" etc...The same with girls. All of this starts in a young age , we teach young kids that boys are this and girls are that, boys get army toys like tanks and fake guns as gift,and girls get dolls and miniature houses.This gives children an idea that boys have to be dominant and powerful and emotionless, and girls need to be soft and nurturing and that they should care only about cleaning cooking and looking beautiful.All of this results in a huge of bubble of social pressure once we grow up.Even as adults we have to be inside the gender role segregated world. Trust me, once we eliminate gender roles and teach each individual even from a young age to identify with whatever gender he wants and at the same time express himself the way he wants, behave how he wants, and be who he wants, once we do that, we will become a much better society. ”No they dont, just look at who keeps winning hair dressing competitions... its always dudes ... nobody gives a fuck”Exactly, because we are in the process of eliminating gender roles. Decades ago this wouldnt have happened. Just compare before and after and connect the dots.Read this: [LINK] ”David Reimer”Gender identity does not equal Gender behavior (or should i say Gender stereotypical behavior) Gender is how a person feels and sees himself, as biologists and psychologists like to put it its ”who do you want to go bed as” in contrast to sexual orientation which is ”who do you want to go to bed with”.Now when some identifies with a certain gender, it doesn’t mean that he should lock himself with characteristics that society sees each gender, for example im male and i identify as a male, but it doesn’t mean im gonna do what ”most males” would wanna do, cause there is no ”most males”, its only me doing what interests me and its another person doing what interests him, its not him doing it for his own gender.A biologically born male who identifies as a female doesn’t mean that he or now she is gonna wear dresses and talk in a feminine way or have long hair, it means that she identifies as a female in her own mind and she can still for example do what supposedly males stereotypically do       How will you do this? by forcing people to behave a certain way?Honey please, do you really believe that in you got the free thinking card in this discussion. I dont wanna force anyone into anything. what im saying is the exact opposite, a lot of people in a certain gender who want to do something that isnt acceptable in a sense with his gender according to society, this person will be severely pressured and thats just wrong, what i want is a society where all people from all genders can be free and open and behave how they wish, and we are becoming one whether you like it or not. Im not saying that woman should stop cooking and cleaning and men should stop watch sports and love trucks. What im saying is that what we love and want shouldnt be correlated to what gender we identify with, as long as you dont harm anyone you should do whatever you want with your life.	Gender, Nobody, Sexual, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	14/401	3.491
fireonthemountain1776 There is a biologically difference between men and woman, there just isn’t a difference between behaviors,interests, wants, dont wants and social roles.Also despite the fact that i am a feminist, i dont want you to think that i agree with man hater feminazis, i dont agree that women should have more benefits than men, i think both should be equal .nevertheless i’m a feminist because like laci said sexism harms men, i don’t know if you realized but men are under social pressure as well, examples are mentioned in the video. ”that is just how our brain works”WRONG. its keeping from our brain to work,like i said before at a young age, we are subjected to what society and the media and the environment perceives gender. ”we already live in a world where people can do what they want no matter what gender they are”exactly, thats im talking about. Thats because people are realizing that gender roles have no use whatsoever.”if trucks somehow become ”gender neutral” people will find other stuff that incidentally seems to attract one gender more then another”well thats not the case today. you are claiming stuff that isn’t happening at all.	Age, Gender	Age - General, Gender - General	6/108	5.556
I’m literally talking with the most arrogant person ever. Dude all the examples you have given of colors and what not. these are all the product of gender role elimination that happened and still is happening, its not that im revolting against society. what im telling you is already happening, this is our psychological evolution, we are turning away from gender roles and actually living our lives the way we want not what society expects us to live it.Theres nothing human nature about someone wanting to do something that interests him and he feels pressured doing it because society expects him not to do it for his gender. and yes ill keep saying it over and over gender roles are some kind of social structure formed by society. and its losing. sorry to disappoint you.Men and women have the freedom to do as they wish regardless of what norms are there. and more men and women are beginning to realize that gender roles are useless just like you.You know what, i wanna know something from you, what gender roles do you suppose men and woman happen to choose out of a biological factor?	Gender, Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	8/196	4.082

I think it would be funny if after all these videos you end up being with a guy who has all those qualities because women vote with their bodies and most average women are not attracted to men who are like themselves. I think most men in America bought into the idea that they don't have to play a gender role (myself included) until they had seen the woman they loved ride into the sunset with a hot cowboy. Perhaps there are scientific reasons why women want men to be a certain way? Right now at this point in my life I have to probably except the idea that when I start making lots of money more women will love me. Most women I meet want me to tell them that I either have a great job or working on a way to make lots of money. Its going to be extremely hard for me to respect women if they end up being nicer to me because I have a bigger bank account. I hope that is not the case but maybe I myself as much as I want equality might have to one day except that women are mostly materialistic. Maybe my heart will be broken but on the bright side I might get a good lap dance among other things.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/222	0.901

In the future feminism will tip over the other end of the scale and men will no longer be treated as equals because they feel they cannot fight back due to society's portrayal of women being fragile, although we say we are perfectly capable of defending ourselves. A women should not be able to lay their hands on a man just as a man to a woman . mas9510 Strange that you mention mining, since it isn't exactly a high-pay job, but since you've brought that up... [LINK] [LINK] > also women are the majority of voters why haven't they voted more female candidates into parts of the gov't?Because there aren't enough female politicians in the higher positions. Because men don't want women in politics. Because they think that women aren't as good as men in politics and economics - see the paragraph about the gender pay gap for details.> *Margaret Thatcher- the first female prime minister of the United Kingdom.Congratulations. I could cite every single UK Prime Minister before her.Citation needed for discrimination being equal for both genders.> ME- from a business point of view, if you can pay less to a gender than the other wouldn't it be better to employ more of that said gender because it's cheaper?First: the reason many women can't work full-time in high-pay careers is because, if there are children, then men aren't willing to stay at home and forgo their careers to raise them. It has ALWAYS been regarded as a women-only job. That's around 20 years where that woman could maybe get a part-time job, where she could've just pursued her career, got her promotions and earned a wage high enough to sustain the entire family. You know, the thing men (the traditional breadwinners) usually do.Second: even when we compare women in specific positions with men in those same positions, women are paid less and offered less chances at promotions because people believe that women are "naturally" less efficient than men, regardless of how efficient that specific female employee actually is.Here's two examples: -4000$ in yearly pay. Female applicants had the exact same qualifications as male ones. [LINK] 2 men hired for each woman. When hiring managers chose the less efficient applicant (applicants underwent a test before meeting the managers, but the latter weren't allowed to see the test results), 80 of the time said less efficient applicant was the man. Even when allowed to know the test results, STILL 1,5 men hired for every woman. Again, it was more likely that a less efficient man was chosen over a more efficient woman, than a less efficient woman being chosen over a more efficient man. [LINK] That objection of yours has been countered to death. [LINK] The vast majority of rapists are men (If we consider prison rapes, then more than 99 of rapes are done by men).Rape isn't a matter of sexuality, but of power, of completely subjugating your victim.There often are violent hierarchies in prison.Abusers aren't allowed to choose the gender of their victims in prison - men and women are kept separate. Male rapists don't have access to female potential victims - only male ones.Conclusion: rapists rape men in prison because that's what they have access to. If it was an actual preference, the incidence of sexual violence outside of prison wouldn't be this unbalanced towards female victims. > "sexism towards men is bad, because it's bad for women" HOW!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!That, right there, is the proof that you haven't watched the video.

mas9510 Look at those goalposts go galloping in the sunset!Re: Julie Bindel, I have two objections. One:Political lesbians are really crucial, because we were the ones that first said that women should be able to determine their own sexuality. We were the ones that said that all women can be lesbians and that heterosexuality is compulsory under a system of male supremacy. We were the ones that said that until women had a free choice, that we had to speak about heterosexuality as imposed upon us, rather freely chosen. This is completely unlike the mantra from the so called 'pro- sex ' third wave feminists, who claim that we are anti sex and prudish. Political lesbians were the ones that said to women: 'you can be lesbians, you can be non monogamous, you can have loads of sex , with loads of women, you can enjoy sex and it doesn't have to be something that is imposed upon you, by the type of men that think foreplay is unpacking the shopping.'So I think political lesbianism has a crucial role, because it tells women that sexuality is political under a system of male supremacy. It tells us that sexual acts are all political and that none of them are without meaning. And it also clearly defines the fact that equality and meaningful sexual pleasure can be achieved far easier with women than it can be with men under this system.There you fucking go. She wasn't referring to actually ending heterosexuality, bur rather, to end the imposition of heterosexuality on people - specifically, the gender-normative heterosexuality that views sex as something that is for the enjoyment of men's desires only.Second: note the part that I've bolded. If you really think that Julie Bindel is representative of all feminists even after reading that part (as you should have when you decided to bring up that link - or you don't bother to read the things you link to?), then you're a moron.Also: you still have to address every single other point I've made thus far. So the airline's policy, while discriminatory, did actually have a logic. [LINK] 4) As for "a woman who rape a man is not a rape, you go girl" this is a quote and not an uncommon one, for me to name who said it, not being the original poster is near impossible, though from what I've seen a lot of feminists have a notion that men cannot be raped (an extremely offensive thing to rape victims)Cite one. For every citation, I bet I could bring up at least half a dozen instances of anti-feminists who fight back against affirmative consent campaigns, blame rape victims for their own rapes (including male rape victims), or accuse them of lying.5) " a man who look a girl is a rape "I repeat: When did that happen? When did feminists did that?6) The "manspreading" issue isn't an issue. There was ONE arrest against two men, and it wasn't because they "manspreaded". It was because they were not-white. "Patriarchy" refers to a social system where "masculine" and "men" are treated as the default members of society, while "feminine" and "women" are treated as second-class citizens. A few examples:&gt; Discrimination against women in many workplaces - for example, firefighting... [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] ... or mining. [LINK] [LINK] &gt; The imposition of traditional "gender roles" that, among other things, want women to stay at home and take care of the kids and not care about actually being an active part of society. This is one of the biggest causes for the gender wage gap, btw. How does feminism help men? I don't need to cry about how someone in society doesn't like what I do or how I look. I don't need approval from men or women. I am a male that struggles with achieving the body shape I want, But instead of blaming media for constantly putting male models with great abbes in my face, I chose to either except my body or change certain exercise/eating habits. I don't need feminism to tell me I should be comfortable with my body, I have the brain power to deal with my own problems. Women should feel the same about feminism. Girls are strong and should feel strong without having to be told they are. Girls pleas know that you are capable of doing anything. If you are being told by feminist that you cant get a job in a man filled occupation because men won't hire you due to you being a woman , Please know that is not true. and feminist telling girls this is only going to discourage them. its like "why try if I'm going to fail". positive outlooks are the key	Woman	Gender - General	1/189	0.529
Yeah im sure there are still some sexual discrimination in the work place. My point was that it must be discouraging as a woman to be told that they won't be able to get a job because of men. I apologies for talking for talking in absolutes. I was trying to push a point. I haven't read the links you sent as of yet but will when I have time.  It is important to bring awareness to sexual discrimination but we have been preaching the same message for decades and im sure people who are hiring are aware of this.If an employer feels like he she may work better with men as apposed to women he may be inclined to hire a man. I think that If feminism would stop focusing on minute details such as woman's body image and magazine adds, other women and men would take the movement more seriously. Personally I don't see why egalitarianism is a problem. It does all the same things feminism claims to do without the horribly off putting stigmas feminism has acquired over the years. Such as man hating. Most men don't want to support a group that they feel hates them.	Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	3/200	1.5

A gender which is traditionally represented as part of a binary would be defined in opposition to its binary counterpart. Not exactly a revolutionary conclusion to draw.I'm not certain how teaching children to value "feminine" traits INSTEAD of "masculine" traits will help them in a capitalist democracy. We don't financially reward cooperation, we reward business decisions which increase profits and reduce expenses, which often require aggressive behaviours. We elect people into positions of power who have the capacity to dominate their subordinates. We celebrate people who fight back against their attackers, defending themselves and others. Non-violence wont save you from a (metaphorical) tiger. I agree that feminine traits should be valued and that gender norms should change, but that includes valuing those "masculine" traits as well. It saddens me that in a video about sexism and men the majority of the discussion was not focussed on men or the sexism men face. In any discussion with a feminist the "but what about men" response is justifiably met with derision. Women have issues of inequality they'd like addressed, lets do it and lets not get defensive and bring up every other group that has issues as though it somehow diminishes women's plight. But let's also have the same respect for men and their issues, especially if we'd like to ask them for help with correcting gender inequalities for women. The plight of third world women is far greater than the plight of first world women, but that's not a valid argument for failing to address sexism in the first world. By the same token women's plight may be greater than men's plight in the bid for equality, but that doesn't mean that we shouldn't address men's issues too. If we want to set the precedent of dealing with the "worst" inequalities first and foremost, I don't want to hear the term "manspreading" uttered until FGM, sexual slavery and honour killings have been eradicated from the world.	Gender, Sexism, Sexual	Gender - General	7/326	2.147

Coolt Cooly The hell are you going abo - OH, I get it. When feminists say:"Why the hell do only rape victims have to worry about not getting raped? This never happens with victims of other crimes. Stop blaming the victims for what they should have/have not done and start educating people about consent."You hear:"Don't do anything to protect yourself from rape".You also fall on the assumption that teaching people about consent is useless. You're wrong.&gt; A quick survey showed that 1 in 3 USA college men would "force a woman to have sex with them" if they were sure that there would have been no consequences for them.So, yes, they surely need to learn what consent is. Both so that they don't actually rape someone, and so that they would actually believe rape victims who were raped in this manner. [LINK] &gt; In fact, 1 in 16 USA men have candidly admitted to have done at least one of the following at least once:1) Tried, but for various reasons did not succeed, in having sexual intercourse with an adult by using or threatening to use physical force (twisting their arm, holding them down, etc.) if they did not cooperate.2)Had sexual intercourse with someone, even though they did not want to, because they were too intoxicated (on alcohol or drugs) to resist your sexual advances (e.g., removing their clothes )?3)Had sexual intercourse with an adult when they didn't want to because you used or threatened to use physical force (twisting their arm; holding them down, etc.) if they didn't cooperate.4)Have you ever had oral sex with an adult when they didn't want to because you used or threatened to use physical force (twisting their arm; holding them down, etc.) if they didn't cooperate. [LINK] [LINK] &gt; Then there's the fact that rape awareness campaigns aimed at potential rapists and bystanders does work. The "Don't Be That Guy" poster campaign lowered the amount of sexual offences by 10 in a single year, in every city it was used in. [LINK] &gt; Also: a 1-hour long lesson about sexual consent (particularly when alcohol is involved) was issued. +Ass Eater Now apply exaCtly what you said wi th reversed gender roles . More women are sexually degraded or threatened or ridiculed etx than men on the internet. I dont mean general trolling abuse...I mean that women are constantly objectified and attacked with sexist slurs much more than men. So yes I agree... if anybody, male or female is incredibly abusive to another person whom they disagree with online it's fucked up and could hurt the more mentally unstable people. What I'm trying to say is that it happens much more to women. If you were to compare the comment sections of Mra videos with the comment sections of feminist videos (like Laci green) You wil find the majority of insults involving female genitals, female related swear words such as cunt ...and just general feminine sexist stereotypes are more commonly directed at women on Both videos. This says a lot to me about our culture and how much men still objectify women ....because the I nternet is a microcosm of our culture . Just because people csnt see the trolls in person doesn't mean a whole lot of people are thinking in this degrading way...and it's a concern. If Laci is making a video mainly concerning discrimination against women, why is that wrong ? Are there none about men? I'm pretty sure that's against rhetorical question	Gender	Gender - General	1/227	0.441
+Stella blue * a rhetorical question I meant. Also those of you who keep complaini ng about feminists...did it ever occur to you that feminism came about due to women not having equal rights? So there needed to be a specific movement focusing on women's rights and their discrimination. This is no n different from black rights and gay rights which are all under the umbrella of human rights. Just becuse there are cause representing certain demographics, doesn't mean they don't care about the persecution of other groups. By pointing out sexism (like, for example ,in this disgusting comment section) No one is saying that ALL men are bad or that they hate men. They're saying that there is a problem that is big enough that it should be pointed out. By saying there is a type of male stereotype which is toxic and which should be discouraged - doesn't mean we are trying to femenize men....just encourage people to be less aggressive, sexually degrading and unable to express sadness, fear or pain because that would be 'unmanly'. Feminists themselves discourage this stereotype . it does a disservice to men....and no doubt one of the reasons the male suicide rate is so high is because all their lives they are encouraged to toughen up, boys don't cry etx etc. z feminists didn't encourage men to behave like that.....other men did. +Stella blue Ok first of all, nobody is making you try to fit in the "gender roles". In the west, you're lucky enough to not be oppressed. You have the freedom to do whatever you want without having anyone nagging at you. How are women in the west sexually degraded? Because they appear semi-naked in adverts and commercials? Well, guess what, they have signed a contract themselves, so they more than likely have been comfortable enough to show off their private bits. Since you're touching on this topic, I'd like to point out how when photos of semi-naked men are applauded but when it's a woman's image, it's seen as degrading by most feminists. A slur is only meaningful if you care enough about it. Toughen up, both men and women are abused in a physical, verbal or sexual manner all the time, most of the time, to a worse extent than being called a meaningless slur on the internet. On the internet you have the power to actually block people, it's not a big deal. Just block the person, and get on with your life. Be mature enough to let it go instead of holding onto it. I have never encountered an MRA channel, therefore I'd like to ask you to present me with a link to one, as for the feminist videos I've seen, most of them have radical views which are mostly about western women, instead of focusing on people who actually need it. Stereotypes are meaningless, it's your fault if you actually pay attention to them. Stereotypes are outdated at this point, but it's alright to make some banter out of them once in a while. Just because someone doesn't agree with your views, doesn't mean he's a troll. What Laci is doing IS wrong, because she isn't advocating equality between the sexes. If you want equality, you have to mention issues that both sexes face. Western women aren't even oppressed! I mean, I can't even imagine her going somewhere in the middle east, she wouldn't even last a day there.	Gender, Nobody, Sexual	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/345	0.87

I think a good argument worth mentioning in the defense of the way that masculinity is culturally defined through comparison to femininity as described in this video, is the concept of the essence and definition of a thing as garnered through perspective. For example, if you were to try to define or describe an apple without using the term ' apple ' how would you do this? You could say that it's red or green or a fruit to start... with time and the definitions of other things that aren't apples you could eventually get to where you want to be. You could do that for all forms of comparison and eventually you'll get pretty close to the definition of an apple without specifically using the term. In a similar way, the definition of masculinity can be defined as what it is not. In the case of masculinity however the benefit is that there are only two diametrically opposed concepts involved really, and that's because these concepts are arbitrarily formed through cultural development. So in a kind of analytical way, if you have X and Y you can say that you know you are looking at X because you know that it isn't Y. That however, presupposes you have a definition of Y, which again comes from cultural development. In regards to the reality of the definition of masculinity, this kind of means that the collective of femininity has a lot of power to redefine. As femininity becomes increasingly dynamic, masculinity is forced, through this method of definition, into an increasingly more narrow definition. Of course such a notion doesn't hold to reality because eventually things hit a breaking point tipping point. +Synnøve Reitan wrong Is subjective. The issue I take with this video, and the majority of feminist videos, is that they downright ignore men's issues. They claim "feminism is for everyone" and yet I have never seen them support anything that would address the issues that men have. We can't have true equality if we have a group of people only focused on themselves. And especially with things like killallmen. I mean seriously. It hurts me to know someone wants me dead just because of my gender . Before they even meet me or know anything about me. The way I see it, is that feminism is only separating us even more. David DeAvila i guess what im trying to ask is more like, is she lying? Or does she say something that differs from the truth? I also most likely can't disagree with you on feminist videos ignoring mens issues, eventhoug i don't really watch many, other than laci's. And believe me, it hurts me too to know that someone wants to kill you just because of your gender ! I also believe its downright stupid to say such a thing.... But back to feminism, of course you can't ignore the fact that feminism was created to take care of womans issues, but i've actually read quite a lot of articles on mens issues on pages like everydayfeminism, and Upworthy, for example articles trying to explain the higher suicide rates for men, amongst other. So its not like mens issues is nonexistent in feminism! Also i want to say, im a feminist myself, but if the feminism isn't based on intersectionalism, then its most likely, not everytime, but most likely just nonsense, and not even worth to neither watch or read. This is where I stopped the video THIS time. If you actually expect me to believe that the reason my ex wife got the kids even when I had substantial reason to believe I could provide a safer and more stable living situation for them and that the amount of child support I'm expected to pay is based on the amount that the child support department thinks I SHOULD be able to make regardless of how much more money she makes than I do, and that I can lose my licence if I don't pay the back-dated child support arrears somehow, but I still have to take responsibility for the debts she has that are still in my name, that all of that is due to patriarchy and sexism towards women, all I can say is that I wish there could be more sexism towards men because it seems to be a legitimate benefit.People like Laci Green needs to stop talking about things they do not remotely understand. It's not their fault that they have no frame of reference, they just shouldn't talk about things as though they do just to establish themselves as bringers of social justice.She has the right to say anything she likes, but I hope people will be smart enough not to take any of it seriously. +Mentalidade Logica My question would be - how do you figure sexism does not hurt guys. The current feminist structure is very, very sexist, and it hurt guys a lot. Guys do not go into primary teaching, because they do not want to have it assumed they are pedophiles. Women claims a guy did something, he is in effect guilty until he proves his innocence, invert the situation, and he is merely bellyaching, this is sexism - and it hurts guys. The courts awards custody to women, unless they are proven child abusers because they are deemed better parents -regardless of the reality of that situation, that hurts men and children, and is due to sexism . I know of one case where a baby was hurt, they did not even look at the wife, until the husband could establish he had not been alone with baby for months, and when confronted with this she fessed up. She let him suffer scrutiny for a long time, and the only reason he was under it, was because he was a male.A woman hits a guy - even in public - well he must have had it coming, vice versa - people will jump in - sexism , and well hurts men. There are no shelters for battered men, so they must either abandon their children, or suffer but there are many shelters for women - sexism - and hurts men. In fact I would go so far as to say, men have a huge interest in sexism , they just do not realize it, because 3rd & 4th wave feminists - wave defined sexism as only being situations that disadvantage women - period. Malcolm NewallI do like your question and comments.The sexism that this video is referring to is not a priority for men, it is more stereotyping then anything (from what I recall watching).I absolutely agree with with you that feminism is in fact the root and cause of many laws that negatively impact on men and therefore that type of sexism hurts men. Examples women=victims, penis=rapists and even HeForShe some of many an example.The problem is that the word sexism is usually associate with insignificant gender type issues followed by, we need feminism as the solution to stereotyping/ sexism . She's basically saying that men are effected by sexism because they are initially sexist toward women, seeing them as inferior and doing all they can to psychologically separate themselves from them.Give me a goddamn break...this logic can easily be flipped around since "masculine" women are just as socially unaccepted as "feminine" men. Laci is not a true feminist, she is just being sexist toward men in disguise like most so-called "feminists" in this day and age . True feminism is something to be admired and supported, such as pushing for equal wages, not blaming men for starting conflict between the sexes. Its sad that men don't have groups to prevent sexism because fake feminists like this one aim to portray women as victims. Men and women are biological opposites for the most part, and conflicts like this are bound to arise (coming from both sides, not just one) as they do with all opposing human interactions. What angers me the most is that Laci puts on an act like she is pushing for freedom and equality, but instead slyly places the blame on men by only examining one half of the gender role issue. This is simply backwards feminism and agenda-pushing at its finest...	Age, Gender, Sexism	Age - General, Gender - General	4/204	1.961
John Oz The VAST majority of sexism is against women. Any gender can be discriminated against, but to have sexism you need an entire social system that considers a certain gender "inferior".	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	4/32	12.5

Dario Carraresi Lest were talking about any civilized social system before the 1920's (with exceptions of course, such as rules of chivalry toward women in medieval times), that statement isn't true and provides an example that there is an equal amount of male and female sexism. Just because female sexism is actually addressed unlike male sexism doesn't mean they suffer the VAST MAJORITY of it, and in itself acts as a form of male sexism because men's issues have no representation in our society. It's the same deal with slavery in the US. While it is true that black people were treated horribly and unfairly in the past, it should have no effect on the present. But, black people use it as a form of racial defense, and have made it so only white people can be targeted as a "racist", whether its justifiable or not in any given situation. Women have crafted the same reality from sexism against men, which is inherently sexist toward men in the same way the previous statement is racist toward white people. There's no doubt that women experience sexism, or that black people experience racism, in the modern day, but the lack of attention men/white people get on those respective fronts is unequal and only the first step into the bigger issue. I could go on to list specific examples of male sexism that are generally swept under the rug in our society, usually because they've been deemed socially-acceptable to believe in, but I saw it covered in several other comments on this video already. To sum up, just know that there is a flip-side to everything, and each side of the coin is just as shitty as the other in this toxic society we live in.	Black, Racism, Racist, Sexism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	13/293	4.437
John Oz Who made it so that women couldn't enter the military? Men. Does that hurt men? In case of the obligatory draft, yes. Who attacked feminists when they dared to go against the stereotyped gender roles - including male ones? Men. Does that hurt men? Well, a lot of men seem to complain about not getting child custody - which is given to the parent who spent the most time with the kid, because being able to stay with that parent is beneficial for the kid. And who's that parent, according to the stereotypes? Mothers. Another gender role that anti-feminists want to maintain is "men don't cry, because they aren't sissies". I can't even begin to talk about how wrong that teaching is, so I'm gonna let this trailer do the job for me. [LINK] Who're the ones claiming that false rape accusations are "an epidemic", when this isn't true? Men, mostly. Does that hurt men? And so on.	Gender	Gender - General	2/191	1.047

Mirander Black just because you know peaceful men and aggressive women doesn't mean you can just get rid of a stereotype. you seem to think because you have some counter examples that the whole is wrong. Maybe i didn't put it clear enough in general men are the more aggressive ones because our bodies produce higher levels of testosterone those tend to be more violent and sexual . does this mean all of us are hell no i am a pretty peaceful guy and i know some aggressive women but as a whole that doesn't change the fact that men tend to be more aggressive than women.	Black, Sexual	Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	2/106	1.887
NATHANIEL SMITH" in general men are the more aggressive" Untrue. You are simply using a generalisation that comes with being a Man. That "men" should be strong, aggressive ect.However in reality this is untrue, and this is why we see both men and women being violent.Women may be more likely to be aggressive to their partners than men according to the BPS. (1) Men and women are educated, traditionally, to carry out different social roles.Think of all the ways in which modern Western society teaches children that fighting is more suitable for men than to women.Folk literature and the media constantly present men, and not women, fighting. Parents buy toy guns for boys and dolls for girls.Parents are more willing to endorse and encourage the aggressive behavior of boys, and not of girls. Again and again, directly and indirectly, minors learn that men are aggressive, and women not [Berkowitz, 1993, p. 395].The theory of 'social roles' has created a new paradigm in gender policies and marks, even today, the ways in which many civic and preschool education strategies are developed.It is presumed that girls and boys shall be educated and treated alike, non-discriminatory, and even the behavioral differences between them will disappear.First of all, it's not the parents that impose behavioral styles on their children, but their reaction at the latter's requests; toy guns are bought for boys and dolls for girls because these are usually the children's preferences (in part genetically predetermined).And as parents respond to children's preformed wishes, so do media, offering a content which corresponds to behavioral patterns already existing on a social level [Hoyenga, Hoyenga, 1993].All of these anatomical, hormonal, behavioral and evolutionary factors demonstrate the biological, instinctual inclination of men to be more combative. Therefore, on an individual and social level, men are involved in acts of violence and crime. The social environment only cultivates and points out these predispositions towards fighting and aggression.(1) [LINK]	Gender	Gender - General	1/331	0.302

NATHANIEL SMITH No, if I give the boy a Barbie, I'm 100 sure he's gonna do whatever he wants with that Barbie. That includes, but isn't limited to: playing with it (and that itself can go from "Barbie's Tea Party" to, say, "KILL LA KILL"); use it as a gun; throw it away; give it to someone else as a gift; collect it.What he does with that Barbie isn't the issue; it's treating a boy who enjoys playing with Barbies as "wrong" that is the issue.Also, dividing the toys by gender is stupid. Take the Avengers' merchandise, for instance: it's treated as a "boy" toyline, so there's pretty much no Black Widow toys, for instance. The toy companies justify that with "pandering boyish toys to boys and girly toys to girls, so there's no competition between toys industries and no sale loss".Which is stupid, because that same company is missing out the chances to sell toys to (and make profits from):- the girls who like female superheroes;- the girls who like superheroes in general, but feel discouraged because all the Avengers boys are male, for boys;- the boys who like female superheroes;- the people who like superheroes AND princessy toys, so Disney could make TWICE the money from them;- all the fans of Black Widow or another specific female superhero, be they male, female, kids or adults. NATHANIEL SMITH It's not just the girls who like superheroines. It's also the boys who like superheroines, and the Black Widow fans - of both genders. That's four more markets, ones that haven't been tapped yet.Plus, as I've said, there's those kids - both genders - who like princesses AND superheroes, despite how Disney seems to think that if someone likes princesses they CLEARLY will never like superheroes, or viceversa. But no, Disney seems hellbent on selling Avengers merchandise on boys ONLY, missing out half a dozen untapped potential markets.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/91	1.099

What this cackling cumdumpster and other feminists don't understand is that not every social expectation just falls out of the fucking sky. A lot of men's behavior is shaped by what women naturally respond to sexually: being strong, confident, a leader of men, tall and muscular (a sign of good genes), and so on that women have no choice but to favor when selecting men. I know this fucking dimwit thinks that men should be able to be vulnerable and cry, weak, have his girlfriend protect him instead of the other way around, be submissive, and have little experience with women, but what she doesn't fucking understand is that no matter how much she says she thinks this should be the case, if she came across a guy like that, her pussy would be dryer than the fucking sahara desert and she would instead be BIOLOGICALLY PROGRAMMED to choose a strong man who is sought after by other women. Sexism is a very important topic and should be taught in schools. It is usually during puberty that guys start to be pressured in to being the stereotypical GUY. It is hard to appear that way when you aren't like that. I strongly believe that women should be equal to men but upon examination guys also can't be who they are because of societal boundaries and it's wrong.I have a question that I haven't found the answer to. When I girls look at guys and say they're hot, is that sexual objectification? If a guy did that to a girl it would be considered sexual objectification. I don't see how it is wrong one way but not the other. I'm asking this because it frustrates me when girls chat about who at my school they want to "do". 1. These aren't even remotely close to relevant issues men face today. Instead of addressing feel good bullshit about how men "can't express their feewings" how about you address the following: rampant paternity fraud and false rape accusations, how little boys are being drugged into a oblivion in school for normal male adolescent behavior, how incompetent equal opportunity hires (women) are taking mens jobs, how a woman can have me fired from my job for no other reason than she didn't like how she felt about me, how men are being excluded from STEM fields while women are being encouraged into them (even though most of them end up failing miserably), the fact that i don't get free shit because i don't have two tits and a vagina, 0 reproductive rights, the fact that when the draft gets reinstated I'm legally bound to go die for my country whereas women get to opt out, suicide and homelessness rate disparity, how men get harsher sentences than women for the exact same crimes, and how about how prostate cancer kills more men than breast cancer kills women yet no one seems to give a shit about prostate cancer. Almost every single one of these are relevant issues that can ruin a mans life yet somehow feminism gets to hog the spotlight with trivial bullshit like "manspreading" and "street harrassment". +Dario Carraresi 1.One evolution is responsible for who we are as a species, civilization, intelligence, and human rights as it it influenced cognitive development. 2. Two I would want the guy aforementioned saying something why sexism actually hurts men, not Laci’s puppetry for how sexism hurts women. If he did say the same thing, I would have called him a mangina. This video forgot any real men’s rights issues as our female biased justice system. Plus, a guy would be more relate able. 3. Biology is responsible for gender behaviors and norms. Estrogen in women and testosterone in men influence these behaviors. Also, women have more gray matter while men have more white matter. This makes women more communicative then men and more likely to talk or gossip it out then get into a physical fight. 4. I also think the justice system is biased. I think it a men’s right issue that should be covered. I fight for human equality for BOTH sexes. I’m an egalitarian. 5. I think you and I have similar views, but we got off on the wrong foot as my vague comment may have mislead you. I would like to continue this debate or we come to agreement. Kevu Seth 1+3) And? If you’re trying to argue BIOTRUTHS about how men and woman are ”destined” to different jobs, then why do you oppose, say, men being forced to sign for the draft? They evolved for fighting, while women evolved for nurturing. So, no woman is fit for the Army; so, the draft being for men only is right. By opposing that, anti-feminists oppose nature.Or how about child custody? As for the above, women evolved for nurturing. So, they should get child custody over the man, always.Of course, I don’t believe neither of the above. In fact, I don’t believe that gender roles are primarily biological. I think they’re primarily social constructs.2) This video is about how sexism hurts men. A good chunk of men’s issues doesn’t stem from sexism at all. The other part stems from the same exact sexism that places women as ”weak, emotional, submissive” and men as ”strong, rational, domineering” and shames whoever doesn’t fit this rigid categorization.4) This is a bit vague. Are you referencing to child custody, the sentencing disparity, or something else entirely?	Gender, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	6/185	3.243

1+3) Yeah, gender roles are social constructs caused by biology. They are how we ft into society because of gender NORMALLY. There are always exceptions. I'm not saying women should be banned from the draft. It should be an integrated society. I'm just saying MEN ARE MORE LIKELY TO DO THE DRAFT. It's a mixed influence of decisions, culture, and biology. Look at the Turkish Peshmerga with their kick ass female army. Still, more men join the military but their culture influences for a woman to do that. I'm calling for an integrated society. I want this country to offer equality to let ANYONE do what they want based on merits, not sex . Same thing with the child custody situation. The better parents should be chosen. However, a mother is MORE LIKELY to be chosen as they TEND TO BE MORE NURTURING. Even Laci admits these are "feminine" characteristics. She wants men to express more of these. Everything we are and why we do things is caused by biology. I think you think I mean to say these are rigid characteristics all men and women need to follow. However, I'm saying these are characteristics that are AVERAGES.2) I don't agree with this video as I	Gender, Sex, Woman	Gender - General	4/206	1.942
think that what Laci is saying is puppetry for how sexism hurts women indirectly. Just one man's opinion. I also disagree that society forces a guy and a woman to be manly or girly. I think that these are ways people act naturally due to how they handle things. A guy when upset by a breakup might go get some beer with his squad while a girl might watch a movie with Haagen Daz. Not saying the vice versa can't happen, but it is their decision. 4) Yes, I'm referring to these along with many other ones. Also with Laci, a guy rejecting a girl who's fat is fat shaming while a girl rejecting a guy who's fat is women empowerment. Really, that's equality? I would really like to talk to these guys if what you are saying is true.All I am getting from this video is a straw-man attack on Masculinity itself by obfuscating masculine traits pertaining to strength, perseverance, drive, energy and determination and deceitfully equating them to evils such as abuse, shaming, apathy, cruelty and hegemony. You are talking to us as if we as men do not have intelligence to figure out that you are shaming us into your mold of what you as a feminist believes a man should be. How are you any less sexist than when society dictates what a woman should be?Emotional manipulation and cheap psychological bullying can only get you feminists so far. We as men have been tolerant of your BS to the point where we are now beginning to feel stupid for allowing you to degrade us this much.So much of the problems men face today are the direct result of the shaming and blaming of our entire gender by feminists like you who undermine our masculinity with propaganda, misinformation, shaming tactics and emotional manipulation. You accuse men, all men, of being sexists. But when men bring you legitimate cases where men are at a disadvantage and women hold all the cards you still concoct these mental gymnastics in order to still place the blame on men: "Men also suffer for their own sexism." That is your entire spiel.Homophobia is directly connected to religiosity and NOT to masculinity. Those nations that are the most religious are also the most homophobic whereas those who are the least religious are the most tolerant. Now let me inject some context into your deceitfully simplistic example about power dominance and aggression.Power. This is the ability to have control over one's own destiny. Amazing how Power + Men = Evil, yet Power + Women = Progress. Power is not always something that one gains through force, very often it is through consent as in the case of a democracy. Power is a good thing when it is freely given to the most competent and efficient people in order to wield it in a position of leadership. Consenting power to competent leaders gives others the freedom to peruse other activities. In the case of a nuclear family a wife consenting that her husband have the power over certain aspects of the family frees her to exercise power over other aspects of the family. In this case the power is shared, it always has been! A husband, or any head of a family, is not a total dictator who controls the finances, nutrition, bed times and every other single facet of a family life. A wife can consent to give the husband power over finances in order for her to concentrate on the nutrition and education of her children.Dominance. In and of itself this is not evil nor detrimental. Dominance is virtually the same as Power. Dominance can be obtained through force just as it can be obtained through consent or just by mere efficiency and	Gender, Homophobia, Homophobic, Mental, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Sexual Identity - General	7/742	0.943

So it's more like:Power + Men = DisparityPower + Men + Women = Equality.Case in point: your example about family. Which falls apart because it isn't a choice - women are expected to take the child-raising role. The vast majority of men refuses to take that role. So that woman is forced to choose: (1) Continue to pursue the full-time high-pay career (for ex. doctor or lawyer) and gain financial independency. You can't have kids - you don't want to take care of them, your husband doesn't want to either, so there's nobody who would take care of them. (2) Stay at home and raise the kids. During that period, you can't get a full-time high-pay job because, well, you have to stay at home and take care of the kids. Feminism is for nobody 1) Suicide is mostly caused by clinical depression. Do you know what cas increase the chance of getting clinical depression? Repressing your emotions. In case anyone thinks I'm hating, I did actually like this video and think she is completely correct. However, there's a point I need to make. She explained that men are pressured to be certain ways, so they aren't like women. This is true, but isn't it fair enough? In general, women are attracted to men and vice versa. To continue the human race there has to be attraction between them. If a man acted in a very feminine way women wouldn't find him attractive meaning they wouldn't reproduce. Same how everyone puts pressure on women to not be like men. For example, not having body hair and being submissive. xTSx Clan Here's a small thing to think about on the idea that society was and is sexist against women. We all know feminists claim women were oppressed by the men through patriarchy. But now imagine you have a boat, 100 years ago, when sexism was supposed to be rampant, as well as racism.Now imagine you have a boat half full of whites, half full of blacks, and it starts sinking. The whites decide who of the two will be saved. It's quite obvious they'd leave the blacks to die because they didn't value them much, and it's to be expected since blacks were oppressed in general, second class citizens, at least in the case of the USA.Anyway, now we pick a boat full of white people, but half are children. As to be expected, the most likely result is saving the children, because they were highly valued, and people would have protected them.Finally, the boat is full of men and women from the same social class. The men decide who gets saved. It's obvious they wouldn't die for "second class citizen" or people they wouldn't value much. It's also obvious they'd save high value people (supposing they have some decency), even if it means their own death. So if women were "second class citizen" and "oppressed", why the fuck did the men decide to value the lives of women as highly as those of children, and die instead of them ? Interestingly enough the Titanic shows exactly this (famous example so easy to find information).So women were as highly valued as children, and in fact you can find many more similarities in how both were treated. Briar Blackbourne The title of the video is "Does sexism hurt Men?". So, she's talking about how sexist beliefs affect men. I don't see what was hard to understand.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/29	3.448
You're missing the point. The topic was, does sexism effect men? And she answered yes - and talked about where those problems stem from and most importantly how we can FIX them. We force masculinity on boys, we criticize them for expressing normal healthy human emotion, and we stereotype the shit out of them. Our culture can be absolutely BRUTAL towards the men who do not conform to masculinity because we place so little value on feminine traits. To the point where the more men are like women, the less they are valued as humans. Doubles standards hurt everyone, and the way to fight the oppression that men face is by erasing our negative aditudes towards things that are traditionally refered to as 'female'. I left ant-feminism because I realized that it had NO plan for the men in my life, please try to understand. Real feminism like this, will benefit everyone, I promise you. sanos999 It kinda is.First of all: the vast majority of rapes outside of prison are from men against women. So, rape definitely has a heavy sexist component.Second: rape is about power, about utterly dominating and abusing someone else. The perpetrator's sexuality is a secondary factor.Third: prisons are divided by gender . So male rapists have access solely to possible male victims.Fourth: you know how violent criminals commit violent acts to signify their "status" within a group? It's even worse in prison.Conclusion: male rapists rape men (the only kind of victims available) in prison as a way to mantain their belief that they have the "power". Outside of it, they target those wo see as "inferior" - namely, women.Add other factors, such as:- The public belief that criminals "deserve to suffer in prison";- The shaming of any man who "acts like a woman " (for example: fag , girl, pussy , mangina...); that includes "he's been raped like a bitch";- The general belief that criminals lie about having been raped in order to get special tratment (generally, the people saying that are the same people who believe that "women falsely accuse men of rape to get attention");and you get a fucking nightmare for prison rape victims' hopes of getting any justice or help. Dario Carraresi Right, but I was talking about prison rape I don't get why you're targeting me when it has nothing to do with your point. sanos999 It IS a feminist issue. The shaming of men that don't conform to society's idea of masculinity? It's a feminist issue. The Boss Stage1 Last time I've checked, no. The Boss Stage1 That's a half-truth.First, it's not "biased judged give men harsher sentences". It's "biased judges give women lighter sentences". Which, by itself, means jack shit - giving special treatment to one group is still discrimination against everyone else.The problem arrives when people try to claim that this judicial bias is the fault of women. They're wrong. Why? Turns out it's male judges that are biased and more lenient towards female offenders. Female judges give to every gender the same sentences those biased judges give to male offenders.&gt; The findings regarding gender in the case of serious offenses are quite striking: the greater the proportion of female judges in a district, the lower the gender disparity for that district. I interpret this as evidence of a paternalistic bias among male judges that favors women. [LINK] So, what the hell is happening? In short, there's a lot of sexist beliefs that paints women as demure, emotional, submissive, less capable of logical thought, less physically strong than men, etc. This has been used to justify, for example, keeping women out of the Army or other physically demanding jobs; in THIS case, however, this stereotype also paints women as less capable of violence, both in terms of "being less capable of causing physical damage (especially against a STRONG MANLY MAN)", and in terms of "women abhor violence, they're psychologically incapable of acting violent".Therefore: female offenders are treated as less responsible than male offenders because they're believed to (A) cause less damage than men (regardless of how much damage that particular culprit caused), and (B) less responsible than male culprits (male criminal = "he's a criminal", female criminal = "they made her a criminal").Now, here's the thing: if women were the ones abusing their privilege, female judges would've been the ones giving unfair sentences. They aren't; male judges make up the bulk of the unfair ones.And not only feminists are NOT defending this judicial bias, but, since they've been (and still are) fighting for tearing down gender divisions, they're also fighting for more equal representation in the judicial system, which means more female judges, which means less gender bias.TL;dr: yes, there is a gender sentencing bias. It's NOT caused by feminists. In fact, feminists are working on destroying it.	Gender	Gender - General	6/383	1.567

Sexism hurts both genders, either directly or indirectly.I've always had a problem with the Diet Coke ad that airs in the UK (now sure if anywhere else) as it has some women giving a man a Diet Coke in celebration of taking his shirt off, or to get him to take his shirt off. That's objectifying men and it hurts women, making them seem as if they only want muscled torsos, just like the objectification of women makes men seem as if they only care about large breasts and pouting lips.Even if someone was 100 truly androgenous, in every way, some people would be like 'but what are you, what box do I put you in so I know how you relate to me?'.Men and women are different, and that's fine, but those differences shouldn't be forced. Yes, Laci Green, your sexism hurts men. There, I answered your question.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/12	8.333

Nope, but her sweeping generalizations about us and institutions or industries we (men) apparently control clearly are sexist. Where does this notion that it's either men be "free of the patriarchal bonds" or be jocky alpha males come from? Since the dawn of history there have been different types of men that have been free to be themselves. We have athletes, scientists, criminals, heroes, soldiers, builders, politicians, writers, mean guys, nice guys. conservatives, liberals, musicians, nerds, jocks, priests, monks, cops, teachers, chefs, and on and on. Some but not all of these types of men are alpha male masculine types, and I have plenty of options as a man to be who or what kind of man I want to be. No need for this young woman to come in and create a false narrative about men to try and rescue me from. Don't like masculine a-holes? Don't associate with them. There are plenty of other types of men around. The masculine alpha male type isn't even a popular male trope anymore and is often considered shallow or "douche" by pop culture standards. There will always be a sub-set of narrow-minded alpha types just like there will always be sensitive more open-minded men. It's just part of our wide spectrum. I don't need her to rescue me under false and sexist pretense by first demonizing my gender then claiming to have the solution.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/233	0.858
Capn Whiskey Because rape jokes are considered funny, while castration jokes are not. Because nine out of ten victims of rape or sexual assault are female. Because women are blamed for drinking, wearing skirts or going out alone, while men aren't. Because women are expected to stay at home and take care of the children. Because men almost always choose to pursue a full-time career, forcing the mother to stay at home to take care of the kids, given that someone has to take care of the kids. Because those same alpha men bitch about not getting child custody, despite the fact that the primary caretaker of those children is the mother. Because people disbelieve rape victims, blaming them on "hysterics" or "feminism".I'm not saying "all men are like this". I'm saying "These problems come from some men, not from the women who protest against those men."	Sexual	Gender - General	1/148	0.676

Dario Carraresi Rape jokes are funny? I'm actually a stand-up comedian (yes, paid) and it's one of the hardest topics to use, George Carlin even had to make a point at how hard it was back in the 80's. Tell rape jokes at your next Thanksgiving dinner, and see how hilarious it is. Castration jokes are apparently hilarious in pop culture. Haven't you heard a billion Lorena Bobbit jokes? That episode of the View where Sharon Osborne jokes about a news story where a man's junk was cut off by his wife? You're barking right up my profession, so you won't win that one by a long shot. The zipper scene in There's Something About Mary? While not castration it certainly plays on male genital mutilation for a punchline Yes, women can be criticized for putting themselves in dangerous or irresponsible situations regardless of the outcome if she did so willingly. The man can go to jail for his felonious actions. Women are expected to stay at home and take care of the kids? Maybe...Depends on the relationship dynamic. If the man has more income or they are a traditional couple, then perhaps that is the plan THEY chose. All my friends seem to mutually plan out how they child rearing will fall to. I never hear anyone say anymore that "It's the women's job!" Also, biological reasons such as breast milk can also make it more advantageous for the mother to be around the child more. Women and men can both choose full-time careers. Again, if one career is more sustainable than the other, then I would guess that person keeps their job, or they get a nanny if they are well off. The rest is easily refuted too, but I don't want to type more...Lastly "I'm not saying "all men are like this". I'm saying "These problems come from some men, not from the women who protest against those men." This last statement is inherently sexist, and does nothing to address the broader more dynamic relationships between men and women. Much to learn, you still have, White Knight. Capn Whiskey Oh, really?1) Read this link - particularly the link about rape jokes. Given how common they are, I don't think they're "hard" at all. [LINK] 2) No. Nobody willingly violates their own human rights so much. Rape victims didn't "willingly allowed" themselves to be raped. See the above link for examples of how people blame rape victims for "causing" their own rape - including an American judge blaming the victim's dress.3) Here's the thing: pursuing a full-time career (manager or researcher) and staying at home to take care of the kids are two mutually exclusive things, simply because there isn't enough time to do both.Do women want to have high-pay careers? Judging by how many bother to get the required higher education, the answer is yes.Do men stay at home and take care of the kids? No. And it's not like all of them are impossibilitated because they're the only ones who can bring the big paycheck home, given that, again, a lot of women have the higher education required to get the big paycheck. It's a matter of choice, pure and simple.4) Congratulations for ignoring everything that you can't excuse your way through.5) No, it's not sexist. By your logic, breast cancer is sexist because they predominantly affect women.It's a fact that the people causing those problems are mostly men. Deal with it.	Common, Nobody	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	2/233	0.858
The point is everyone has choices, there is no sexism construct or institution that is keeping either sex from accomplishing anything. You may have limitations based on your personal situation, but I assure you it has nothing to do with patriarchy. I'm in my 30's and old enough to know that it's all about making the best choices with what you're given. Men going out and choosing to be money hunters in no way hurts men or women. Women will typically seek these men to benefit as well, such as financial stability and a greater potential to start/support a family. Women who do not like men can go their own way completely, and this whole discussion is a non-issue for them. When you get married, you'll realize that you have to make choices for the partnership based on what you both bring to the table. It's not sexism that's occurring. Just doing what works best given you and your partners situation. Maybe certain scenarios are most common because they seem to be the most effective. Who knows? Relax kid, you'll find reality is much more boring and lacking conspiracy than people like this Laci Green, and other SJWs will lead you to believe. People just do what they do to, it's that simple. Capn Whiskey I can't believe I have to explain this point-by-point.1 - If you want to have a family, someone has to take care of the kids. That's a fact that cannot be avoided.2 - Given that most families don't have a deposit full of coins, then one member of the couple will have to do the child-raising.3 - A full-time, good-pay career guarantees financial indipendence. It's also time-consuming - so much that it's pretty much impossible to work full-time AND properly take care of the kids without any help.4 - Combining 2 and 3 above, a member of the couple will have to take child-raising duty and forgo having a full-time job.5 - Here's the catch: a lot of men not only choose to be the bread-winners, but think that's the father's role, always, while the mother's role is to stay at home and raise the kids.6 - Since someone has to stay at home, and since men almost always choose NOT to, then that leaves women. Unless, of course, they forgo the chance of growing a family.Men get both options: they get to pursue the careers, while the wifes raise the children for them. (Besides then whining because they have to pay aliments. Family courts rule to the advantage of the children - and what the children need is to be able to stay with the parent that took care of them the most. Guess which parent usually is in that role?)Now, I'm going to predict your objection: "Women choose to stay at home because they want to have a family".While a lot of women do want to have a family, a lot of women also want to have a good career. Case in point: the continued increase of women going to college from the seventies to this day.(By the way, do you know what it means to mantain this rigid "husbands breadwinners, wifes child-raiser" mentality? It means denying economic indipendence to women, because, if they want children, they'll have to forgo having a full-time job, while men get the job AND a wife who does the child-rising for them.)(And also guess what happens it that rigid system? That the major indicator for a woman seeking a husband is money. Not love, not common interests, money. The rigid-gender-roles system reduces the quality of marriages, rendering them based on pure economic factors rather than actual relationships, and produces an increased incidence in divorces.)	Common, Woman	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	2/415	0.482

Robin Miller &gt; This is just a funny story how when the roles are reversed, the woman gets just as frustrated as men use to be about how unfair it is to be the main financier!Too bad that you're arguing that it's a BIOTRUTH that women are the most "adapt" at staying at home and raising the child. It's NATCHURRRRE. Then you turn right around and blame women for staying at home and "forcing" men to go to work. Nevermind that, as I've repeatedly shown you, men hold the cultural power in our society and enforced those sexist stereotypes in the first place.&gt; [LINK] Some quotes from that link you gave me (all emphasis is mine):- A 2010 Cornell study found that among 18- 28-year-old married and cohabiting couples who had been together for more than a year, men who were totally dependent on women's salaries were five times more likely to cheat than men who earned the same as their partners. Other studies show that when women earn more, they wind up taking on more, not less of the housework and childcare. A 2013 study by a professor at Washington University's Olin Business School in St. Louis who collaborated with some Danish colleagues revealed that in relationships where women made slightly more than their spouses, men were 10 more likely to need prescription medication for erectile dysfunction, insomnia and anxiety, and the greater the income gap, the more problems men had with ED. Torabi conducted her own survey of 1,033 professional women and found that the women who made more than their partners reported less relationship satisfaction and more embarrassment about how much they made compared to their spouse than the women who earned less.- It's emasculating and wrong to cut your spouse out of your family financial decision-making just because you earn more. Under no circumstances should we financially 'mommy' our husbands. Appreciate all the non-monetary contributions your husband makes. If you can afford it, pay for household chores like cleaning, laundry and childcare, that get you both down. Most important, put some thought into the wounds that unequal earning power can create. The phenomenon of the breadwinning woman will only keep growing.Gee, it seems like people are NOT happy when one spouse uses the fact that they're the breadwinner to hold all the decisional power in a couple. Who would've thought? [LINK] [LINK] (page 3) [LINK] But how to change this idea of rigid gender roles, where the breadwinner (usually the MANN) holds all decisional power in the couple? I mean, nobody has ever challenged the idea of gender roles in a couple, right? Certainly not feminists! &lt;/sarcasm&gt; [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] &gt; Fact is, that women want to marry up.....despite the fact that women's attendance rate to higher education as been continually increasing since the '70s. With zero relevance to what we are talking about? Nice...She flat out stats that high earning money dont want to settle for low income despite the fact they do'... EXACTLY... coming from a womans lips this makes perfect sense! Only men are open and ok with marrying down, not women... women want men to make more, raise their social status and endow them with the wealth earned throw any means, regardless of the nature of the business! Women dont care if their partners are mass murders and tyrants, as long as these powerful men raise the womans position in the social heirarchy! Thus, women were the ones who breded ruthless men who would stop at nothing too take whatever they deemed necessary from everyone else!It has been women who controlled society from the beg of history... men have always simply done what they were told! that men held positions of power in all apparent areas of society is a straw dog distraction! Because it was truly women who were dictating what these men would do! if you really want to sit here and tell me mothers had no power, then I know your just flumaxing around with little regard too the real power of women. If women held no power, they would not have had such a great influence on men to do whatever was dictated to them by WOMEN... mothers, sisters, wives, lovers... men have always sacrificed themselves for the women they love and this trend has not changed at all! 'I repeat: why bother to get the education required for a full-time high-pay career if you aren't going to actually pursue a full-time high-pay career?'Exactly... ask them that, because that is what women are doing in droves, or have you not heard of the 'where have all the good men gone' epidemic? Most women settle down only when they have too! Most women go on and get a decent college degree and then realize that they are not getting any younger and thus move on to settle with the most available and useful male they can get their greedy little hands on! Thus men are used as nothing but drones too fufill the matriarchies need for reproduction! Men are objectified even more then women are... at least women get the rights and privs that come with motherhood and the respect it deserves! As most men, we are seen as nothing but drones who should work to serve or else have no reason of function in the Matriarchy! If we dont serve a good purpose, we are cast out as rejects from a population of drone slaves! (see how men are over 9 to 1 the homeless in this and most countries compared to women)... [LINK] So we have a society where women rule through men and feminists run around and distract us by saying somehow men have the power, when in reality men suffer more in almost every area of society then women! Robin Miller 1) So, first of all: you wanted proof that feminists have been against the stigma of rigid gender roles (men = breadwinners, women = stay at home). Here are some of the relevant quotes:- Wives and daughters were subjected to the 'headship' of men – no decision was to be made without the permission of the husband or father. Family planning, pants, college, and outside employment were all frowned upon; a woman's place was at the kitchen table, homeschooling a gaggle of obedient children. When I was sixteen, I told a friend that I didn't see any reason for girls to go to college. After all, what's the point of going to college if you're going to stay home raising kids for the rest of your life?- When I was at work I'd listen to sermons on my iPod about what it meant to be a 'real man.' The masculinity I heard preached was exciting – glorious, honorable, rough, violent. It eschewed 'limp-wristed girly-men' and stay-at-home dads alike. A man's job was to work hard to provide for his family; a woman's job was to take care of the household and children and always be cheerfully available for sex. It was a vision of masculinity perfectly designed for my black-and-white view of the world.- But shortly after we were married, we began to realize that we did not fit into the neat boxes so often prescribed by preachers and books.Before that, the guy wrote this. it puts in perspective how, exactly, women get the short end of the stick. [LINK] 2) As I've said, Marc Katz states that women "don't marry down". This is false, for two motives. First: there's a wage gap. The average female worker earns roughly three-quarters of the average male worker. So of-fucking-course it's more probable that the wife is the one making less money. [LINK] Now, even with that disparity, the percentage of couples where the wife's income tops the husband's was 22 in 2007. [LINK] So, yes, there IS a sizable amount of high-income women that marry with lower-income men. Fact is, the vast majority of women are low-income, which is why most couples feature a lower-income wife.Also, Evan is a man. The second link is a citation of a NY Times interview with a woman. Neither Marc Katz nor the interviewed woman are scientists.3) &gt; [...] women want men to make more, raise their social status and endow them with the wealth earned throw any means, regardless of the nature of the business! I agree with some of her points you made during the first minute, except the following:At 0:35 where you said "-learning to see women as sex objects, and struggling to have meaningful relationships with them" That is a stereotype. I can tell you that out of all my friends and acquaintances, I've found none that only value women as walking fleshlights. I'm not entirely sure how this misconception got around, but it's inaccurate and annoying to see pop up over and over the place. At 0:41, "To make "Harmless Jabs at each other to establish dominance" I'm not too clear, are you saying that back and forth banter is somehow stigmatizing men? The very purpose of banter is to get a few laughs and test your wit against a friend. Not to define some kind of social pecking order.I also have an issue with your definition of sexism at 0:56. Seeing as you presented it as, "Is this sexism... against men?" like it was some kind of new concept, is already sending up warning flags."-it's about shaming, belittling, and devaluing the feminine"The definition of sexism is: "Sexism or Gender discrimination is prejudice or discrimination based on a persons sex, or gender."Sexism doesn't have a connection to masculinity or femininity.Moving on to 1:10. "Notice that most of the pressures that boys face, come down to defining them selves against women" That is a blanket statement, and an inaccurate one. While it's true that some social norms came about because of the means she stated, (Throw like a girl, etc) the vast majority of Gender Roles popped up because that's just what each gender did for a long time. Men went out and fought and hunted, and women stayed at home, cooked and nursed children. That's just how it was for a majority of human history. Trying to spin this tale that everything unjust that happens on the basis of gender ties into women somehow is bullshit.1:30, once again implying that sexism only really effect females, and men just get side effects.1:41 - 2:00 good points actually.2:30 Violence against trans women occurs because people are resistant to change If it's different, it's bad and they don't like that. It's always been that way.2:36 Blanket statements intensify No, actually rational people say that. Feminism doesn't have a monopoly on that statement. Actually, if I recall there's sizable portion of feminists who really hate trans women. 2:43 - 3:28 no issues with those statements.God, I think I have too much free time. Laci, news flash, all these "pressures" are applied on us by females with their privilege of being the controllers of sexual contact in today's society. Being tall, being fit, being successful, these are all pressures that men have to overcome to compete for female attention and pairing.Time to employ that feminism, fight the good fight. Dario Carraresi No, but a major factor in the way that men behave, dress, acheive is in the hopes of being a desirable partner for many or one very special woman . This is a fact in a developed modern society. A comedian once said "For a man to walk into a bar and have EVERY women in the bar want him (sexually) he would have to be the most powerful, and best looking man in the world. For a woman to walk into a bar and have every man want her, she would have to do her hair."	Woman	Gender - General	1/68	1.471

I think one issue that you neglect to address is the fact that its not always circled back around to the plight of the demeaned female, as you tried to infer in your analysis of male social pressures. Gender specific roles, as you say, for men are not always as positive as some convey. They posses a great deal of pressure. The reason many of the examples that you gave, such as: strength, height, money, and being tough, exist in male social culture is that it stems strongly from the fact that girls TEND TO like those attributes and TEND TO weed out the men that don't have those attributes as un-attractive. This is natural and I believe it's completely reasonable for reasons of strengthening strong genetics. As everyone else does, men care if they are attractive; instead of make-up we have sports in, which any person, partaking in one, has to physically suffer. I'm for equality; although as a guy, I feel that people think that sexism towards men doesn't exist in media and social environment even thought it does. On top of that, any time sexism towards men is pointed out, people belittle it by saying it compares nothing to the plight of women. In order to expunge sexism , which is socially impossible, I disagree that it is justified to go from one extreme to another. Vanesska100 First girls also scorn each other and probably do it worse then men. I heard this room-mate in University that hated each other and at the end of the semester one girl took a dump on the other girl's clothes because she said she can't make it to the washroom... does it mean that sexism is hurting women and they should all be civilized like men? Her example in the video about male jousting each other for alpha position is indeed a male thing... because that's what males do to establish a social hierarchy and has nothing to do with sexism . In ages past even before human exist the male's role is to be the provider and the protector... Wolves are a classic example because the alpha wolf lead the pack, lead the hunt and get his choice of food and mate.. this has been ingrained into biology so deep that even now the human animal still follow this behavior... Asking a male to become females will definitely not solve any problems. It is as if Laci assume that all females today are without fault and that the male counterpart should just act like girls.. On a final note it is scientifically proven that male's brain especially their emotions develop more slowly the females, on the other side an average male is stronger the the female... maybe Laci here should acknowledge and appreciate the gender difference and what each brings to the table instead of crying sexism and gender inequality. prin okonkwo Men's problems aren't even demonstrated in this video. This video can be summarized with "Men's problem is they can't be exactly like women in this society without being ridiculed," and that's a blatant and idiotic lie. I sincerely don't understand why people think it's a problem that some men don't like being called women. There's nothing wrong with wanting to identify as a masculine male. The only problem that I see is women like Laci who preach the lie of "Men just need to act like women and all their problems will go away."The problems that men face are disproportionally high suicide rates, 60 longer prison sentences, unequal rulings in child custody cases, unfair alimony and child support laws, things of actual importance. Feminist don't cause all the problems for men, but as this video did a fantastic job of showing, a lot of feminist push the idea that it's not okay or normal for men to be expected to be men. You demonize men for expecting men to demonstrate traditional male qualities, and by proxy those qualities are looked down upon, leading a lot of men who are biologically inclined to have those qualities to feel demonized for just being men by overbearing feminist.If you want to pretend that feminism cares about men's issues, please call for actual law that extends the prison sentences of women to the full duration of a male's prison sentence for the same crime. Woman	Gender - General	1/117	0.855

Light And Shadow You'd have to show me an example of someone intelligently critiquing the video for me to tell you how I felt about it. It seems like a good lot of the critiques on her videos across the board are "did you know you have CLEAVAGE? how dare you show your CLEAVAGE." I'm sure there are good critiques, too, but sometimes its hard to remember those in the middle of all the vitriol, you know? As far as the limits of mainstream feminism, I'm not exactly sure what you mean. I don't have any evidence beyond the anecdotal to back this up, but in my experience (which, like I said, may differ substantially from yours or anyone else's) feminists are more accepting of men stepping out of gender roles than people who don't identify as feminists. I think that benefits men. Probably my favorite example of feminism working for men is the Womens' rights project of the ACLU. [LINK] I'm sorry, I know it's really small and hard to read. But just a couple of examples:Under 1975, click the little circle. Ruth Bader Ginsberg argued that it's unfair for widows to be granted automatic benefits while widowers are not. That had no direct or obvious benefit for women--however, we hope it would help to loosen the idea that women are always dependent on a spouse while men are always the providers.Under 1998, first little bubble, the womens' rights project co-authors the amicus brief in a case where a male was sexually harassed and assaulted by other male co-workers, again having little obvious and direct benefit to a woman in that case--especially since sexual harassment is, correct me if I'm wrong, least likely to be perpetrated by a woman to another woman .There's a couple of others in there, too, if you wanna go through the whole thing. Maybe you don't consider that recent enough to be part of the "current" feminism, but I feel like current feminism isn't really limited, even if mens' rights aren't generally our main focus. fluteoboe101 But then feminists like Laci Green here will tell you that saying hello on the street, complimenting their looks, not remembering to "check your privilege", or a host of other nonsensical "micro-aggressions" constitute harassment and degradation of women. And that is why feminism is turning into a word many women won't apply to themselves. Crazy	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/90	1.111
Shedding light on our struggles shouldn't make you feel like a "fucker". It should honestly make you angry that we have to deal with these things. fluteoboe101 But she's very wrong. The pressures put on men to be "manly" do not come from other men or society, they come from their own experiences in trying to find a suitable female partner. As a man, nobody has ever pressured me to repress my emotions, have "manly hobbies", or to have lots of sex . These are all things I have pursued on my own for my own sense of fulfillment. Society is formed by individuals making choices. If society is sexist, then it naturally follows that the individual choices we make are sexist as well. I find women with large busts and narrow waists, that can cook, clean, and watch baseball attractive. Is my personal preference sexist, because a woman that wants to be in a relationship with me feels pressured to conform to my ideal? That's how society works.	Nobody, Sex, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/142	2.113
And what she is saying is correct. Men who DON'T act "manly" the way you are describing yourself, may feel like, well, less of a man. I have seen it. When they don't act that way, many times, people make fun of them. They may be called " gay ", or "girly", or " pussy ", all sorts of things, just for not acting manly. Guys aren't supposed to wear makeup, guys aren't supposed to cry, etc... this is all a result of sexism & gender stereotypes.	Gay, Gender, Sexism, pussy	Gender - General, Nationality - Chinese, Sexual Identity - General, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality	5/83	6.024

fluteoboe101 How is it sexism if it applies to both genders? Some people are just mean, and " gender stereotypes" are just the low hanging fruit for people to choose to use as a verbal weapon. It has nothing to do with equality. If it wasn't wearing makeup or crying, it would be for rooting for the wrong team or liking the wrong music. That isn't social pressure, that is an example of "some people are assholes".	Fruit, Gender, Nothing, Sexism	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality	4/76	5.263
But full blown sexism includes things like the wage gap, women being denied basic human rights in several parts of the world, etc.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/23	4.348
The fathers not getting as much custody as women in divorce cases is an example of sexism , as well.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/19	5.263
fluteoboe101 Parents have the right to instill whatever values they want for their children so long as they don't infringe on anyone else's rights. As I said before, the idea that I should like "manly" things did not come from my parents, it came from the women I was attracted to. My parents didn't tell me not to wear a dress or makeup. The girls that I thought were pretty told me not to do that. As for "full blown sexism ", the wage gap has been debunked. Men and women earn very close to the same amount of money when experience, qualification, and personal choices are taken into account. Men tend to take higher paying jobs, while women tend to take lower paying, but more flexible positions. Those are personal choices that feminists have no right to infringe upon, and no need to change. A very real gender disparity in the workforce is that men make up 95 of accidental workplace fatalities. I would not call that sexism , though, because that's the result of personal choice made by people working high-risk jobs. And men and women are both denied basic human rights throughout the world. That is again, not a matter of sexism when it is equally true of men. I have not seen any study on male vs female custody battles, and all I have are personal anecdotes where the fathers worked out a deal with their exes before. Would it be sexism for fathers to relinquish their rights because they believe their children would be better served spending a majority of their time with their mothers after a divorce?	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	5/271	1.845
What are you trying to tell me here? That sexism is non existent?	Sexism	Gender - General	1/13	7.692

fluteoboe101 You won't find many countries where women are notoriously lacking rights moreso than Saudi Arabia. But even there, of 79 executions in Saudi Arabia in 2013, and of those, only 5 were reportedly women. So no, I'm not trying to tell you that sexism is non existent, I am telling you that attitudes and preconceived notions about gender are as natural as the genders themselves, even if you have the outliers that defy convention. People like Laci Green would have you believe otherwise, because it makes them feel good to believe we are all special snowflakes. Now is Laci Green going to date a guy that asks her out while wearing a floral bonnet and sun dress? Probably not. Will she concede that her (and women in general) refusing to date men who wear dresses contributes to the "social pressure" she is speaking out against here? Again, probably not. If it was the "girlie men", "fags", and "pussies" that were getting sex all the time, they wouldn't be the ones getting belittled by society. Women have the power to shape the kind of men our society has by choosing them as mates over the other kinds of men. Society evolves just like biology evolves. We do what we must to keep our genes in the pool.	Gender, Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	3/217	1.382
fluteoboe101 If it is not okay for men to get looked down upon for wearing makeup, then you should have sex with the ones that do. They won't get looked down upon if they become the new standard by which women judge potential mates. People that don't wish to appeal to other humans obviously don't care if they are looked down upon. If they do care if they are looked down upon, then they should do more to appeal to other humans. It really is that simple. I can't believe that feminists have convinced you that you can have lots of sex and be ostracized. Logically speaking, you can't have sex if you are being rejected by everyone. There are countries where everyone is treated as mere objects. The problem I have with feminism is that it looks at a country where men are conscripted into military service and used as cannon fodder for warlords and petty dictators while women are treated like baby factories, and all they see is the problems women face. It's summed up quite well in the Hillary Clinton quote: "Women have always been the primary victims of war. Women lose their husbands, their fathers, their sons in combat. Women often have to flee from the only homes they have ever known. Women are often the refugees from conflict and sometimes, more frequently in today's warfare, victims. Women are often left with the responsibility, alone, of raising the children."	Sex	Gender - General	3/243	1.235

IamTheSherm Feminism hasn't convinced me that women get looked down upon for having sex . I have first hand EXPERIENCED it. And in many places, it is only a thing women have to experience. I was watching a documentary about liberia, there were men, who had literally CUT OFF the vaginal parts of a dead women and carried it around in their wallets as a symbol of POWER. That is not even a joke. I'm dead serious. You can look up the documentary and see how they are treated there. It's a Vice documentary. In Pakistan, then 16 year old women's rights activist Malala Yousafzai got shot in the head by the Taliban after trying to get education for female children. (She was being peaceful!) And I agree with you, that Hillary Clinton quote is bullshit. Men are very obviously the main victims of war, being that they are the ones going and being killed. Hillary Clinton is a shitty feminist. And it is sexist that women don't get signed up for drafts. I am not saying feminists are always correct. And personally I wouldn't care if a man wearing makeup asked me out; as long as it wasn't too much. I can find men attractive who wear concealer, or eyebrow powder, or anything else that enhances their masculine features. What I wouldn't find attractive on a man is mascara or blush or lipstick, things that are meant to enhance female features. However, I would not look down on a man who wears it. Just because I don't find it attractive doesn't mean I'm gonna look down on them. You do have a good point though, that has crossed my mind before; it is human nature to find many of these things attractive, so coincidentally, we're going to think people should have these features. But there's a difference between "I prefer this" and "You are disgusting if you do or don't do this".	Old, Sex	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	2/322	0.621
IamTheSherm "These are all things I have pursued on my own for my own sense of fulfillment." Yet you don't think that the messages you've been given since childhood on what a man should pursue to reach fulfillment has affected your decisions? It all has an effect on us in some way. Sometimes what we want and what we're taught we should want line up OK, other times if it doesn't it can make us feel not correct. Both in our own eyes and in others eyes too. TheLesExit Yes, we should expect men and women to act a certain way. That is how civilization works. The messages I have been given since childhood came from my parents, the media, and everyone around me. The reality is that society has every right to enforce its norms on people. That's what a culture is. People that don't like society's norms tend to start counter-cultural movements and change things. Sometimes for the better, sometimes for the worse, and often times nothing of substance changes at all.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/86	1.163

The only standard we should hold them to is that they be good people and respect others. Society doesn't have the right too, it simply does. It's up to the people within it to change that, and thankfully so many are. "People that don't like society's norms tend to start counter-cultural movements and change things. Sometimes for the better, sometimes for the worse." You said it perfectly. Creating a society that doesn't push people into certain gender norms is for the better :) It's already changed so much, allowing many to feel more accepted then they previously had. OK awesome 1) thanks for proving my point that selective service unfairly affects men more then women.2) I said no office of men’s health in government, also not all of men’s issues are blamed on feminist but we should address them equally but they are not.3) Circumcision by number effects men more, AGAIN the point is men have issues we wish to address yet get mocked by feminist even when were not blaming feminist.4) HOW DARE YOU SAY ITS GENDER NEUTRAL. men’s lives are ruined by a failed divorce system especially young black men.5) The point is even though statistics show men are victims of domestic abuse almost as much as women very little help is given to those men, Compare the amount spent by the government for women’s domestic abuse and and men’s.6) I as a man have no reproductive rights, a women can decide weather she will keep the child or not. The father just sits and waits for the rest of his life to be decided for him. He will be force to pay for the baby no matter what the circumstance.7) Not enough and to little to late, men’s lives are ruined with no recompense or very little. Again women advocate for better laws for them but when a man does we are mocked or dismissed.8) My point had nothing to with that so you failed to address it but even if i agreed with that (i don’t) are you saying one excuses the other! how about we work on solution not baseless attacks.9) WOW Lea et al. 11 HMCPSI/HMIC 11.8 FBI/stc 8 Edward Greer 10 Soooo yeah even if I granted you those number and i don’t its still a problem that ruins men’s lives10) I can’t believe I have to spell this one out MEN GET LONGER PRISON SENTENCES THEN WOMEN WHO COMMIT THE SAME CRIME! 76 more in fact11) Man are the majority of suicide victims FACT and yes it has to do with the misandrism approach to how we raise boys and treat men.12)Thanks for proving my point.My point with most of this is men have issues and when we want to address them we get brushed aside. I don’t blame radical feminism for everything, though I do for some i am tired of hearing lip service like ”if you support feminism you support equality for all” that’s crap I want real solutions for men and women.	Black, Gender, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	3/417	0.719

Travis Jones 1) Then why do you accuse women, if men made the draft like that in the first place? Not to mention that feminists have been fighting to be able to do the same jobs as men - from miners to soldiers.2) Okay, that's legitimate. And what about every office where there aren't women?3) I fail to see where Laci mocked men who get circumcised. Or any feminist who isn't an misandrist radfem (IE the vast majority of them).4) Again: the law is gender neutral. If you want the sentences to be neutral, get rid of the "men = strong, dominieriing leader/protector, women = weak, emotional, submissive protectee" mentality.5) 1 in 6 men are victim of sexual violence or intimate partner violence. Women are 1 in 3. Not to mention that rape is extremely skewed towards "male rapist (60-99)/female victim (90)".6) Again: you can choose to use a condom. If she still gets pregnant by mistake, and wants to keep the baby, that's a legitimate reason to ask for a divorce. But it's unfair to ask for equal rights, given that it's the woman who has to deal with the pregnancy and with the care of the kids (do you know how few men are disposed to put their carreers on hold in order to take care of the house and the kids?). Not to mention: forced pregnancy.7) Again: when did a feminist mock this issue. A feminist, not a radfem. Think about the difference between Christians and, say, Puritans.8) Yes.9) [LINK] 10) See point (4). Also: [LINK] 11) Again: are men mostly committing suicide because they face discrimination from women, or are they committing suicide for other reasons such as clinical depression? And if we were to compare the percentages of men who committed suicide due to sexual discrimination with the percentages of other groups, what we would see? Dario Carraresi is nuts, and is using incorrect data. 1 in 3 women are victim of sexual violence? This is beyond bullshit. That means we have either a small group of men that rape absurd amounts of women (over a thousand each), or pretty much all men HAVE to be rapists to get to a number like that. Typical fear mongering and basing their assertions on retarded internet surveys.	Sexual	Gender - General	1/69	1.449

Well considering the main opponents towards changing these things in the government is in fact feminism i'd say dismantling feminism is the first step. Feminists are the ones that instated the predominant aggressor policy and duluth model, fought against 50 equal child custody, domestic abuse shelters for men, and also at ever opportunity go on and on about how this is a patriarchal society that only benefits men (except when it doesn't) so we shouldn't focus on men's problems even though they are the only ones who have institutionalized sexism against them.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/92	1.087
---	--------	------------------	------	-------

Tomi Osundina Feminists are the ones that instated the predominant aggressor policyThere are two reason why the predominant aggressor policy exist. First: the sheer amount of violent acts men commit against women. For example, there are 290.000 cases of sexual assault in the USA alone, each year. Around 90 of perpetrators are men. [LINK] Second: abusers look like normal people. We can't know whether a guy is an abuser or not just by looking at. But, given the predominance of male-on-female sexual violence, we can't do nothing and take the risks. [LINK] duluth modelWhich we feminists are moving away from, because it doesn't cover female perpetrators. It still does have its uses thanks to the Power and Control Wheel.fought against 50 equal child custody,Citation needed. It's also based on false assumption, given that the reason custody goes to the mothers most of the time is because the couple decides, by themselves, to do that.If we look at the couples who have to resort to a family court deciding for them, we'd see that over 50 of fathers do get custody (shared or sole). [LINK] There are three reasons why women are favored by family courts:1) Mothers tend to stray at home and take care of the kids; fathers tend not to. Family courts tend to favor the parent that took care of the kid the most, because that's what's more beneficial for the kid.2) A good chunk of divorces that have to be resolved by a family court are due to domestic violence. And male perpetrators are more prevalent.3) There also is a bias in favor of women in courtrooms (lesser sentences, etc.). Thing is, it's due to male paternalism; in practice, judges treat women like children, and believe they don't have as much responsibility as men, so they give them lesser sentences. Schanzenbach also found out that the lesser the gender gap in a district's judge population, the smaller the sentencing gap; in short, female judges don't give unfair advantages to female culprits, male judges do. [LINK] [LINK] domestic abuse shelters for menI don't see you anti-feminists actually building and running some. Just complaining against female shelters.Also: meet 1in6 and Male Survivor. [LINK] [LINK] and also at ever opportunity go on and on about how this is a patriarchal society that only benefits men (except when it doesn't)Most of this patriarchal society favors men, but it also fucks them up. For example: the very toxic "boys don't cry" message. [LINK] so we shouldn't focus on men's problems even though they are the only ones who have institutionalized sexism against them.No, men aren't the only ones who have institutionalized sexism (by the way, citation needed on that); and people can care for multiple things at once. Just because we focus on women (because the fact that women are the vastly predominant victims of domesitc violence, sexual assault and rape is a fact) doesn't mean that we're advocating throwing men in the trash.	Gender, Nothing, Sexism, Sexual	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	7/504	1.389

ind0ctr1n3 Feminism has a lot of differing views, sorry that a non hierarchical process and movement doesn't have 100 the same views as one another...The main aspect I go with when it comes to Feminism is dismantling Patriarchy but not simply making women equal to men for equal's sake. E.g. Draft, don't just make women do it, dismantle it.Now the problem we have with MRA's is that their system is majoratively hierarchical, since nearly all the impact currently is coming from 1 group AVFM, contains high profile speakers and supporters who have stated ridiculously horrific things towards women, and overall the point is is that MRA's are majoratively Anti-Feminism, and so despite working alongside the woman's struggle they just try to dismiss it and claim that men have it worse off, despite men having the majority of privilege, agency and power throughout history.	Patriarchy	Gender - General	1/145	0.69
ind0ctr1n3 You missed a part:Assholes wrongly believe women are fragile, weak and incoherent, and discriminate against them, justifying this discrimination with this prejudice. Thus, we have to fight against this discrimination.And, in case you've missed, the vast majority of feminists are women. We're protecting ourselves.PS: Why do you call me a "white knight"? Oh, right - because you believe that the only reason a man would ever help a woman is because he hopes to get sex in return. Not empathy, not the belief that all humans are equal, just pure gain. That's quite misandrist.	Sex, Woman	Gender - General	2/98	2.041
BadMouseProductions Fun fact: in 1980, when there was a political discussion on whether to reinstate the draft or not, the National Organization for Women declared that they were against the draft BUT also that, if the draft was to be reinstated, women should've been included in it. Not because women feared they could lose the right to vote, but because they didn't want to be treated like, I quote, "second class citizens".Before the decision about not reinstating the draft came about, the Supreme Court already decided on the "Should women be included in the draft?" question. They voted "no" - presumably because of the stupid "women are weaker than men, so no woman could ever be stronger than a man" belief. And the Supreme Court was all-male until 1981. Dario Carraresi It has been proven multiple times there is no wage gap. I'm not even going to debate your bullshit. You're just using false data again. And you're even getting it from a site that is specifically for "Empowering Women Since 1881". Dario Carraresi In fact, lets take a closer look at one of the sites you just used: [LINK] The first point made: "In 2013, among full-time, year-round workers, women were paid 78 percent of what men were paid."No data, no specifications, no explanations. Do you know how they actually got to these figures? They took figures of full-time working men, compared them to full-time working women, and discovered the total amount earned by women was 78 of the amount of the men. What they however did not take into account was time off, sick leave, overtime, etc. A paycheck for a woman doing the same thing as a man is exactly the same for the same amount of hours.Point two made: "The best place in the United States for pay equity is Washington, D.C., where women were paid 91 percent of what men were paid in 2013. At the other end of the spectrum is Louisiana, the worst state in the country for pay equity, where women were paid just 66 percent of what men were paid."Again, no mention of any data, circumstances, whatever. I could look into this, but I'm sure women are more likely to be housewives in the back country then in the nations capital. These are probably career women, whom on average work nearly as much as men, thus earning nearly the same on a yearly overall basis.Point three made: "The gender pay gap affects all women, but for women of color the pay shortfall is worse. Hispanic women's salaries show the largest gap, at 54 percent of white men's earnings. Black women's salaries stand at 64 percent of white men's earnings. White men are used as a benchmark because they make up the largest demographic group in the labor force."I'd like to see how they figured this out. Are we talking about a white man and a black woman doing the exact same job for the exact same amount of hours? Or are we - what I'm suspecting - talking about a burger flipping black woman to the engineer white man? Yeah, no wonder she earns less! Again; Not taking into account time off, sick leave, overtime or anything.Point four made: "From elementary and middle school teachers to computer programmers, women are paid less than men in female-dominated, gender-balanced, and male-dominated occupations."Yes; Because women on average work less hours a year. Again; I dare any woman to show me a paycheck of her and a man doing the same job for the same hours, and show me she got less money. I dare themPoint five made: "Women typically earn about 90 percent of what men are paid until they hit 35. After that median earnings for women are typically 75–80 percent of what men are paid."Notice the word 'median' here. And we already saw at the top of the article they are talking about full-time male and female workers. No mention of any kind of additional data or explanations of this 'fact'. They looked at the financial data of men and women over a full year, took the average of these numbers, compared them, and cried wolf.Point six made: "At every level of academic achievement, women's median earnings are less than men's earnings, and in some cases, the gender pay gap is larger at higher levels of education. While education helps everyone, black and Hispanic women earn less than their white and Asian peers do, even when they have the same educational credentials."More stupidly interpreted data. This ones in response to Dario the Idiot on the Drafting and why women can't be apart of it. 1. Do you even know what the fuck a draft is? It's basically forced conscription. Who in the right mind wants to be apart of it? God you are dumb as fuck. 2. If women were to be drafted that means women the same age as male drafting age (18 I believe) would be sent into combat. That means most women would be sent off to war while the very young and very old stay behind to tend to family duties, and or Work for their families. 3. If we send these women out there is no guarantee that most will come back alive. In the event that few come back, who is left to repopulate when most women were sent off to war and most died along with the men? Extreme measures would be taken and teenagers would have to repopulate or remaining women and men have to repopulate. Exceptions though to avoiding a draft is being the last family member. 4. Again I say. Why the fuck would you want to be in a draft? War is fucked up and horrible and no person should have to experience it. 5. Learn what Drafting is. Drafting and Enlistment are two different things.	Age, Dumb, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/222	1.802
Robin Miller The problem is that most of those problems are either issues that don't have as much importance as the female equivalent, or are caused by the same sexism feminists are fighting against. Take the sentencing disparity, for example: turns out male judges give female culprits lesser sentences because they consider them "less rational and responsible and more manipulable" - in other words, they don't treat women as adults with all the attached responsibilities, but as "children", inferior to men. Meanwhile, female judges don't have this problem - and no, they don't favor female culprits because they're women. Nor do they give harsher sentences to men. Female judges give equal sentences to equal culprits. The findings regarding gender in the case of serious offenses are quite striking: the greater the proportion of female judges in a district, the lower the gender disparity for that district. Dario Carraresi While i really wish what you were saying was true, I have not found that to be the case! When you talk to people about domestic violence for example 'its never ever ok for a man to hit a woman'... but when asked and its most women who respond with this question, about women hitting men, most women are very quick to ask 'well what did he do to deserve it?' You can see the very core of the bias in the question itself! Somehow a man can do something to deserve getting slapped by a woman but a woman can never do anything that deserves a man to slap her!Feminism has only advocated for lower sentencing for women, NEVER have I seen feminism advocating for lower sentences for men who commit the exact same crime! I have never seen a ratio where female judges all hand out equal sentences to women and men for the same crime... its the same bias and while there may be some judges who do not adhere to this, its still the overwhelming majority of all judges of both sexes who continue this disparity!If Feminism was about fender equality then the universal domestic abuse symbol would not be a man attacking a woman, it would be two figures who were gender neutral in that depiction! And yes, whenever men start talking about the issues we face that are overwhelming problems for men compared to women, we are belittled, brushed aside and laughed at! Its even popular for sexist objects like a mug that says 'male tears' to propagate around feminists rhetoric.If women really want to be treated as equals to men, why do feminists only fight for more reproductive rights for women and never for men?After sex, a woman has many option not to be a mother... so why does the father have no say? Saying that if a man does not want to be a father then he should just 'keep it in his pants' is incredibly sexist... its as bad as saying that 'if a woman does not want to be a mother then she should keep her legs closed'... its a straw man distraction!The problem with this is that it is all about accountability of the male without rights, choices and decision making options. It is a little like taxation without representation. I think this is outdated thinking for two reasons:(a) first of all, men should have equal reproductive rights to women. They don't. Their accountability should be in proportion to their rights. Also men should have equal reproductive options to women. They don't and probably never will. Hence their accountability needs to go had in hand with an explicit consent and decision. I don't think it is valid in the western world to to say sex = consent to have a baby. That ignores modern day realities and ultimately leads to a host of negative outcomes for children. (b) it is plain barbaric to remove the parenting bond and parenting decisions from a father for no good reason and then also force him to pay for that 'privilege'. What is really occurring is not that the male is being made accountable for his sperm - it is that the male is been made accountable for other's parenting decisions that he very strongly objects to. It simply does not wash that the male is an automatically walking wallet even when the children have been removed from him against his will - simply because he had sex. It has also been a disaster for children and society. In the end these polices have been a failure and they encourage fatherlessness. Robin Miller 1) Guess what - the belief that "AS IF a woman could EVER hurt a man!" is sexist, too. And given that feminism is against these sexist stereotypes...2) Also, see the above comment of mine about the sentencing bias. If feminists really wanted to abuse the legal system to benefit women, then why aren't female judges doing exactly that?I mean, I DID bring the link to that study's abstract... Travis Jones You mean like men not getting child custody because they aren't the primary care-giver? Oh, wait, feminism is against forced gender stereotypes, including the one where the father's duty is to bring home the cash and not to take care of the kids.Or about male rape victims? Oh, wait, feminists are the ones who protested until the FBI changed its definition of rape so that it included male victims, and it was feminists who created the awareness campaign Project Unbreakable. [LINK] Or about DV shelters for men? Oh, wait: not only are various feminists organizations - RAINN, 1in6, MaleSurvivor - run services for men, but the Violence Against Women Act is gender-neutral in everything but the name, which means that you can build male DV shelters and get help from the state for doing that.Or about "teach men not to rape"? Oh, wait - not only are the vast majority of rapists male (including those who rape male victims), but the "Don't Be That Guy" campaign - which, yes, told men to not rape - reduced sexual offences in Vancouver by 10 in a single year. [LINK] And I could go on and on. What has "A Voice for Men" done for men's rights? Oh, wait.Well, I can best start by telling you what it is not, from my own personal point of view. It is not about passing a Violence Against Men Act or any other form of government reliance on justice and personal liberty. [...]There are no plans to form a committee for research for testicular cancer or to build a men's shelter. AVFM does not have a program to reform family courts. Dario Carraresi "Am I wrong, or it was misogynists who forbade women into joining the army because "Women are weaker than men, we don't want weak soldiers"? "You are wrong. Women didn't fight in wars because women's reproductive capabilities were far more important than men's. One man can procreate with 1000 women and make 1000 babies. Oh, and combine that with how women have demonstrably weaker upper body strength on average than men, and consider that prior to the modern age of guns, upper body strength was pretty important part of war considering you were swinging a heavy piece of steel around, I'd say it's pretty obvious why women weren't a part of wars or even wanted in war."Isn't the life gap due to natural biology? Robin Miller First: have you proven that the article I've posted reports false or biased information? Have you proven that the sources used in those links are false or biased? No. Therefore, your accusations of bias is completely baseless and fruit of prejudice.Second: what Jezebel link?Third: here, have some more actual facts that debunk even more of what RealSexism said.4) Workplace DeathsUh, go figure. The source RS used in this point is Alas! A Blog. A feminist blog. Strange, considering the bias contempt RS has for feminism.But anyway, first of all: men don't die in workplace because of women. Men die in workplace mostly because of negligence - specifically, the negligence of employers in guaranteeing basic safety protocols. [LINK] In fact, look at the most affected categories:- Temporary workers;- Immigrants;- Young people.Notice anything? These are all vulnerable categories thanks to both their necessity to have a job, any job - which leads them to take unsafe jobs - and their inexperience in working. Basically, they take those jobs because they have no choice, and the employers for those jobs take advantage of these vulnerable workers to get low-pay employees.More importantly, those employers cut the costs for safety regulations and training. They're literally sending those workers in potentially dangerous jobs without training them about the dangers, because it's a cost. And the States allow it: the fines OSHA applies for a "serious" violation of safety regulations are 1.700$ on average - and the maximum fine is only 7.000$. Which is absolutely not enough deterrent for those employers to pay for the safety measures.And, just to top it off, the workers who are most affected by safety hazards are the ones who have the least amount of chances to speak up, given that they risk to lose their jobs and probable only source of income. Another reason is "occupational segregation": basically, all those beliefs and behaviors that relegate men to "male" jobs, and women to "female" jobs. This can both be external - like managers hiring less men/women for a particular job because "men/women are bad at this job", regardless of the actual capacities of the applicant; or straight-up harassment - and internal: men tend to feel uncomfortable entering a "female" job, and vice-versa.But it's clear that it's not a 50/50 issue. Both because women were legally forbidden from taking most jobs, and because of a gender pay gap forming in women-dominated jobs - administrative assistants, nurses, teachers, baby-sitters - at the expense of women. [LINK] I've already talked about war casualties back in point (1) (almost all of the military is made of men, while it hasn't been proven any bias in civilian casualties), so: 5) Child Custody.The statistic is true only if you consider all divorces - both those that are pacifically decided by both parents, and those where there isn't an arrangement, so a family court is called to decide. [LINK] So, the vast majority of divorcing couples reach a common decision without involving a family court. And when I say vast, I mean VAST - 91 of divorces. 63 decide on giving child custody solely on the mothers, 6 solely on the fathers, 25 decide for shared custody, and the remaining 6 is listed as "other". Star X No, what I'm saying is: if you're so determined to see those male problems fixed, why are you attacking feminists?I mean, let's look at the situation here:A) Feminists have caused literally ZERO discriminations towards men. For example: men decided for women to be excluded from the draft because "women are weaker than men"; male judges give lighter sentences to women because they think of them as weaker, more vulnerable and manipulable in comparison to men; and so on.B) Feminists were, and still are, actively trying to resolve various issues men face. For example: they're fighting the "boys don't cry" toxic stereotype, as well as any imposition of toxic overly-aggressive "masculinity" on boys; they gave visibility to victims of female-on-male rape victims > [LINK] [LINK] I repeat: is "Shutting feminists up" more important than "Solving these problems men have"? Dario Carraresi Many times many. Here are six, and the ramifications of them roll out to daily lives, destroying men. 1. the tender years doctrine (legally steals children from their fathers)2. no fault divorce (and because of 1 above, forces men to pay alimony and child support even in the worse cases (like women: lying cheating stealing & being abusive to children) because she is NEVER wrong, and she can dump him for no reason whatsoever. She gets the house, the cars, the kids, the savings, the retirement accounts... while he has to work or go to jail, all while living in a van down by the river) 3. rape shield laws: 40 of rape charges are false (F.B.I. tracks these numbers) and these women (one woman filed false charges 11 times) destroy Men's lives (losing their homes, their kids, their saving, they get ass raped in jail) and there is no negative ramifications for these hateful (or confused) women. 4. the "silver bullet" as feminist call it: false charges of (child) abuse. The man goes straight to jail, without any proof. If married their is NEVER any hassle with the divorce proceedings. If the woman an immigrant , living with him: she gets access to his house his car, his savings, and get state funded support..... and her visa is extended to allow her to stay for the trial, which can take years. Thus he loses all his stuff, and she get to stay in the country instead of being kicked out.5. VAWA. Men are the victims of 85 of violence. Women are the victims of violence less than 5 of the time. Children are TWICE as likely to be the victims of violence than women, and men many many time more likely. BUT, the VAWA (ran by a new federal agency, for women) SPECIFICALLY targets hates Men, passing GENDER laws that hurt those most likely to be victims. 6. You, yes you personally, and millions upon millions of women, are not likely to read any of this, & if you do, you'll just wave your hand and say so what, because you don't care about Men Issues, specifically because of item 5 p.s. your theatrics (ref: tick tock - tick tock) is proof before hand that item 6 has some merit. Brian McCann Sweet so here is what im talking about. 1) I think the wage gap is exaggerated and doesn't account for other variables on top of that there is already a law that says you can't discriminate based on gender so I don't think we can't start there. 2) I see no reason why women shouldn't get guaranteed maternity leave forming life is a big deal, so that is one thing. 3) Like I stated before a child in the womb is a human life thus murder if aborted so I don't think we can start there. 4) I'm all for sex education I don't want any talk about so called "toxic masculinity" or the extreme feminist definition of "rape culture". Travis Jones So, I've just begun fact-checking the quote list you gave me, and I have to say: it's not good. There's a LOT of quotes, but barely any reference to what source they were taken from (and this is a proble - see below); it reeks of what I call "feminist hive mind", aka the idea that all feminists 100 agree with the ideas of all feminists. Which is like saying that someone who votes Republican agrees 100 with both the "Republican Majority for Choice" and, say, Pat Robertson.Also, most quotes are at least 40 years old. It would've helped if the people who made the list brought some more recent example, or examples of modern-day feminists using those same arguments.A LOT of quotes are against "marriage"; bear in mind however that we're talking about the '70s, when the issue were that the wife was required to stay at home to take care of the kids (and thus forgo any opportunity to work), and to obey the husband in all things. "Marital rape" (basically, the idea that a wife can refuse to have sex with her husband, despite the fat that she vowed to "obey" him) was barely brought up as a concept during that time. The Linda Gordon quote is such an example: No woman should have to deny herself any opportunities because of her special responsibilities to her children. ... Families will be finally destroyed only when a revolutionary social and economic organization permits people's needs for love and security to be met in ways that do not impose divisions of labor, or any external roles, at all.The bolded part was cut out from the list.Next, we have Robin Morgan. The first quote references "class-hatred", which was essentially protests on-par with the vast majority of the leftist movements at the time. That was it. No physical violence, no assault on the White House, nothing.The second quote ("I haven't the faintest notion what possible revolutionary role white hetero- sexual men could fulfill...") even without the context, looks completely sardonic. Not serious.The third was, IN FULL: "All the discriminatory practices against women are patterned and rationalized by this slavery-like practice. We can't destroy the inequities between men and women until we destroy marriage", referencing the marriage contract laws at the time. I remind you: marital rape wasn't even thought at the time. It was just assumed that, since traditional marriages required the woman "to obey", it was to be followed literally.The fourth is an example of affirmative consent, which, again, wasn't even thought by men at the time.Quotes 5-9 have been taken from "The Demon Lover". Subtitle: "The Roots of Terrorism", specifically from the West bank and the Gaza strip. I'm facepalming right now.Quote 10 is taken from a speech about how men don't experience sexist oppression. They have disadvantaged caused by sexist beliefs (ex.: "boys don't cry", or "men are always willing to have sex with a beautiful woman"), but they can't be oppressed by sexism in the same way white Americans aren't oppressed by racism. Men are teachd to conform to toxic ideals of "masculinity" and shamed if they don't (just look at how male feminists are instantly called "manginas" or "white kinghts§" on the web); but the fact remains that men are in a position of power, and that the bulk of discrimination by gender comes from men.In the long run, Women's Liberation will of	Faggot, Fat, Gender, Nothing, Old, Racism, Sex, Sexism, Sexual, Tranny, Woman, alcohol	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical Features, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	23/1202	1.913

+Dario Carraresi the only feminist who care about men, or at least claim to, are liberal feminist. Of course, when you have been made to believe men are your oppressors you are going to grow to hate them.Too bad modern feminism, (radical) cultural feminism, is centered around the idea that masculinity is toxic. Too bad cultural feminism have insane beliefs like sex it self is oppressive. Too bad they believe femininity is superior.	Sex	Gender - General	1/74	1.351
Bla Bla I think that there are two problems in play. The first is that some people use " sexism " to indicate "discrimination towards a gender or unfairly favoring a gender ", while others (like me) use it to indicate "a social system where discrimination towards a specific gender or unfairly favoring a gender is backed up by social norms and thus systemized". So, confusion happens.The second problem comes from meninists/MRAs, who claim that all the men's problems that you cited are somehow the fault of feminists. +Dario Carraresi Because freedom of choice totally doesn't exist! Now this 3rd wave feminist movement is becoming even more incomprehensible. [LINK] This was an awful article to read. Now tell me why this research has a major flaw? The amount of male to female ratio in those job occupations aren't stated in that article. You can't even call that accurate, that's just awful researching. Basically, I can do the same type of research to a male working as a nurse in a hospital, and that is a female dominated job as opposed to males. Result? You'll see males being paid less ON AVERAGE because less men work as nurses as opposed to women. Compare that to higher paying jobs that men often occupy more than women based on INTEREST, not the favoritism of patriarchy. Women make different choices when choosing a job as opposed to men, hell, more women are entering occupations that have been male dominated for years. Times are changing. This article failed to prove anything. The gender wage gap is a debunked myth. Tell me an instance in which you had an employer paying a woman less than a men working full time unless you take a raise as a factor. The 77 cents to a mans dollar was basically a sum of men and women working full-time jobs averaged throughout the U.S. and excluding part time jobs. Not once, does it say that women are being paid less in their job counterparts as opposed to men merely for gender and that is illegal. Women make different choices than men. Call me sexist for listing out facts, but gender roles do exist. Maternal leave can influence that pay gap and isn't necessarily a positive thing,, women can arguably go on longer vacations, but you don't see any major sexism taking place in Canada, Western Europe, or the U.S. While maternal leave is pushed on the Mother as a gender role issue and the majority of males don't suffer from the loss of having to work or getting denied the opportunity to be promoted, each individuals are supporting themselves as a married couple rather than blatant and inherent sexism. Alimony may be a part of the reason why some females are not striving as economically as men, but you're not taking responsibility as a factor. While it's possible that the male is contributing his some funds towards child support after divorce, it may be more hard for a woman to earn her living while also taking care of her children (This I can comply with as a hard issue) While equalizing work between the two may seem beneficial to "equality", you also have circumstances. I have no problems with this actually. However biologically, females have always been maternal by nature, and contribute breastfeeding towards their newborns as a fact. You can't deny this. If you're unsatisfied with having to do so, then don't have children. Obviously that's not going to happen, but take that into consideration. While men are to taught to be tough in nature, can you do the same for women? Can you make them work life risking jobs compared to men who have a higher death ratio as opposed to women? Those life-risking jobs require extensive labor, and males are more physically stronger than females. If you want the Wage gap to be more equalized, tell women to stop having children (Obviously won't happen) so that they won't have to suffer from maternal leave and parental issues while focusing on work. Ryan Billybob 1) Because freedom of choice totally doesn't exist!Premise: if you believe that women stay at home because "choice", and not because they're pressured to stay at home and take care of the kids because "that's the mother's role"... Why would you whine about child custody?Child custody is awarded to the "primary care-giver", aka parent that took care of the kid the most - almost always, the parent who stayed at home and took care of the kids.If you claim that the vast majority of women stay at home and take care of the kids - aka being the "primary care-giver" because "choice", you're also claiming that men refuse to be the "primary care-giver" because "choice". In other words: according to you, there is no disparity in child custody, because men choosed to simply not have it.The same goes for workplace deaths. Men "choose" to go in those dangerous jobs. Women "choosed" not to. So stop whining about how more men die in workplaces. According to you, it was their "choice".2) Now, let's move on to the Yale study.&gt; This was an awful article to read. Now tell me why this research has a major flaw? The amount of male to female ratio in those job occupations aren't stated in that article.That's not the point of the study. The point of the study is to show that women are:- hired less often in those faculties;- offered a lot less money (-4.000$, on average);- that, in comparison to male applications that have the exact same copy-pasted references and qualifications.Now answer me: how the "male to female ratio in those jobs occupations" justifies offering X in yearly wage to a male applicant with Y qualifications, and (X minus 4.000$) in yearly wage to a female applicant with the exact same Y qualifications? Here's a hint: it doesn't.&gt; Basically, I can do the same type of research to a male working as a nurse in a hospital, and that is a female dominated job as opposed to males. Result? You'll see males being paid less ON AVERAGE because less men work as nurses as opposed to women.First: that makes no sense. Why would being underrepresented in a workplace means that you're paid less? Unless you're confusing "average" with "total".10 women working for wage A -&gt; total pay: (A + A + A + A + A + A + A + A + A + A) = 10A -&gt; average pay, (10A) 10 = A2 men working for wage A -&gt; total pay: (A * A) = 2A -&gt; average pay: (2A) 2 = ASee? The average wages stay the same.Second: your assumption is false. There are less men in nursing than women, but now that they're sizable, a gender gap has started to form. In favor of men. [LINK] In babysitting, too. [LINK] Or how about something different? Let's look at doctors. Doctors are a highly paid specialization, right? They ought to be paid more than many other jobs, rights? So how come that Russian doctors are one of the lowest paid professions in Russia, despite Russian doctors requiring the same level of preparation as American ones? *Maybe because, unlike other countries, Russian doctors are mostly women? Maybe because any profession that is considered "feminine" is automatically devauled because feeeeeeeemale? [LINK] 3) &gt; The gender wage gap is a debunked myth. Ryan Billybob 5) Let’s move on to your opinions on the Columbia Business School study. [LINK] &gt; Another awful article to read. Why? While this is orientated towards Stem/Cell research based on what men ”stereotypically” think of women on a computer generated model of questioning with BIAS.And that right there proves that you didn’t bother to read the article at all. STEM refers to Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics. Moreover, it isn’t a study to show that women don’t choose to go in STEM faculties and workplaes; it’s a study to show how women who DO apply for STEM-related workplaces are discriminated. The first version of the experiment went as follows:- 150 ”Applicants” took a test to gauge their effectiveness at math - specifically, summing four-digits numbers without mistakes and as quickly as possible. Results showed that men and women were roughly equal.- 200 ”hiring managers” underwent a test to gauge how much they adhered to stereotypes about how women are less capable at math than men.- The ”managers” were required to choose a candidate between a man and a woman, for the same task (summing numbers), without knowing anything about those candidates besides their gender.- Results of test 1: 2 men hired for each woman. When ”mistakes” were made (the less efficient candidate was picked), 90 of the time, it was ”less competent man hired over more competent woman”. College degrees, past background - all irrelevant because the ”managers” couldn’t know that information; all they knew was that candidate A was a man and candidate B was a woman.- Version 2: ”applicants” were allowed to tell the ”managers” about the results of their test. Again, college degrees, backgrounds etc. are irrelevant for the purpose of this test; the ”managers” know only the gender and the score of the applicants.- Results of test 2: the hiring bias was diminished, but NOT eliminated. Furthermore, it was shown that those responsible for that bias were those who believed the stereotype ”women can’t do math” the most. The bulk of the ”mistakes” was STILL ”less competent man hired over more competent woman”.All other objections of yours don’t matter; the text excluded the ratio of math degrees because it’s irrelevant to the test. The test showed that, when it comes to male and female applicants in math, there’s a bias against women. The same goes for pretty much the entirety of STEM. Try and dismiss that.6) ...but this third wave of feminism as a majority isn’t even needed because they are taking issues towards the wrong places that don’t even enforce sexism.Gender roles ARE sexism. The very idea that a man can’t do X or that a woman has to be Y is by itself sexist, because it’s complete evopsych bullshit.7) They’re making this into a public gathering of support from people who don’t play games.....I don’t remember talking about women in videogames, but okay, fine, I’ll bite.First of all: girls and women play videogames. Deal with it. [LINK] &gt; Eventually, gaming will endorse more female gamers.Just like people of color would’ve gotten the vote? By magic?&gt; However, feminists like Anita Sarkeesian are rigging their whole support from people who don’t even play games at all and as a result gain popularity from bloggers who can’t even research, along with liberal media outlets that label games as sexist, when in actuality they are not.First: how do	Gender, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	12/734	1.635

Dario Carraresi oh, right, so you don't use the dictionary definition of sexism but I'm sure you're quick to point to the definition of feminism when people claim misogynist to be feminist. Nevertheless, the only right that women lack that men have, in certain states, is being topless. Until you can give me legal rights that women are lacking and men have I'll continue to be an MRA. Meninism isn't a thing, they're a joke, they're satire, they have nothing to do with MRAs. For your argument about men and women not actually choosing gender roles, being the caregiver or being the breadwinner, it sounds like you don't understand human instinct. It makes scientific sense that a female would want to take care of their child and the male would want to provide for them. Now, even if what you said was true the law isn't forcing these roles on anyone. The problem with child custody is that even when the father was the primary caregiver it's often overlooked and the child is given to the mother. Although this doesn't have anything to do with legal rights, it's a court biased, if I wanted to prove a court biased against men I could just point to the fact that all men get harsher sentences than women for the same crime. The 'wage gap' can be fixed in a few simple steps: call a lawyer, take legal action. It's against the law to pay someone less for the same exact job on the basis of sex. For some reason our country thinks to fix this we have to pass the same law again, that's not going to work. Take legal action or quit your job. The gender pay gap is a real thing and there are a bunch of reasons as to why but it comes down to men and women do different jobs. Back to gender roles, they are for the most part instinct, so biological. But of course that's not true for everyone. In the same way most people are straight, most men are masculine and want to provide and most women are feminine and nurturing. The problem isn't gender roles, we should try and force people out of them or into them we should let people choose what they want to do. There are no laws forcing people in gender roles it's society who doesn't like it when people don't stay in their gender role. You must be a liberation feminist, or at least I assume because you say feminism rebel against gender roles. I agree, anyone who is able to do a job should be able to do a job anyone who says otherwise is just silly. Pregnancy is just one reason why the pay gap exists. Isn't it weird how the women in STEM I've talked to say they haven't been discriminated against. I just think it's weird. Literally everything is sexist. Sarkeesian is crazy, I have nothing else to say about her. Yes sexism exists in videogames but it exists against men and women in videogames and you don't see it as something that needs to be made a big deal. You broke my Google twice.

Kittens Tepeş oh, right, so you don't use the dictionary definition of sexism but I'm sure you're quick to point to the definition of feminisim when people claim misogynist to be feminist.What does this have to do with the discussion at hand?I've pointed out that "sexism" has been used in two different accentions:1) A social/istituzionalized system that discriminates against, or favors unfairly, a specific gender;2) Discrimination against/unfairly giving advantages to a specific gender.The problem with using the second definition of "sexism" to indicate discriminations against men is that it ignores the simple fact that the vast, vast majority of social systems biased against a gender were biased against women. We had the exact same problem with "racism". It's not a really important thing, as long as everyone explains the definition they're using.Also:Feminism: A group that was born to give women the same rights as men; nowadays, a group that tries to make all genders equal.Misogynist: Someone who discriminates against women.The two are clearly incompatible.&gt; Nevertheless, the only right that women lack that men have, in certain states, is being topless. Until you can give me legal rights that women are lacking and men have I'll contuine to be an MRA.Oh, so since there isn't a LAW saying that women shouldn't be hired/promoted/paid as much as men, it means that discrimination in the workplaces doesn't exist? Then explaing the following two studies:- "Hiring managers" were required to hire either a man or a woman. they hired 2 men for every woman - but when they picked the less efficent candidate, 90 of the time they favored the man over the more efficent woman. The bias stood even when the "managers" were allowed to check the applicant's scores and SEE that the woman was more efficent than the man. [LINK] - Applications are sent to various faculties. Each application sent to a specific faculty were WORD-BY-WORD identical, barring the name. Results: "women" were recalled far less that the "men", and were offered, on average, 4.000 $ less in yearly pay. [LINK] For your argument about men and women not actually choicing gender roles, being the caregiver or being the breadwinner, it sounds like you don't understand human instinct. It makes scientific sense that a female would want to take care of their child and the male would want to provide for them.Citation needed. Also: if that was true, then MRAs should drop their "child custody" argument. Child custody is awarded to the primary care-giver, aka the parent who stayed at home and took care of the kids the most. If you defend "biological gender roles", you can't whine that men don't get child custody.Same for alimony.&gt; The problem with child custody is that even when the father was the primer caregiver it's often overlooked and the child is given to the mother.Citation needed. And again: according to your "biological instinct", a man being the primary care-giver is an abnormality.&gt; Although this doesn't have anything to do with legal rights, its a court biased, if I wanted to prove a court biased against men I could just point to the fact that all men get harsher sentences than women for the same crime.False. That’s not the definition of feminism, in fact the definition of feminism that is in dictionary is really just based on liberal feminism. The first definition you gave was correct. "A group that was born to gibe women the same rights as men". There are many forms of feminism all centering around the idea that women are oppressed, men are privileged and there is a patriarchy. Of course the idea that men are oppressing women and have privilege is going to bred a hatred of men, that’s just common sense. Now liberation feminism centers around the idea that gender it self is oppressive. While cultural feminism, aka modern feminism, is based around the concept that masculinity is toxic and that way of thinking will defiantly bred a hatred of men. Tell me, since feminisim, by dictionary definition, is a movement to give women the rights of men and women aren’t lacking legal rights that men have how can anyone really call themselves a feminist? If we are really going off the definition you can’t be a feminist unless you advocate for FGM and women being drafted. I’m glad you do make a distinction between individual racism and institutionalized racism.When did I say women werent discriminated against? I said I will not call myself a feminist when there are no legal rights women are lacking that men have. I still advocate gender equality and I’m against sexism but that has nothing to do with legal rights.You don’t seem to understand what I meant by biological instinct. Here I’ll give you an example, people are normally attracted to the opposite sex, people are normally cisgendered, men are on average taller than women, but of course that doesn’t hold true for every single person alive. In the same way males are normally masculine and females are normally feminine. When I took about masculinity and femininity I am referring to things like desires not the colors pink and blue.I don’t care about what gender the judge is, there is a court biased against men, plain and simple. It doesn’t matter if the judge is a men or a women, it’s wrong. I never said women want to hold men down, I don’t think that.A better example would be, when you get robbed you should call the police. If someone beats you up you should call the police. If somebody breaks a contract with you, you should take them to court. If you own an apartment complex and someone isn’t paying rent you take them to court. That’s why these laws exist. I find the term people of color incredibly offensive. indigenous people, Africans and Asians have nothing in common other than the fact that they aren’t European. I don’t like being placed in a group of people o share nothing on common with and since I’m multiracial I feel the term poc disregards me and it’s as if I must chose a side. Just for future reference, some people find the term offensive. I said the gender gap is real and there are many reasons for it, I never said discrimination wasn’t one. In fact I think social influence and sexism is a big reason why men and women don’t take jobs dominated by the opposite sex. I believe the only way to fix this is to encourage men and women to go into the jobs they want, no matter what those jobs be. I do, however, think the gender gap will always exist.Yes, I’m for real. Let me repeat it, there are no laws forcing people into gender roles.No, it is both nurture and nature. Of course the idea that men are oppressing women and have privilege is going to bred a hatred of men, that's just common sense.Bullshit. "Being equal to men" and "hating men and wanting to put them down" are incompatible. And we don't hate "men", we hate patriarchy. We hate the system of beliefs that makes "masculinity" the default, and that believes that "feminine" and everything that isn't "masculine" enough is weak.&gt; Now liberation feminism centers around the idea that gender it self is oppressive."Gender" isn't oppressive. Saying that "males are X" or "females cannot be Y", and trying to enforce those ideas on everyone, are oppression.&gt; While cultural feminism, aka modern feminism, is based around the concept that masculinity is toxic and that way of thinking will defiantly bred a hatred of men.Yeah, you know jack shit about feminists. Dario Carraresi I, as someone who can read a dictionary can say that, that's not the dictionary definition of feminism. The thing is feminism was made to give women the rights as men, you can fight for the same rights as a group and still hate that group. It's normal to hate someone who had more than you so believing men are privileged and women don't have the same privileges will cause some women to hate men. It's also normal to hate your oppressor so if you believe men are oppressing you it would be normal to hate them. There is no patriarchy, a government that is run by more men than women, yes, a patriarchy, no. If there was a patriarchy, a system of government that excluded women, there would be no female politicians. I actually agree loosely with liberation feminist. I'll answer your last question too because it has to do with this...

Liberation feminism is also called radical feminism and it is the second wave of feminism. They believe that gender is oppressive. Although their concept of gender is solely gender roles and gender roles (on a side note, I think that's why many TERFs and transphobic radical feminists exist). Their concept of gender is not all correct but I do agree with them on the basis that the way gender is viewed by society is wrong and needs to change. They have some other views that are more subjective, which I tend to disagree with. Some of their ideology confuses me, many I've talked to seem to truly believe their ideology will help men and women but they often reject the notion that feminism, at least their feminism, is for men. To me you sound like a mixture of a liberation and cultural feminist. As for cultural feminist, yes they do think masculinity is toxic. Or at least that's what it has translated to. I understand this ideology doesn't equal misandry but when you believe masculinity is toxic, or certain forms of masculinity is toxic, and when men are often masculine this can create a hatred of men.

Cultural feminists are the type of feminist who are often misandrists, at least in my experience. They are the type of feminist who would say a matriarchy would be good. You're right political ideas don't fit in dictionary definitions and we should define them by their actions and ideas. Well feminist actions have not been great, sadly this movement's voices are extremist. Sure feminists have done some good things but they have done some things that have made me and many other people turn away from the movement. I brought up women have legal rights in the west because feminism was for giving women rights that they have. I call myself an MRA because men are lacking rights, if women were also lacking rights I'd call myself a feminist or preferably a WRA. Actually sexual orientation is a mixture of nature and nurture, leaning more towards nature. Like I said gender roles and masculinity/femininity are different. I'm not talking about women wanting to wear dresses or anything like that. I'm talking about women having the desire to have children and men feeling the need to provide and women being more empathetic etc. These are because males and females have different brains. I'm not bashing feminism when I say there is a bias against men. It's not just judges either, juries have these biases too. No amount of laws will change this, if laws aren't being enforced that is the problem. This is actually happening a lot, laws not being enforced. I

The matter is ”Do feminists actually DO that?”.&gt; There is no patriarchy, a government that is run by more men than women, yes, a patriarchy, no. If there was a patriarchy, a system of government that excluded women, there would be no female politicians.Yeah, no. ”Patriarchy” is a system that treats men and masculinity as the default, and anything else as inferior. It isn’t necessary that ”women have zero power” to have patriarchy; all you need is ”masculinity being valued over femininity”. And there’s plenty of examples, from the rigid (SOCIAL) gender roles that want women to stay at home, to women being a vast minority in every power field, including politics.&gt; As for cultural feminist, yes they do think masculinity is toxic. +Travis Jones men’s rights and women’s rights are equally important.. problem is many people on both sides like to start blaming each other, acting as if their issues are more important than the other. Regardless of how you look at it it’s all due to sexism and gender inequality. If the problems are all gender based, and they are, then gender as a concept is the problem. Raising your children to be boys or girls, why can’t they be raised the same way? they have different genitalia? Who the frigh cares! That’s biology and has nothing to do with assigned roles we place on people. Stop enforcing gender roles on children and we solve the problems on both sides, but not only that, we create a world where it’s perfectly ok to be transgender , gay , or lesbian . Kittens Tepeş Dario is a huge moron who cannot argue against facts because all she has is toxic, manipulative propaganda. All we can hope for is that she wakes up to the fact that she is supporting an ideology that is comparative to that of the nazi party back in Hitlers day. Kittens Tepeş I'm gonna work later on that "feminist misandrist quote list", but just so you know:- Most of those quotes are at least forty years old.- Most of those quotes don't report the source they were taken from.- Some of those quotes don't exist.- Many of those quotes aren't threatening at ALL.- Many of the quotes referencing marriage and wanting to "end" it refers to the institution of marriage forty years ago. You know, when women couldn't hold jobs, couldn't vote, and were expected to obey their husbands in everything including giving sex without a single damn given about whether the wife consented to it or not?- Some of those quotes are fictional. As in, taken from books of fiction. What, is Jack Nicholson an insane murderer because he played Joker in Batman now?As for the other points of yours:- Citation needed for everything. This includes feminists hating men. Proving that feminists hate the oppression of women isn't enough - you must prove that feminists hate men for being men.- Men DO have the right to genitalia integrity. It's called assault and injury. Yes, this includes circumcising babies. By the way: citation needed about feminist being in favor of circumcising babies/against those who want to outlaw the circumcision of babies.- Feminists HAVE fought against women being excluded from the draft. It was men who opposed feminists who mantained the exclusion. [LINK] - There ARE resources for abused men, and most women's resources redirect battered men towards men's resources. For fuck's sake, the "ultra-feminist" RAINN has serivces for men! [LINK] (Also: WAVA is gender-neutral in everything but the name. You can get funding for men's shelters. Why aren't you doing like feminists did and BUILD THEM?) [LINK] - No, it's women who get lighter sentences; we know that, because fair judges give to both men and women the same sentences unfair judges give to men only. The imbalance existst because judges believe misogynist myths such as "women are weaker than men", "more emotional than men", "more caring than men", "less capable of violence than men". We know that, because the more female judges there are, the lesser the bias becomes, to the point that, mathematically speaking, an all-female judicial district would give women harsher sentences than men. Kittens Tepeş Guess what? The huge moron is back! And has started tearing apart Anti-Feminist Pro-Equality's bullshit. You listen too, Miller.So. This thing is 21 pages long on Word, including images. I'm gonna try and debate this textwall as quickly as I can, but there's a LOT of stuff. Luckily, most of this stuff is completely unsourced, so there's that. First of all: child custody! No, child custody is not "50/50" by default. Wanna know why? Because the default is not "both the mother and the father equally take care of the child". It's "one parent stays at home to take care of the child, the other goes to work and pursues their career". Since the most beneficial thing for the kid is to stay with the parent who actually took care of it, that's the default.You don't like that women are the majority of these stay-at-home parents? How about dismantling the social norms that make it so that "men = breadwinner, women = housekeeper"? Oh, right, nevermind, anti-feminists don't want women to work in actual jobs like mining, because that's a man's job and women are weak and they'd never sully themselves with those hard jobs - except for all the time THEY DO. [LINK] [LINK] [LINK] Really, if you believe that, due to "biology", women are more fit for nurturing children, you can't whine when people believe that men are WORSE at nurturing children.Also: Glenn Sacks? Really? That's the kind source you want to use? Next: false rape allegations aren't an "epidemic". [LINK] Nor do they have much success. [LINK] And they're already being considered crimes - it's called "wasting the police's time" (making a false accusation), "perversion of the course of justice" (in some states, for making a false accusation; for others, for obstructing the investigation or forging false evidence), "slander" (making a false accusation), and "perjury, 1st degree" (making a false statement in court).(By the way: the law to grant anonimity for those accused of rape? The law that, according to Anti-Feminism Pro-Equality, was repealed by feminists? The article cited by AFPE does NOT mention feminists. At all. Good job exposing the imaginary feminists that only exist in your paranoia, AFPE.) Next: the sentencing bias! No, it's not that men get harsher sentences - it's because women get lighter sentences, because of misogynistic myths such as "women are weaker than men", "more caring than men", "more emotional than men", etc. You know where this line of reasoning ends? "Women has less capacity of violence than men".Also? Feminists haven't caused this sentencing bias, nor are they preventing anyone from fixing it. In fact, feminists are working to fix this bias. The judges unfair towards men? They themselves are male. Female judges are fair - to the point that an estimated all-female judicial district would give women harsher sentences than men.The evidence presented here suggests that judicial demographics have little influence on prison sentences in general, but do impact racial and gender disparities. The findings regarding gender in the case of serious offenses are quite striking: the greater the proportion of female judges in a district, the lower the gender disparity for that district. I interpret this as evidence of a paternalistic bias among male judges that favors women. [LINK] Also, that BBC article cited by AFPE? lacigreen OK first off if you want to be treated like men, you can start off by getting punished the same ways as men. This would getting the same death penalties or jail time as men, depending on the crime they commit. Then you lose as much as a men in a divorce, where they take all your money and your house and custody of your child, if you have one. You can also experience the hypocrisy faced against you. Like getting raped but no one actually caring because your a male. Men face so much harshness. This is why men don't like to show emotions, not because we want to, but because we have to. Having watched some other Laci Green videos, I've some respect for some of the things she says generally but in this one she has a dangerous mix of just enough partial truth to make her point of view sound sensible but packaged up with some false assumptions.What she is doing is assuming that men handle some situations differently to women due to some sort of oppression rather than genuine differences with the way our brains are wired. In nature, almost every species has evolved hard-wired gender roles that give said species the best chance to survive and thrive. That needs multiple different qualities such as the strength to defend yourself against predators, the desire to reproduce in order to keep your species going and the ability to protect your offspring.Diversity is not a bad thing, it's essential for survival. Now, in human beings its not as clear cut as some species, there are men that possess many qualities we associate with femininity and vice versa with women but on the whole, we still have these genetic traits that have served our species well in dominating our planet.Laci, like many misguided feminists, sees masculinity as some sort of problem that she needs to solve by making men think like women but that is not only bad for men, it's bad for women too.There's nothing wrong with thinking with your emotions, that sort of nurturing quality is really useful when dealing with other human beings but you also need the balance of more rational minds too. That is how we develop tools and science that enable us to evolve.Every patronising, belittling point she makes, somehow always comes back to talking about women. She describes sexism as something that's "typically against women", which is contradictory to the faux male sympathising undertone of the video. She also talks about sexism being "shaming the feminine". Why would it be sexist to shame the feminine but perfectly fine to belittle the masculine as she does in this video? Feminists always argue that feminism is about equality, but when it comes down to it, their arguments are always centred around women.Problems that effect us all like violence (men are statistically more likely to be violently attacked than women) and sexual assault (men can and are assaulted too) are described in a way that makes them appear as solely women's issues. Men do not define themselves against women at all but they increasingly find themselves being attacked for displaying any masculine qualities in a world that is becoming increasingly biased against them. It's time to shelve the myth that feminism is about equality and expose the hypocrisy of this vile ideology. Instead, look to egalitarianism which looks at issues from a humanistic standpoint, challenging civil right violations where they occur regardless of gender, not because of it!	Gender, Nothing, Sexism, Sexual	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	6/475	1.263

skwcw2001 Do you watch the news? In Australia, the Minister of Women is male. A few weeks ago, I listened to male politicians explain that the tax on tampons is because tampons aren't a "necessity", whereas condoms are tax-free. All Laci was trying to say was that men should feel free to be who they are as long as they're not hurting anyone, which is a lot nicer than listening to old white men talk about tampons. saraahh27 "In Australia, the Minister of Women is male."What sex is the minister of men?	Sex	Gender - General	1/16	6.25

saraahh27Sure, there are male voices who epitomise the male gender role.To me, that's like saying "there are mostly female voices in homes taking care of children, the female perspective is already dominant among young children in the home and into primary school, so why do you need a minister for women?"With the answer being "to expand women's roles into areas where they previously didn't have open access to, and since most women are not even aware that this is even an option to them, a key goal is to raise consciousness that this is actually an option for women."You said that "aged care and tax" affect mostly women.Those are two things which are almost opposite in their affect.Aged care directly affects mostly women because there is an inequality in how long men and women live on average. Women are living longer, most of that is due to unnatural causes. If men are typically living less long, they don't need so much aged care because they are behind to begin with.About tax, tax directly affects men more, because since men typically earn more money, they typically pay more tax. This is based on an inequality between how much men and women earn in the first place.If women typically earn less money, they have less tax issues because they are behind to begin with.In both of these cases, the issue you mentioned is a result of an underlying and deeper inequality.Funnily enough, both are quite connected, the mining and construction boom in Australia brought a long of wealth. Mostly men worked in those industries and earned a lot of money (tax problems for men). Yet those industries are notoriously dangerous, the vast majority of people injured and killed (90+) at work were men. (causes women to need more aged care)I don't know about welfare, but your childcare example seems to be another perfect example of addressing a surface level issue, rather than going deeper to underlying systemic dynamics. Men have very few advocates in terms of expanding their roles among children, none in politics that I am aware of.A minister for men would be meant to advocate for things like an affirmative action campaign for fathers. To encourage a social shift to make stay at home dads a more common and accepted role. That would be their job.A minister for women is very unlikely to do that for men.The reason that it seems like there is no need for a minister men is either1) it's unnecessary, men are doing greater2) men's gender role expansion and unique issues have been so under explored that most people are not even aware they exist, including most men	Common, Gender	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	3/459	0.654

Light And Shadow I can't argue with anything you're saying. When I mentioned tax impacting women though, I was thinking about the amount of single women who are raising children on their own since they'd have more expenses. And I agree that it should be acceptable for men to be stay at home dads and involved in childcare, especially since I myself work in a childcare centre that has male employees. I'm not saying that men don't have any issues, in an ideal world we'd have a minister of gender equality. But we don't. What we have is a parliament which is dominated by males, so can you blame me for wanting the minister of women to be a woman ?	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/120	1.667
saraahh27Yeah, in theory someone can be a minister of women regardless of their sex . It's not like a man can't learn about and study women's issues, and advocate for them.But in practice, having a male leader speak on behalf of women's empowerment isn't exactly a strong symbolic role model for women. At a minimum it can feel a little off. Likely it would cause blind spots, or completely miss the point entirely on issues, especially if having a male leader is a relatively common .So I can appreciate you feeling that way.What I would say in response, is that this is also how many men feel.The gender debate is dominated by feminism, many men feel that it doesn't address their needs or issues. Can you blame men for wanting a men's movement to address men's inequalities? Or at the very least a gender neutral equality movement?I think the two ideas are actually very similar, just like the feelings that arise as a result.	Blind, Common, Gender, Sex	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Social Class - Working class	5/168	2.976
It doesn't need to be a competition between the two though. I'm not blaming men, I agreed with you that there are men's issues that need to be addressed, but feminism does actually stand up for men's issues. Part of feminism is that men can partake in roles that society sees as a " woman 's job" and that men who are more feminine than masculine shouldn't be put down for it. I've seen many feminists talk about those issues. Jesus, I simply say "the minister of women should be a woman " and you come over with this "WHAT ABOUT THE MEN?!" attitude. I work with boys from the ages 2 - 5. I've seen those boys come to work with nail polish on and get made fun of and I've stuck up for them every time. I've seen parents try to force gender stereotypes on their boys and have supported those boys when they want to wear a dress out of the dress-ups or want to ride the pink scooter instead of the blue scooter. Stop acting like every feminist doesn't consider the feelings of men.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/185	1.081

saraahh27I'm really surprised you viewed what I said in that way. I thought it was actually quite neutral, my whole point had been;"So I can appreciate (your frustration).What I would say in response, is that this is also how many men feel.""I think the two ideas are actually very similar, just like the feelings that arise as a result."I focused on the FEELINGS of many men. I didn't even talk about fact's or actual real world outcomes. I talked about feelings.Then you shame me (and men) for what I said, with "you come over with this "WHAT ABOUT THE MEN?!" attitude."When did I have that attitude? I had nothing close to it. I talked about feelings, which can not be invalid, because they are based on subjective emotions.Then you conclude with "Stop acting like every feminist doesn't consider the feelings of men."Really?Really?Maybe some feminists consider the feelings of men, but just now you didn't. Light And Shadow You've gotta understand though that, as a woman , there are countless times where I have tried to talk about women's issues only for them to be undermined by men and that's how it was starting to feel. Yeah, I'll admit that maybe in that last comment I didn't consider your feelings, but I deal with boys feelings in my every day life in a way that encourages gender equality. saraahh27I actually think you are a good hearted person, and you are doing your best, and very likely doing a great job with the kids you take care of. I got the feeling you didn't think I thought that, so please understand that I do.What you said sounds very interesting to me."You've gotta understand though that, as a woman , there are countless times where I have tried to talk about women's issues only for them to be undermined by men and that's how it was starting to feel."I appreciate that when you speak about women's issues it can feel like there is a lot of push back, often from people who don't even understand what you are saying or trying to do. So that can feel overwhelming and push even the most patient person to react less than perfectly.Let me ask you something, do you think this is unique to women? Do you think it is any different for men who act outside their accepted gender role? or even question their gender role?How supportive of a man speaking about men's issues and challenges do you think most individuals are? how supportive do you think the mainstream is? how well do you think speaking about men's issues and feelings of unfair treatment is accepted in a culture where the main gender narrative is about men as oppressors and women as victims?I'm sorry if that question doesn't really feel supportive, I'm asking that as gently as I can. It's not even meant to be a rhetorical question, I actually really want to know what you imagine it is like for a man to speak about those issues?For example, if you take virtually women's issue, then expand the discussion and talk about how it affects both women AND men. What do you think the typical level of acceptance of that is?I get that it's not exactly smooth sailing for women speaking about women's issues. How do you think it is for men? Light And Shadow Women are taught to be polite, lady-like, apologize for things they shouldn't apologize for, the list goes on. I mean just the other day, a guy shoved past me and I found myself apologizing to him?! I realized immediately after how stupid it was of me to apologize, but it's really hard to unlearn those things. Men are taught to be masculine, loud, outgoing, and a bunch of other things. I think that men who don't fit in that stereotype do have trouble being heard because they may not be as confident, they may be embarrassed about the fact that they're not masculine, etc. Then on the other side of it, masculine men might have trouble talking about those things because they have been taught not to show any emotion, which is a serious problem and is one of the main factors that leads to violence against women. So I don't doubt for one second that it's hard for men to talk about their issues in a way that's comfortable for them, but I do think men have an easier time being heard than women. I recently read a book called Everyday Sexism by Laura Bates. In that book, she explained that since she started the Everyday Sexism project, she has had plenty of rape threats for speaking about the issue. As far as I know, men don't get rape threats when they talk about these issues, and if they do it's far fewer than the amount that women get. I think that (in most cases) women are afraid of talking about these issues because they're scared of being physically hurt or threatened by men (occasionally even other women), whereas I think men (again, in most cases) are afraid of talking about these issues because they're embarrassed about being seen as emotional or weak. I feel like both of those issues could improve if parents started teaching or just allowing their boys to express their emotions in a healthy way. You ask a lot of questions, I don't even know if I've answered any of them, haha.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/350	0.571
---	--------	------------------	-------	-------

saraahh27I agree with about 70 to 80 of what you are saying, some things I have a different opinion on.Perfect example by Quintin May just now.When that guy pushed past you (apparently quite rudely), how do you think he would have reacted if you said to him what Quintin May just said to you?Do you think that would have increased or decreased your personal safety? (compared to how you actually reacted)If we assign gender roles as the cause for the stereotypical reactions of men and women in that situation, then it seems that it is actually men who are systematically more likely to be victims of violence.On the other hand, if a guy metaphorically "pushes past you" at work or in the boardroom etc, then in that situation it is definitely detrimental to act "lady like" and apologise for something that isn't your fault. It means you shrink and give up your agency and personal power.In that scenario, it is women who are systemically more likely to be victims of passivity, with results of things like the glass ceiling.So the answer is to overcome that right?But when you say things like "Then on the other side of it, masculine men might have trouble talking about those things because they have been taught not to show any emotion, which is a serious problem and is one of the main factors that leads to violence against women."You automatically focused on "violence against women".If you care about equality, then part of that is equally caring about men's emotions, and men's vulnerability. So then why would someone focus on "violence against women"? instead of the more relevant "violence against men?" Or even "violence against humans?" or "Violence by men"?All of those make much more sense then to focus on the safety of the group which is statistically the safest.I get that it's an emotional thing, and hard to overcome. I totally agree.The thing is, in order to overcome the downsides of a gender role, you have to also be willing to let go of the upsides.If women want to have equal agency and equal personal power, they have to be willing to give up their unequal protection.	Gender	Gender - General	2/378	0.529

Manny Wopper Okay, buddy, scenario time:You're a decent-sized guy. Let's pretend you're about 5'11", for the sake of this scenario. You get into an argument with a girl who's roughly 5'1". It gets heated. Like, really heated. She pushes you. Naturally you push back, because of how gender equality lets you fight back, which is completely understandable. The thing you haven't anticipated though is that this girl goes to the gym 4 times a week, and you're a rather lean guy. She punches your shoulder. And your gut. And then, she jabs-crosses you right in the jaw. Your nose starts bleeding. You haymaker at her, she ducks, and uppercuts you right in the liver. You fall to the ground, defeated. You walk back to your group of friends. They ask what happened to you. You struggle to say: "I got beat up by a chick , she was crazy ." Your nose is bleeding a lot. You're limping. Your friends say: "Come on, Anon, what really happened?" You answer: "A girl kicked my ass..." They start laughing at you. "What, was she big?", they ask. "No, she was about 5'1"." They laugh harder. Basically what's she's saying is let go of your instincts and how evolution intended for shit to work. Men are supposed to rival each other. Women are supposed to look and act feminine and "sexy" so they can attract a male to pass on their genetic code. Transgender and homosexuals is actually a fuck up. ZaK We've been at war with other tribes since the dawn of time, are you seriously telling me that humans don't have a "kill the rivals" instinct?Look, the matter is: if instincts rule our society today, then see the above. If they aren't, then why justify rigid gender norms with "it's a natural instinct"?	Gender	Gender - General	1/55	1.818
Dario Carraresi My entire point is that society is dictated by instincts, just not in the obvious ways you think. Seems like you don't understand how instincts exactly work. It's usually not something people exactly understand when it takes control, since it's an instinct and something we really don't think about. Example: Males look for curves on a woman because it's something we're supposed to be preprogrammed to look for because it's a sign of fertility. Men competing for women usually doesn't mean we're killing rivals. However, men will have a killer instinct if it means they protect the mate of their choice. In modern society, killing is not usually needed, so that is why I'm not killing the male rivals in my neighborhood. And now back to the main point. Natural instincts will always dictate society and people's behavior whether it helps you or hurts you. Nothing what i say matters, and nothing you say matters either. Your argument is flawed because you're attempting to go against nature.	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/169	1.775

ZaK So, let me get this straight.You're saying that we can't control our instincts.But then, you say that in modern society, killing is not needed. You've admitted that we've suppressed the instinct to kill our rivals - maybe not in individual cases, but definitely at a social coesion level.So, what is it? Are instincts suppressable in our society, or not? It's quite simple, really.If you defend rigid gender roles because "instincts cannot be suppressed", then also the instinct to eliminate our rivals can't be suppressed, either.If, viceversa, you say that we did suppress the instinct to kill our rivals at a social level, then you have to admit that rigid gender roles, who stem from our instincts, can be suppressed at a social level.	Gender	Gender - General	2/129	1.55
Dario Carraresi An instinct to find food and water are absolutely needed and cannot be suppressed. You did not understand what i wrote, or perhaps I was not clear in my statements. Some instincts which are not absolutely needed are not always obvious in which they are displayed. An instinct to kill rivals is not obvious, but since I'm not an expert on human nature, I cannot be sure whether or not males actually have an instinct to kill other rival males, and chances are you can't be sure either.You also quoted a line i never wrote again.Even if we did have a instinct to kill male rivals, saying that because one instinct can be suppressed means that all instincts can be suppressed is an uneducated assumption. A better example of a natural instinct which are used to define a gender role is how women are pressured to look attractive more than men. They are pressured to look sexy because of their natural instinct to attract a male. There's women who like to think they can suppress that instinct, but the truth is they really can't. They will always do something to look attractive to men.	Gender	Gender - General	1/198	0.505
ZaK Man, as a bisexual, I'm so sorry I'm a fuck up, that I wasn't meant to be this way. As a man, my instinct is to be whoever the fuck I want to be. Does that affect your life? I'm guessing it doesn't. Guys can take on any gender role they want, and so can women. How men are supposed to rival each other and how women have to be attractive to ensure the passing of genetics may be relevant to, I don't know... Fucking animals? But in our society, today, where our lives are formed by said society (notice how animals don't have structured societies), you can't possibly expect for men to stay the same as they were 10,000 years ago. To think this, one would have to be extremely closed-minded. As in, "women-shouldn't-vote" close-minded.	Gender	Gender - General	1/137	0.73

Anthony Gosselin Looks like you're accusing me of being sexist as an attempt to get people to dismiss anything I say. This is not going to work. I'm not homophobic , sexist or whatever you'd like to call me next, but homosexuality is not supposed to exist because it would prevent the species to continue to exist. So, yes, it is a fuck up. But no matter how much you may want to get away from gender roles and evolution you can never truly escape the human nature. Anthony Gosselin No, using logic is what tells me is supposed to exist. Being straight in people is supposed to exist because it is the only way the species can naturally reproduce. Homosexuality and being transgendered has no purpose in people, so that's what makes it unintended. Also, not even going to argue this point, but there's nothing wrong with religion. You're on the wrong video if you want to even talk about that.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/74	1.351

ZaK I never said there was something wrong with religion. Read again. I'm just saying that logic alone can't deduce what is natural and what isn't. Going by your logic, humans aren't natural. Life on earth isn't natural. It was a mistake. Without living beings, things exist for no reason. When living beings come into play, they give those things (the sun, the galaxy, the universe), reasons to exist. There are so many more scenarios where humans don't exist than there are where they do. So, biology isn't relevant anymore when it comes to gender. Our genders are completely controlled by how our society view them- ever noticed that women aren't treated the same/don't act the same in all societies? It's not because of biological reasons, it's because genders are viewed/treated differently in different cultures. Here's a bit of reading [LINK] The Cherokee's tribes were Matrifocal- not only that, but women owned all the properties. Also, the men had to consult an all-female council before going to war. That's hardcore shit. Women were in position of power. Women controlled the tribal wars, not the other way around. Biology has nothing to do with gender. Not anymore. Society molds genders. You can't just lump people into two categories anymore. There are spectrums that have been proven to exist; from gender to sexual preference. Anthony Gosselin I can find way more examples of civilizations where men were in positions of power while women were not. You have a handful of examples. I have an entire history of ancient civilizations' worth. Saying that "Biology has nothing to do with gender." is a statement only an uneducated person would say. Behavior is a part of biology. Are you saying gender has nothing to do with the way a person acts? The way society views gender roles is because of how men and women are supposed to act according to nature. You want to go against nature.I'm sorry I can't continue to talk to anyone who thinks that behavior has nothing to do with gender.I'm going to drink gasoline.	Gender, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	7/124	5.645
