William Killeen yes you’re very safe because I think alpha starts at 2009 or at least it should it’s so weird how 8 year olds and college seniors can be part of the same generation	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/36	2.778
There are so many sources because the distinction is arbitrary and hence such labels are bogus. Having said that, going by your own definitions, Generation Z aren’t yet old enough to judge and even millenials are only just starting to make an impact on society. The world we live in today was built by baby boomers and is currently run by Gen X.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/63	1.587
Srange Wire Generally just large social shifts. Political shifts, technological shifts. Arbitrary dates are shoved on and people value those different shifts to different degrees which is why the age limits on generation names are so wide ranging.	Age	Age - General	1/38	2.632

The way this video defines Millennial and Gen Z is not correct. Gen Y is not even a real generation but is considered a sub generation. Complete generations last around 20 years. To understand where the generations fit in you have to go back a few generations to the Baby Boomers. The most scientific definition of the Generations starts with the end of WW2 in 1945. When millions of soldiers came home from the war they immediately started families which produced a baby boom that lasted until 1965. The Baby Boom generation is called that because there was a literal 20 year baby boom after WW2 ended. The beginning dividing line between the Boomers and Gen-X is around the start of the Vietnam war draft. The start of the Vietnam war draft caused a baby bust in 1965 and officially ended the baby boom. People born in 1965 were not boomers because there was no more baby boom. Family size declined drastically from 4 or 5 kids per couple down to about 2.2 kids. The introduction "the pill" birth control and abortion from Roe v Wade in 1973 kept birth rates low into the 1980s. People born in 1965 do have something in common with those born in 1984. It is called low birth rates and smaller families. The dividing line between Gen-X and Millennial is around 1985. People born in 1985 and after cannot remember a time when the internet, computers, video games, cell phones, etc were not part of life. Millennials have a poor understanding of anything that happened in the 20th century. They cannot remember the USSR or the Berlin Wall falling or how big the cold war was for Gen-X and Boomers. Millennials are defined by 9/11 and growing up in the age of terrorism that came after. Generation Z or Post Millennials does not even start until 2004/5. The oldest Gen Z is only 14 years old.	Age, Common, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	3/322	0.932

if you were born into a world with internet, you are GenZ. you were born during the boom of the information age. in this day, anything you want is online. you don't know a world without cell phones in everyone's pocket and a computer in nearly every house. when I was born in 95 is when computers were starting to reach into everyone's houses. my house got its first computer back then. everyone had landlines, you know, the phone that is connected to a wall XD and you found your friends by biking or walking down the road and seeing who was at each others house, or if you could see your friends bikes. now we are able to look at a digital screen and because the majority of the population have their own device now. the majority difference is "do you remember a time BEFORE our modern technology, our digitally saturated world. at the age of 16, it says its unlikely.but that's why age doesn't matter as much as the world you've experienced. being a mid 90's baby, I identify as Millennial but notice I carry a few Gen Z traits. I was only about 16 when I got my first cell phone and by this time smartphones were just starting to pick up wind. the iPod touches launch was when I really started to notice the availability of technology in our hands, my friends started to want to only text more and more. less people want to have a verbal phone call, and if there is a phone call, now we tend to attach a video call to it (skype Etc)Age doesn't matter, be your true self.	Age	Age - General	4/281	1.423
The way I see it, if you remember 9/11, weekday Toonami (not Saturday nights), Cartoon Network when it had the checkerboard logo, etc. and think post-2005 kids shows were shit or was too old for them, you're a Millennial. If you were too young to remember the things I mentioned in the first camp though, and were young enough to love post-2005 shows like Johnny Test for example, and considered them a fond childhood memory, you'd fit more into Gen Z.	Old	Age - Over 65s	7/81	8.642
Susndhvsdhj, I am not sure if your comment was directed at me or just a general but got to say you are making me feel realy old at 39 (for the record once you hit 20, time really does seem to move faster, I guess he you are done growing and he working world is so mundane... I thought about mentioning 9/11 as a date for Gen Z and I think gen Z would be a post 9/11 generation because gen z wouldn't remember when the USA wasn't involved in liberty distroying things such as TSA or the patriot act and Muslims were more of a curiosity to a person living in the states then someone that has some racist stereo types used on them and terrorist activities only happened over seas or in Hollywood films.	Old, Racist, Terrorist	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - General, Religious Identity - Muslim	3/136	2.206

I don't care what the Web says, Millennials should be two separate generations. Someone born in 1980 grew up in the 80's and 90s and was a adult by the 2000s. There experience of the early, mid, and late 2000s is radically different than someone born in 1994 or 1995 who where kids in the early 2000s and grew up throughout the mid and late 2000s. As someone born in the 1980s I can't even relate about cultural, life experiences, or especially growing up when I did with a 24 year old. As a kid I watched different shows, ate different cereal, played on different game consoles, used different mediums, listen to different music, wore different cloths, and had different presidents. Not to mention the world and technology was radically different when I was a teen in the 90s, versus people who where teens in 2010. We fundementally spent our time radically differently.The solution: Everyone born in the 1980s would be Gen Y, and everyone after is Millennials. Separate the two, like they should have been. Life for a kid in the 80s was radically different than life as a kid in the early 2000s - the Millennium (get it, little kids during the Millennium = Millenials)	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/208	0.481
Attack of the Pixels There is a lot of validity in what you're saying. I have seen many spans for Gen Y and Gen Z....people like you or me are closer to Gen X, as my older sibling is also Gen X. So if you had any older friends like I did growing up (2-4 years) we were heavily influenced by Gen X and the 80s and truly experienced the 90s.Most estimates I have seen for Millenials is 1980-1995, 1982-2000, 1980-1997. The most common one however is the first and leaves enough room for overlap. To your point, I have read somewhere describing us older Millennials nearing our 40s within the next 5-8 years as "Millenial Plus"....its a nice way of saying the older folk lol So When people speak in general terms of attitudes of generation Y or millennials, they really taking into scope people born right in the middle between 1985 and 1995...to me those born in late 80s to mid 90s are the true millennials, and on average in scope and attitude people born in the 2000s are true Gen Z (those in high school currently and smart enough to not go to college). I'm def in agreement tho...can't talk to 75 of my own generation...sad to say, but I feel optimism from and because of Gen Z lol.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/223	0.448
Andre Marchand Well, these generation names are very arbitrary to begin with, they might as well only the majority of people with common traits rather than an seemingly random start and end date.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/33	3.03
It's literally only based on your parents. If your parents were a product of baby boomers the you are a millennial. If your grandparents were a product of baby boomers then you're gen z. Age doesnt really matter.	Age	Age - General	1/38	2.632

The Infographics Show. Well actually it's kinda the whole point. Also the fact that you think generations are important in anyway is the reason why we constantly go through cycles of recession and depression in America. Because instead of learning from our elders and our past we focus on the youth like a sickness. Youth is wasted on the young, instead of talking about what constitutes you as a human based on what year you were born, let's focus on the things our elders and ancestors learned throughout the ages instead of always relying on the youth to save the old . Its a tired and played out game.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/108	0.926
TheFlames376 the fact that you 1 think I am a person who cares about it is hilarious. 2 I read the first line of your comment and knew the rest was pointless to read because I in fact dont care so whatever you're saying is redundant. 3 I didnt even watch this dumb content I was commenting about the thumbnail saying ages to define each generation which is in fact click bait and not true information. Mumb es005 Yes! I used all of those in school. The only thing we had early on as far as computers go was the Apple IIe and I usually played learning games on those and of course Oregon Trail We didn't get a computerized catalog until the late 90s. I wouldn't say the schools were behind for the most part, as one of my teachers had a Laserdisc player as well as VHS. Only one High school I had was out of date, as they still had actual chalkboards and we had to watch faded filmstrips. That was in 1998. Some say that Gen Y didn't start until 1984, while others say it started in 1982. I think the former, since I don't really have any traits of Gen Y. Born in '83, I felt like I was born in an era of 70s leftovers and remember how life was before the Internet.	Apple	Ethnicity - Native-American	1/152	0.658
Not exactly fair, I identify as Millennial yet I carry many traits of the "Genz" because i saw only the tail end of the pre internet life, i always felt more comfortable using a keyboard to communicate once i began learning how, i immersed myself in the technology. I am an example of someone who breaks the "form" I am not Genx nor Gen Z i am a human who has seen both sides of the fence and continues to learn and evolve daily. the real difference will be in the children growing up right now, possibly a select few will even know what a library is. or will visit one in their life time. everything will be so easy to access online by the time they grow up, they wont want to go anywhere. this is a generalization and i am not a fortune teller... but this is what i see, the next generation will be the true technology generation. Mellenials pioneered the modern electronics, their children and some of them perfected it. now some of the "children" and the "childrens-children" (Gen Z and further) get to figure out what is next, Efficiency? sustainability? genZ is entering the workforce and age of majority more and more every day, it is your turn to help shape our world. we need the creativity and ingenuity the mold breaking expansion of growth, we cant keep doing the same thing year in year out and not expect our planet to die one day from this toxic "modern age "	Age	Age - General	2/254	0.787
That fact you stated right there should tell you that, maybe, the whole topic you speaking of, is bullsh*t.The foundations of it, I would assume, are, in part, the deliniantions of the generations. If there isn't consensus about that basic aspect, what's to say your whole video isn't you speaking out of your bum ?	Bum	Social Class - Destitute	1/55	1.818

Generations in this sense don't exist. People are different and come from all walks of life, regardless of when they were born. Also, someone who's 23 today is a millennial according to dates, not Gen Z. A generation is a minimum of 20 years, with some being as long as 25 traditionally. It seems like people are so deadset on pigeon-holeing millennials and disassociating from them that they are fine with confining a generation to a mere decade. I also don't really see any noticeable difference between the Gen Yers and Gen Zers around me; just these weird clickbait videos that reinforce division and groupthink. Finally, I find it funny that the traits being attributed to Gen Z in this video were the same thrust upon the millennials ten years ago. No yes focus on particular years there are not "many different sources" there is Strauss-Howe generation theory the one most cited by demographers, and since this form of demography is not an exact science Strauss-Howe is the only legitimate source to use, 38 year olds are not millennials, and 23 year olds are no Gen Z....lol 23 year olds are also millennials, self Identification means nothing also. If you wanted to simplify it and put it into laymens terms, Gen Z are teenagers in middle school and highschool, and millennials are everyone else outside that category 35 and under, millenniald were born between 1985-2000....thats why they're called millenials because the demographic cohort ends when the turn of the century begins which didn't actually happen until 2001 because there is no year 0 AD therfore anyone who is 18-35 is a Millennial.....38 year olds are, and are most definitely to themselves, and easily recognized by anyone else in our society as Gen X'rs. Beep Beep Imma Dragon not really not when your parents and grandparents are both boomers like mine, there is nothing strange about it demographic cohorts ie generations are traditionally defined by births taking place in a 15-20 year period, the way Gen Z and Alpha are defined are the outliers very short periods of time if you ask me, and its because they're no longer applying the same rules and standards applied to previous generations and keep trying to apply this new logic to and in the process keep trying to redefine Millennials, they keep trying to make it more and more about "culture" instead of just ballparking and estimating actual biological generations, which would of course result in people 10-15 maybe 20 years apart from one another who could realistically have the same parents from the same previous generation(s). Sane logic would tell you 18-35 year olds are millennials and everyone who is 17 and under but isn't literally a baby born in the past 6 months to the past year are Gen Z thats would be a lot more accurate, that or something like 20-35 for millennials and anywhere from 5-20 years old for gen Z its best in my opinion and in keeping with the conventional wisdom of something that was never an exact science or for that matter really scientific at all to stick to 15-20 year timeframes	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	2/232	0.862
Davide Uguccione funny cuz people are constantly saying thats use millennials which is true to an extent but if you listen to these retards who no longer know how to properly define a generation.....well then all these rabid leftist college students are Gen Z not Millennials. Meanwhile in reality using properly, traditionally defined generations they are all Millennials and Gen Z are College freshmen and teenaged children in middle school and highschool. Novusod yes, but I would push the years back by five years. 1940 is the year after the depression ended, and by the time 1940 born people started kindergarten in 1945, World War II ended in 1945. The baby boom ended in 1959, so I see baby boomers as 1940-1959. 1960-1979 had the Vietnam War happening, and then plans to have the space missions begin. 1980 was when laptops and cell phones started being invented, and people began having home computers, and a few used the original internet like telnet and usenet. Then, there was the cold war as well, and also, the web became invented. 1999 were the last people who were old enough to be able to remember snippets of 9/11 as well as to start kindergarten before cell phones and home internet become common in the us in 2005/2006, which makes 2000 start gen z, cause they started kindergarten after that stuff became common. The oldest stopped being babies only four months after 9/11. They were never alive in a world where the world population was below six billion in October 1999 and when wifi was not introduced until like late 1998 or 1999.	Common, Old	Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	3/197	1.523

As a 52 year old X'er and if any Z'ers are reading this, I apologize in advance if I'm stereotyping. For Z'ers, it seems to be the norm to just stay in your room and play video games, watch Netflix, Snapchat, YouTube, etc. When I was around 17-23, few people did that and considered socially awkward or shy if that was their lifestyle. Losers to be politically incorrect. I don't see anybody that age being judged now if you live that way. Getting wasted and getting laid was many people's thing back then, or sowing your wild oats. BeyondCosmic the generalizations are what makes the distinction between the generations. Generations are determined by what's poplar and common among that age group and how major events impacted that group. The major impact for Gen Z is the rapid increase of technology. I just find it weird that my cousin who was born in 2006 is the same generation as I am, I was born in 1998. She never saw a floppy disk, grew up with YouTube, hasn't seen a world without Facebook, vine was part of her childhood and this decade was her 'coming to adolescence', she doesn't remember a world without Lady Gaga, while I literally lived in a world where Paint was the entertainment and there were no such things as influencers. These videos are so dumb . You're comparing PRETEENS and teenagers to people well into or coming into adulthood. Generation Z are kids... we aren't alike because we are in two different periods in our life. However, we both are used to technology, we 'need' our phones, we have lost some hope in society compared to the past, we don't pay attention to politics and we both know and understand trends... but like I said, millennials are ADULTS. Any high schooler is going to be more into trends than people worrying about their job and bills. I feel like our generations aren't actually that different. I was born in February 1999.My childhood and early teens were definitely closer to the 'millennial type': not that much of modern tech around. Just a Famiclone, some old indestructible Nokia and Siemens phones and a 512 MB Celeron PC (this one when I was 8 years old - I used to play so much of Thief: The Dark Project demo and Abuse on that machine). I only gained my PS2 in 2010, and my first smartphone in 2014.However, my last teens and now early 20's are something closer to the 'Gen Z's life style'. Elu Mix if you are talking about wifi, that was introduced only in September 1998. And it wasnt common for people to have internet at home and in elementary schools until the mid 2000s, because a lot of people didnt find dialup worth the money, that they just preferred going to an internet cafe or a public library. Thats what my older brother did before we got internet at home in 2006 of like spring I think. Me and my mom havent used the internet before that cause my school never had internet. Elu Mix those definitions are wrong, though 1994 is in the same generation as 1995-1999. These are the most sensible ranges. Silent generation: Before 1940 (the ones who had to put silence to their activities due to the Great Depression and World War II) Baby boomers: 1940-1959 (the first to begin kindergarten after world war II ended but were the last to be born in a world before declining fertility rates (if in the us, the last to experience segregation between whites and blacks) Gen X: 1960-1979 the last to reach their 20s before the current millennium (this group didnt use internet or cell phones until before college unless born to a high income family) 1980-1999 Gen Y (the cooler scientific term rather than the lame slang term, millennial): the people who were born in the second millennium but stopped being teenagers only in the third millennium; the last to have an early life analog style) Gen Z: 2000 onwards (the first to have never lived in the second millennium)	Lame	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/208	0.481

All I know is I'm 23 years old be 24 this year God's will and every generation is different and have seen things. I didn't come up in the generation where all this technology stuff started and I dont know about the 9/11 when I was in school they had us watch videos of it but how could I remember I was really young when this took place. But I remember old shows and things like flip phones, blackberries, CDs, some dolls I liked lol like the bratz dolls and some cartoon shows like the proud family, Kim possible, even Steven's etc from Disney channel. And All That which was a classic from Nickelodeon. Stuff like this is what I remember. Like I said I dont know what this stuff would fit into. Hannah 1 funny; anyone that is like 17 or older usually thinks I am like 15-18, but like my students below the age of 15 think I am in my late 20s to early 30s, but I guess it makes sense for them to think that way cause until like middle school, I always saw anyone in high school or above as a big person in height, but now they all look so small. I dont know if it is cause of my height or maybe cause of who I went to school with; i still sort of see myself as the same kid I was when little.	Age	Age - General	1/108	0.926

I think Millennials and Gen Zs are alike and have something in common is the technology and social media we have today. The difference from them are Millennials grew up the rise of social media and new latest technology. And they're bringing back some trends and stuff back from 90's and early 2000s. Gen Zs grew up on those new technologies and social media. I'm a Millennial and I remember those booming era of those electronics stuff were rising. That was back in 2008 -2010. Also, I think Gen Zs are following Millennials are doing or having recently of course like social media, iphones, new challenges and new slang words.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/110	0.909
My dad is a Baby-Boomer (from the 1950s to the mid 1960s), my mom is Generation X (from the 1960s to the early 1980s), and I am Generation Z (from the 1990s to the late 2000s). I was born in 2007, and by year i am in Generation Z. However, in my soul i'm a Millennial, because i like listening to older music (mostly from the 1980s to the very early 2000s), and I as well like a lot more old stuff than new, modern stuff. For example, I don't have Instagram, I don't have Facebook, I don't have Tik Tok etc. I really don't like modern rap music. It sort of, I don't know... disgusts me...	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/117	0.855

You can't generalize, especially with generation z - a majority of which is just getting into or out of college or high school. Generation Z was raised in a world of destruction and strangely enough prosperity with ISIS, technology, the Great Recession, the first Black President and hopefully the first female president, more rights for the LGBTQ+, police shooting black people and black people speaking out about it, the me-too era... so many things have happened in the last two and a half decades and we have seen it. People predict our generation as positive thinkers and activists. Philosophers and people aiming for a better world.. People really see this generation going somewhere and I am so happy to be apart of the change that's coming for the world...They also see us as productive too which is pretty cool... :)	Black	Ethnicity - Black	3/141	2.128

I'm generation Z. I wasn't born into the advanced tech age we are living in right now. I grew up with it as it evolved, there's a difference. Older people assume I've never hand written letters to people or done research for homework out of books at a library or little things like that. My family didn't have internet at home until I was 13-14 years old , and my friends didn't have their own cell phones until late middle school/high school. Back then only people with money to spend could access this technology. I was one of the last few young adults to have an actual childhood spent playing outside with friends versus locked up inside playing video games or on my phone. That's why I was able to develop my creative talents outside of the digital world. I'm from 1997. I got to use an old landline phone with the rotating numbers, the older iPhones, the older massive computers, and I've had to learn and relearn how to use technology as improved versions come and I did this on my own. Having technology was a privilege and nowadays, it's so accessible that young kids take this for granted.. especially seeing how older people will struggle to adapt to our changing world. Hopefully people in my Generation Z and generations to come use the advantage they have of living in our current technological world to solve problems that were impossible to address before things like the internet became accessible to just anyone. We are living in a time where communication is instant and access to information is the most affordable it has ever been in world history.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/277	1.083

There are some sources that say generation z goes from 2000 and up, but I think it is indeed 1995 and upwards, because the boom of technology was around the beginning of the century and I for example, a 97 liner, don't have any memories of the 20th century at all. I was too little, and yes I grew up surrounded by phones, internet etc. I had my first phone at 13 (although now they have them at 10), but still compared to millenials (my cousin is a 92 liner and got her first phone at 17/18) there's a huge difference. And I identify in everything they said about generation z. I think that definitely there is a gap between those born in 1996 and those from 1990, that's not so big if you compare to 2000 liners. My brother is from 2001 and we have a lot more in common than my cousins, who are a bit older.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/159	0.629

Jooze Mane yeah, i guess it depends, but gen z were never alive in a world where wifi didnr exist, cause wifi was introduced in late 98. I had wifi in 2006, but never had dialup. Lots of gen z grew up with dialup. Dialup then again wasnt worth the money as internet use became common around 2003-2005 depending on how you define internet use being common .	Common	Social Class - Working class	2/67	2.985
MegaAirplaneIover Wifi was introduced in 98, like the internet was introduced in the 1970s to be fair. With that meaning that the internet wasn't what could be considered mainstream until the mid-late 90s, and that wifi wasn't mainstream until the late 00s, and the introduction of smart phones. Dialup was worth every penny, because that's all you had, and what existed, it was standard, and the internet was undoubtedly the most interesting & fascinating introduction back then.Skipping ISDN which was only marginally better, when ADSL was introduced in the early 00s, it's most common speeds were 128 and 256 kbit/s maximum throughout the world, and it was incredibly expensive compared to dial-up, of course depending on how much you used the internet. But yea no one except BBS operators with multiple lines, were ever blocking their entire phone line 24/7.Remember that dial-up was only charged by the time connected, and for the record the rates in 1997 in my country was the equivalent to 0.1$ per minute. As there weren't really much use except for actual information, the occasional midi tune, or graphics/image back then, a typical connected session would usually last less than 30 mins, and happen pretty uncommonly, since you were quickly taught to limit your use, by the next bill, in case you forgot to, or by screaming family members wanting to use the phone (since most houses only had a single shared phone line back then).	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/242	0.413

Jooze Mane um, technically internet use wasnt common until 2003-2005 at least in the us, especially at home. Many people werent going to spend money for dialup cause they would either be charged by the minute or they would only be able to have a certain amount of hours per day, and if they exceeded those hours, they would be charged extra. If we are counting people of all ages, that means from birth onwards, 50 used the internet only around 2003 at the earliest. In the 1980s, there was this thing called usenet, which is similiar to the web, except that it was only meant for people to look up information, post articles and messages, and read the news. Internet began from 1969 after it evolved from arpanet. There was this thing called telnet, but it was insecure, so no one really used it for public use.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/148	0.676
Jooze Mane broadband began to outnumber the use of dialup in 2004, at least in the states. Broadband including wifi and dsl had unlimited use and time each month provided you would be charged monthly. I never used dialup so dont know what its like having it except that you have to dial a phone every single time you need to access a browser and that you would need to listen to that annoying sound for at least a minute and it would be so loud that you would hear it from any room in your home. Then, you wouldnt be able to use your landline for phone calls without disconnecting the internet connection cause until like 2004-2005, cell phones in the states werent common for many to have, so landlines were their only way of making phone calls. Jooze Mane i live in the us, and most third world countries had common outdoor phone usage begin in 2004 itself. You live in denmark so that explains it. Denmark, netherlands, sweden, norway, and finland had internet appear faster than in countries like the us, uk, canada, ireland, australlia, singapore, and new zealand. Most third world countries had it become common by late 2000s. Only place where it is still uncommon is africa. In the us, internet usage became common around 2003-2005 depending on how we are deciding if it was common .	Common	Social Class - Working class	4/92	4.348

Leah Chalmers i have only spent sixth grade and senior year of high school with kids born in the year 2000 as they were in third grade and then high school freshman at the time. Its a shame they never put sixth grade as part of middle school. I always found it cool during the other ten years when every kid around me at school was a 90s kid. Oldest kid I know was born in 1993 cause he was held back. Cause of that i cant relate to anyone born after 1999. All my friends were born from 1991-1999. I dont think I have any friends born in 1992 though. I relate to people born from 1993-1999 really well though. I have never friended anyone born in the 2000s. I dont count coworkers by the way. I am a senior in uni right now, and the youngest i have met this year was a sophomore born in 1999. I know the freshman are supposed to be born in 2000, but havent met any yet. All 90s kid around me. Nick Kay 2000 because it's the start of the third millennium in the Gregorian calendar, which was based on the birth of Jesus? What if we use another calendar in which the Gregorian year 2000 was actually 3057 and 1997 was 3054? Would you be saying 3057-3061 "can be considered an entirely different generation or culture"? I think the only reason you're saying this is because of the rounded off zeros. In my argument I showed why the start of the 3rd millennium is irrelevant to the societies and culture of people because it's purely man-made and not based on anything determined with logic, science or mathematics. This is probably why sources around the world do not say 2000 is the start of Gen Z but 1997, they know following the Gregorian calendar is non-neutral, hence they decided to go with the cultural pattern of age groups. It's because of the effect it is having on society today. There is a significant population of children who are becoming dependent on technology, which is not beneficial. Because of a growing technological world, you would suppose that introducing technology at such a young age is benefiting these children for the future, however it is doing the exact opposite. Having exposure to the entire world at your fingertips at age 6, and depending on a keyboard is not helping our society. The one thing that millennials and Gen Z seem to do have in common are two things; 1. Their deep sense of entitlement; 2. Their insecurities are hidden by inflated egos. Both generations seem to want progressions to be made in the country, but in order to do that, they need to come to a better understanding towards one another and not be so ignorant to both parties feelings in order to prove the old gens wrong.l	Common, Old	Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	2/77	2.597

MegaAirplanelover in the start they difined gen z those born after 2000 but in the last years they observed that people born 1995-1999 live very different than millenials and they have all common with those born after 2000.....i have made a research and and the most common is 1995-2010 for gen z. I've read a 2019 book which published after many years of research to gen z and millenials and they define as gen z people born 1995 onwards.....also deloitte which is one of the biggest research firms a week ago published their millenial survey and they did this survey in some millenials and gen zers.....they defined gen zers people 1995 and after.....the most researchers say that there are two historical events first 11/9 and the invention o i phone.....in 11/9 all gen zears were not even in midle school yet and 2007 when the i phone was in the market for first time they were all in midle school.....but depends the person for example you feel a millenial so you are a millenial despite you were born in 1997.....but i feel more as gen z and i have nothing in common with millenials depends the contry the person and the way of living.....for example here in greece gen z is 1995-2010 because as country we differ....eg our universities are 5-7 years we are not in the workforce yet we had i phone by 13 i remember....depends the person when you were born 1995-1997 but the most researchers put us in gen z	Common, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	4/253	1.581

Xristos Nc i see your point. However for 9/11, 1995-1999 were 2-6 during it, so it is possible anyone born during those years could remember it or have snippets of this year. A number people may not remember before the age of 5-10. I was born in 1997, and I have snippets of 1999, 2000, and 2001. In most countries, 1995 born people were in first grade when 9/11 happened. 1996 were in kindergarten. 1997-1999 may have been in preschool at that time. When the iphone came out in 2007, 1995 people were in middle school. 1996 may have been in middle school depending on the city they went to as some cities consider sixth grade as middle school. 1997-1999 were in third to fifth grade. I first knew about the iphone only when I was 12. Only when I was 8 did I first see a cell phone and the internet. It depends on the person. Many people born before 1995 could feel gen z too. Most legit sources consider 1995-1999 as millennial. Personally, I relate perfectly to those born from 1991-1999.	Age	Age - General	1/183	0.546

Still got nothing if it, I think is hard to separate both generation cause how fast the tech development happened and that is what most differ one from other, but of course this only can see in developed countries cause the poor ones like Brazil most kids still had the life of the last generation. Me for example, I only saw a computer when I was 6y, only had my phone when I was 10, Nokias and flip phones. Only had my smartphone at 17 (already was working and bought one). Still my social interaction with media is the same as previous generation cause I didn't grow up with it, so I don't rely on it too much. I had my first Facebook account at 13, my friends did it for me and I never used fully, just played games or used to register in another sites. I can use the new tools, but still find myself more easy and comfortable with the old way. :)P.s: I was born in 1996.	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	2/172	1.163

Thing is people born between 1995 and 2000 have a completely different take on life and upbringing then gen x, the typical millennial, and gen z because we were born on the cusp of the technological revolution. Dude, Gen Y ('Millennials') were much more involved in that extreme transition from analogue and real life to the digital realm of technologies, devices, internet, social media, communication, etc. We also participated and created a lot of the digital revolution. Gen Y created Reddit, Facebook, MySpace, Blogs, self-taught HTML to be able to design their MySpace and LiveJournal pages. Also caused a massive revolution that lead to the digital music sales industry, and then music and video streaming (like YouTube) thanks to the pioneers of digital downloading: Napster, LimeWire, Kazaa. We know what it's like to go from corded landlines, to the first smartphones all before we were old enough to drink. A lot of our activity and creations contributed to the world Gen Z virtually and essentially lives in today. We lived completely disconnected in early years, dependent on pagers, pay-phones, REAL maps, passing notes in class, even wrote letters, had pen pals, played lots of popular games you've never heard of, sadly, etc - then were suddenly thrown into this new universe, logging into MySpace in the middle of class in High School. We were not only old enough to remember all of it, but we greatly shaped the technology and took it further than prior generations initially thought of..Just for some context, Steve Jobs was Gen X... yikes.	Old, Transition	Age - Over 65s, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	3/222	1.351

Dark Rose Reaper actually, none except for 2000 and 2001 being the last early 2000s kids is true. 1997 is the last 90s kid if we are not counting babies as kids, cause once you turn 24 months old , you are no longer a baby. Toddler can be used for kids ages 24-59 months though, but we use the term preschooler, cause preschool is for ages two to four depending on the minimum age requirement of the preschool. By the time you turn 2, you walk and talk. And usually, the earliest age to form memories is age two, and the latest is age eight normally. Age five is the normal earliest age for vivid memories. However, a few have memories from before age two, and some cant remember their first decade. The human brain is dynamic, not static. You sound like everyone can remember being three, but no one can remember before age three. I am guessing age three is your earliest memory.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	10/165	6.061

MegaAirplanelover Scientific literature suggests it's not possible to have a memory before the age of 2. Yes a very small minority have one or two memory snippets between age 2-3. I have vivid memories from age 3-5, I have seen many adults born in 1995-1996 comment that they have vivid memories from age 3-5. Dark Rose Reaper funny you say that. I can agree it would be almost impossible to have memories before the age of two, but it is possible for a few. Vivid memories normally dont happen before age five, but even that can be possible. I have a friend born late 98 who remembers an event when he was 1. My mom can remember being two and a half and she is in her 50s. She has vivid memories of when she was in her single digits even today. The earliest memory I remember that I can date was when I was around 25-26 months old . I do however remembering experiencing stuff from before that age , though those snippets are weak. I have a friend born in 97 who cant remember anything before age 6, another born late 98 who cant remember before 2004, two born late 94 who cant remember experiences from the 90s, one born mid 96 who claims he probably cant remember the 90s, one born early 94 who has snippets from 96-2000 and he remembers an event from 96, and one born in mid 91 who cant remember life before 97. Dark Rose Reaper Dark Rose Reaper my 30-year old brother has a few messed up memories from his teen years. Like he thought we had a computer at home in the early 2002, but no we didnt. I checked photographs recently and no space even for the computer. He even thought we had dial up at home since early 2002, but no we didnt. My mom told me she had to go with my dad and brother to a next door neighbor's house to use their internet for his college apps. I never even used the internet before third grade, and I used a computer since I was five when we got one for our old apartment in late 2002. He thought he had a facebook before college until he had to look up in his facebook when he actually opened it. Facebook wasnt even available for high schoolers at that time. MegaAirplanelover Well memories from age 0-2.5 are the least likely to be accurate, according to my research. I posted my age below another video recently. I was born in early 1995, I attended preschool from age 3-5, I played on PS1 when it was still very popular from 1998-2000. I have the same PS1 with me that still works, the first game I played was MK4 in 1998. Some of the first tunes I clearly remember from the late 90s are 'Everybody' & 'Are You That Somebody?' I can go on & on. Honestly I'm more old school than new school. So yeah I still consider adults born from 1997-2001 to be a slightly younger generation compared to adults born from 1992-1996. Teens born from 2002-2006 will soon be grownups like us. At the end of the day, it feels great to have self acceptance.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	4/146	2.74
Dark Rose Reaper dude, i dont mean to burst your bubble, but many sources that consider 1997 as gen z consider 1995 as part of gen z too. Yeah, my snippet memories go on from 1999-early 2002. My vivid memories start from kindergarten onwards. I remember my first time on a plane and that was summer of 99 like 2-3 months after I turned 2. It was them only cause the only other time I went on a plane after that was in June 2002, and I remember myself thinking back to the 1999 experience in a plane when I first entered that plane at age five. Yeah, in 1999, I sat on an aisle seat in the left side of the plane. I remember many other memories in 1999. I relate to many 95ers. 2000 onwards, I cant relate. Many 98 and 99 people are like you 95 and 96 born. I remember listening to two songs at home from a foreign film that came out in late 98, but we could only rent it in 99. Memories from age 2 until 5 are usually not vivid. Yes, and if you said 2.5 onwards, then, it would be possible for me to remember November 1999 onwards. Oh yes, I remember winter 1999 when I wanted to wear this traditional dress my dad was wearing, and only in January 2000, I got to finally wear one of my own for the first time. I didnt know about the date until I saw a photo with the date, but I remember the event and it being an event before preschool even before seeing the photo.	Age	Age - General	2/274	0.73

MegaAirplanelover Also this is important for you to know. Sources indicate that toddlers are 12-36 months old , preschoolers are 3-5 years old , & big kids are 5-10 years old . Research indicates that people’s earliest memories, on average, date back to 3.5 years old , a small minority’s earliest memories can only date back to age 6.Now I still doubt your memories from age 2 are true, but you may have pictures of yourself when you were 2 years old . In 1999 you were a toddler, a semi-baby. In my opinion, I don’t consider 90s semi-babies to be Young Millennials. 90s preschoolers are more qualified to be Young Millennials. For example I can clearly remember technology I used from 1998-1999, I can clearly remember being in preschool from 1998-1999, I’m being honest. Even adults I know born from 1993-1996 have told me they remember technology & music from the late 90s. With that being said, I still think some Millennials & some Early Generation Z adults are great people to know.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	7/171	4.094
Dark Rose Reaper dude, just cause you cant remember before age doesnt mean others cant. You act like everyone can remember from age onwards, but not before. Dude, most of my memories at age two were not from photographs. There are many people who cant remember before age 7-10 as well. Its totally allowed. The human brain is dynamic like that. Just accept that some people can remember at an age before you could while others cant remember almost their first decade of life. Actually, i dont have any pictures of my experiences at two. Most of the events from pictures of me, I cant remember the experience. I am not saying my memories at age two to four are 100 true, but not likely they are false. Same for you. Your memories at ages three to four could be false as well.	Age	Age - General	6/143	4.196
Dark Rose Reaper alright, it goes like this. You are newborn until 3-6 months of age . Then you become an infant until you learn to walk on two legs, which would be around 15-18 months of age . Once you hit 24 months old , you are no longer a baby. 24 months-59 months of age can be considered as either preschooler or toddler. There are many two year olds who go to preschool. I will admit I first went to preschool when I was four but that was cause the preschool I went to didnt accept anyone under four. Vivid memories normally dont begin until age five. We were both toddlers in the 90s. There is no such thing as a semi-baby. Once you walk and talk properly, you are not a baby anymore. At age 2, you can walk and talk properly, but not sophisticatedly until age five. Also, earliest memories range from age two to eight, with five being the average age . Dark Rose Reaper i dont really know anyone who has vivid memories before age five though. Whoever I know that remembers memories from ages three and four remembers being two. Anyone I know that cant remember being two doesnt remember before five, except for one person. I know like three people who cant remember before age six. One of them has only a single memory at age six and after that he cant remember anything before he was eight. It depends on the person. Not everyone is the same.	Age	Age - General	3/89	3.371

Here's some things you forgot;(Not to say all millennials are like this but, let's be honest the majority ARE) Gen Z aren't triggered assshots.When we hear something that doesn't align with what we deem is right or wrong, we don't fucking bitch about it and whine like we've got a pole shoved way up our asses. A civilized debate, is what most of us tend to engage in.Most GenZ's are wayyy more open-minded.Referring to the last one, we love to hear difference of opinion and be challenged on ours. We may be more stable and grounded with what we believe in but, we definitely aren't as insufferable as millennials. Unlike the lot of them, we actually read up on FACTS rather than biased articles which literally have no factual basis. GenZ aren't as entitled.We don't think that we deserve respect, we believe that WE earn it. We believe hard work, determination and having a positive outlook towards things will get us better results regardless of the obstacles we will most likely face. Millennials would rather live in their parents basements and still have the audacity to demand free health care, housing, graduate education, and expect everyone else to suffer for it because they can't get up their lazy asses and get an actual job. I mean the fact that they want to fucking turn America into some communist or socialist shithole blows my mind. Don't like capitalism? It's all very simple. Most millenials learnt to some degree to have some modesty in life. They are closer to the baby boomers and gen Ys and their romantic eighties puberty. They've seen what the system did to their parents and want nothing to do with it, not even fight it like the baby boomers. Just be independent and do their own thing. That's their core value. Gen Zs on the other hand, never learnt those things, they had everything since they were kids. Apart from being spoilt rotten and having WEALTH as their one and only value, they were absolutely not inspired by past generations, instead either fetishising or disrespecting and mocking time periods and people, because "they're not relevant lmao". No romanticism in this generation, not a fucking drop of it. You're only as good as your lambo is shiny. They are an extremely CYNICAL, nihilistic, soulless bunch, and it's really sad and scary. Which says a whole lot, if you think that throughout time, older generations thought of newer as dirty hippies. It's all reversed now and that's saying a lot about how fucked up things are. Why are so many people in the comments bashing gen z? We aren't a bad generation. As a 14 year old student in Singapore, I can say that technology has helped me so much. And I mean that in a good way. During lessons Teachers will occasionally ask us to take out our phones and send us the questions through an app. All we have to do is answer in just a single tap without wasting any resources. Yes, we save paper. Why, because baby boombers and millennials completely ruined our planet and we have to try and save it. You put us in danger and we have to clean up after you and come up with new innovative ideas to try and save the earth. Generation Z is not a bad generation. If not then the most understanding one. I think the biggest difference between Millennial and Gen Z is that Millennials like to blame other people for their problems (the government for their student debt, their parents for participation trophies, white straight males for literally everything) whereas Gen Z realizes that we have to take responsibility for our own actions. We've learned from Millennials that since college is super expensive, maybe it's not worth attending. We've learned that participation trophies don't mean anything so we work harder individually to earn our own acclaim. We realize that one race or gender isn't the source of all problems, so we're not as drawn into the Democrat party (not saying all Democrats do that, but a lot of them do and Gen Z is a bit more conservative, especially financially, than Millennials. I think many Gen Zers will end up being Libertarian because we are still very socially open-minded and liberal)	Gender, Race	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/150	1.333

An interesting theory about gen Z is that because the majority of our childhood took place in a post-9/11 terrorist attack world, with the issue of national security always present, and also because we've grown up seeing lots of gun violence on TV, we are significantly less trusting of others. This can explain why we might want to be more independent than millennials, and want to do things for ourselves. So you have this generation, a generation of easily offended crybaby snowflakes known as Millennials who kind of made it to college who had been told that they're amazing and they're perfect every way that they were,when in reality none of them actually are. They went to college, accumulated thousands in student loans and then there was a reality check in the real world, and we have seen all kinds of problems with Millennials in the real world. They bitch, whine, and cry about getting paid low wages and not being able to get a job with their gender studies degree, after that they blame the system and vote Democrat in an attempt to create an impossible utopia. Where as Generation Z has been told the most horrendous things that you could possibly imagine due to the internet, a uncensored and unfiltered flow of information. Generation Z was the first generation to be born into the internet age , socially our parents or guardians were not able to protect us from the harsh reality of getting offended as so many parents of Millenials did. And as a result we have the outrage culture perpetuated by Millennial snowflakes, while Generation Z learned to be self reliant, and resilient. And this has many positive results on our generation, while Millennials tend to be optimists, Generation Z tends to be realist, Millennials want to be discovered while Generation Z want to work hard for success, In the realm of maturity Millennials tend to have a prolonged adolescence while Generation Z is "up-ageing". I'm just barely Gen Z, born in 1993, at least that's what I like to think. I'm one of those awkward transitional generations whereas Millennials are, by my definition, a generation which were coming of age at the turn of the millennia, hence their name, and Generation Z are the following generation. Millennials coming of age at the turn of the millennia would primarily mean kids who were starting-finishing, or in other words in the process of puberty and adolescence at the year 2000, so Millennials would be people born between, say, the year 1980-1992.Wikipedia also loosely defines Millennials as the 9/11 generation, while defining Gen Z as the 2008 economic crash generation. Having little to no recollection about 9/11, meanwhile remembering AND EXPERIENCING economic downfall from my parents' situation clearly shows in which category I belong. Also from wikipedia: Most of Generation Z have used the Internet since a young age and are comfortable with technology and social media. Completely true in my case, though it's NOT true for every single person born in my year or the following nor prior years.Sorry for my little off script explanation between Gen Z and Millennials, I really don't like nor want to be put in the same generation as Millennials since my alignments are much closer to Gen Z. I see a lot of people saying how Gen Z are the most depressed. I'd like to add on to that saying we're the generation that understands each other the most, the closest generation. We get each other. We share our problems through memes. Like I heard someone from the Try Guys say on a YouTubers React video, with certain meme trends like Sprite Cranberry or the Pikachu meme, we all have the same inside joke. I've made at least 3 friends irl just over VINES. We bonded over some stupid 4 second videos that were just so hilarious to us. We all understand each other and we think alike, for the most part. We're that generation after millennials that are going to have fix everything everyone else fucked up, and we all know that. We make jokes out of it for christ's sake! But this really is the most inclusive and empathetic generation. Most of us aren't racist , most of us aren't misogynistic, most of us aren't homophobic/transphobic. Because we've been so conditioned by making jokes over so many things that we're like "cool man, you do you". We stick by these oppressed people in our generation because we've bonded, consciously or not, over the internet, over social media, over MEMES. So yeah; most of us are depressed and numb from all the shit going on in the world, taking note day after day of all the stuff we need to clean up when we're adults. But we understand each other, we get each other, because really, we're all stuck in the same hole that we're eventually going to have to crawl out of.	Racist	Ethnicity - General	1/275	0.364

Okay, that is nonsense.Millennials are not more tolerant. They are the leftist generation, and they're only "tolerant" of identical monolithic people. Millennials have, as a generation, gone to college for useless degrees and are now realizing that their socialist Utopia will not work. They eat up mainstream media and ask for seconds. They are workers, not entrepreneurs.Generation Z, on the other hand, is more moderate in its political alignment than its predecessor. A study of 50,000 Gen Z youth found them to be more than 30 more conservative than Millennials. Even the more liberal leaning ones tend to have disdain for Millennial PC culture. Gen Z is very entrepreneurial. More Gen Z earn income through unconventional routes than working standard jobs. We've found it to be more profitable, more enjoyable, and more intellectually stimulating. For instance, I have one online friend who just bought herself a car using money she made by purchasing worn clothes cheap and fixing them up to resell online. Not some trash car either. She earns over $1000 weekly, and she works alone, just started a few months ago. I myself once worked at a grocery store... Idiot management. I found I made easily triple the money doing other things I really enjoy. I play the saxophone: I did jazz gigs. I am an athlete and my mother is a certified track official. I would help work at meets and get paid far more for doing something I enjoyed doing. Not that this is my career goal. I actually do intend to go to college, but only because I am seeking a Bachelor's in Political Science and a Master's in Law. I think our government is screwed up. I'd like to help fix that, before Millennials crush us with taxes to pay for their mistakes. Generation Z finds its information overwhelmingly from independent sources, which provide more objective reports and analysis. Gen Z is pro-equality, accepts homosexuality, etc. However, because Gen Z actually knows more about money than Millennials did at our age , and we actually WORK more than they did, we are more inclined to resist hiking taxes and relying on government to manage our income. Gen Z is younger than Millennials are, but Gen Z is objectively speaking more conscious of the real world and more prepared for their future. Millennials might be the first generation since the Depression to suffer a lower standard of living than their parents. Well, that's what happens when you go $80k into debt for a useless degree and vote for people that bash capitalism. To learn from one's own mistake is intelligence. To learn from the mistakes of others is brilliance.	Age	Age - General	1/445	0.225

Dont forget the XENNIAL.. the unique.. MICRO GENERATION. We were born at the end of GENERATION X and just before the Millenials.. Between 1977 and 1983.This generation (my own) are not exactly Gen X and not exactly Millennial/Gen Y. And heres why:OUR CHILDHOODS were ANALOGUE. We grew up during the last stages of Analogue tech. We played nintendo, we drank out of the garden hose, we did not have strict "no-running" on the playground rule, no padding to oritect against falls and we DID NOT WIN PARTICIPATION TROPHIES. When we lost a ball game, we did not cry like babies, we toughened up and succeeded NEXT YEAR!! WE started our young adult-hood in the DIGITAL AGE . BUT.. it still took work.. we had to DIAL UP WITH AOL, we had long loading times, we did not have social media and log every moment if our lives online.. we did download musuc but through Napster PEER-TO PEER Programs.. and only the cool kids who had to RESEARCH AND LEARN on our iwn to pirate music.. things were NOT HANDED TO US. WE DID ALL THE HARD WORK while the newest generations can just get instant gratification by installing an app and pushing a button.. all the hard work was LEFT TO MY GENERATION. The first generation of HACKERS, FIRST GENERATION to surf the unknown WEB, DIGITAL WORLD. .*81 and I am most definitely NOT a self-entitled, SPOILED millenial. Millenial should start at 89-91. Because its these kids that WERE BORN INTO A DIGITAL AGE .. they never experience analogue or were too young to even be affected by it. By the time theyre adults they are walking into an already established SOCIAL MEDIA/DIGITAL WORLD.	Age	Age - General	2/285	0.702
You're wrong. People born in 1981 are the first millennials. I too was born in 1981 and there is NOTHING "Gen X" about me. We used computer technology in our homes in the 80s, we had gaming consoles, we are the first generation to grow up with more technology and cable TV and the internet. I'm sorry but I was using AOL chat at age 13 in 1995. I used my first computer in 2nd grade in 1989. All my friends in high school communicated through computers, not telephones. I was not analog. You're just adding a bunch of political BS, but you're a millennial.	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	2/105	1.905

I agree. I was born in 1983 and I don't consider myself a millenial at all. My grandpa had a computer in the 80's, bc he worked for IBM, but it was a black screen with green writing that you couldn't do anything on. I didn't use AIM until I was like 15, and there were only a few other people in my town who also used it. We were just learning about *69- there wasn't even caller ID, let alone cell phones, unless you were paying 5 dollars a minute. I never had any gaming systems bc they were expensive. I still had to track my friends down on foot. Or go to the library if I wanted to look something up. Or go to Blockbuster to rent a movie. Hell, I'm still using my TV from 1991- bc I grew up without HD and still don't give a shit about it. I've had this phone for 3 years and still can't figure it out, so idk why I get grouped in with spoiled, prissy millenials either.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/178	0.562
Phoebe FP A lot of it is based in where you're from. I grew up in a conservative small town and the mindset in the 80s was different than it was in, say, New York. Those born in '81 from New York or San Fran probably do have more in common with Millennials, but out here in fly over country things are totally different. Mallory Knox Mallory KnoxMallory Knox EXACTLY.. by the way.. nice name NBK fan.When MS computers with windows 95* first became available to the public.. only RICH kids got those, they also had the lates TVs and new tech..I grew up ghetto in a poor neighborhood. Very little money, so even though AOL & PC's with Win95 was finally available to the public, not EVERY FAMILY had that JUST BECAUSE WELL..THE TECH WAS AVAILABLE.. so i also think that our 'station/class' has a major effect on the personality despite the GENERATION. While my uppity white friends had the brand new SEGA SATURN (which was the 1st to use disc games) I was still at home playing on my SuperNES and Carmen Sandiego on an Apple-Mac using DOS. There is a split between GENERATIONS and it also heavily depends on if the family is middle/upper class or straight up POOR. Us poorer kids were still stuck using oldertech. Let me state this again.. JUST BECAUSE it was "available" does not mean we had it in our homes.. this goes for the poor community. we could not afford the bew gadgets.* walkman instead of CD Player* NES instead of SEGA SATURN* Basic 13 ch with bunny ears not Cable/satelite TV* DOS instead of Windows95 (And if lucky enough to have Win95= NO internet or FREE NET-ZERO trials)* Pager& payphone instead of Mobile phone.... get the idea?Still regardless of class, sonething were true ACROSS the board for all...99 did not have soft padding under the swings etc. It was dirt, there was no rule that you cant run or play tag..Theres was no "no child left behind bullshit" so if you couldnt keep up.. thats on YOU. There were no participation trophies yet. We were allowed to lose a ball game and cry.. but we kearned how to be a good sport, not a sore loser...When the streetlights came on.. it was time to go home!!Again, XENNIALS GREW UP in an ANALOGUE WORLD, and became ADULTS in the DIGITAL WORLD. WE were the first YOUNG ADULTS to hit the web, to hack, to build sites, pirate etc.! And i am damn proud. So if you are born between 77& 83.. and never felt you fit in with millenials... well thats because you are not one! You areca XENNIAL, you can run a search and find all the info online. We are the micro generation that got to experience the transition from analogue to digital.. pat yourself on the back.. we are awesome! Well said, well said (born in 1982)!My mindset towards technology is still the same, although sooner or later one has to upgrade:- used a dial-up connection until DSL became available to my place in 2009... kinda slow, but still seemed great to me to actually have one!- don't really feel the urge to change devices too often. From 2000 to now I've had just 2 computers and 3 mobiles: the third one was used from 2005 to February 2018. Unless they break or not running anymore, I never go and replace them.- I still use my VCR and stereo set, and sincerely modern equipment are nothing compared to them. Otherwise I can't explain why the same EQ settings sound so bad on recent devices, while DVD movies aren't the same (comparing those I own on both formats).- Mp3. This is really controversial to me, but didn't get to the core of the issue till 2010, when I had to replace my broken portable CD player with an Mp3 player.Until then Mp3 was just the format I used for stocking music in my computer: when outside I had to bring CDs with me. The new player resolved many things, of course (much less space taken inside bags, no need to carry monstrous weights, flexibility, etc.), but destroyed for eternity a sacred thing: the first-ever listen of a record. Every time I go to my music shop and get a new album, I just can't listen to it immediately as I used to do in the past: have to wait to go back home and use my computer, with all of this routine often badly affecting the overall appreciation. I think I'll have to buy a new CD player and use it just on such an occasion!)What else to say, I try so hard to resist to the "robofication" of humans, but it's impossible to stop it! Spondoolie I don’t know which world you thought you lived in, but the actual reason why today people are such ‘pussies’ over what you think chivalry and racism is, is because it was the normal thing in your time. It was acceptable to be racist, because mostly everyone was, and people wouldn’t blame each other because they wanted to be included. And the whole chivalry thing you’re talking about is kind of just bullshit. At the times where holding doors for women was ‘romantic’ and ‘being a gentleman’ it was also widely acknowledged that women were to thank you for holding doors. They felt obliged to. A lot of people of all minorities were opressed during that time, and the idea of the perfect world in your mind is just not being called out for the shit you say and do.	Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - General	2/141	1.418

Literally, all of you are dumb . Spondoolie hit it right on the head of the nail. Some of this might not apply to specific millenials, but because you're in the generation, you're included in the general idea. And then general idea is exactly what he said. You're a participation generation. Here for a fun time not a long time. Millenials have nothing better to do because they can't afford real estate, so they just go full liberal and stopping ' hate' speeches while at the same time they preach rights of speech. If this doesn't apply to you, you shouldn't care. But you can't change a fact that the that's the general status quo. Most of republicans are religious. I'm not, it doesn't apply to me, but I'm just going to have to deal with it.Millenials are so weak. So so weak. They're sensitive to smallest and dumbest issues. Women's rights? You already have them, stop pulling the dumbest race cards at the dumbest times. Lmao. 2 years ago a Berkeley College, a bunch of dumb ass colored kids formed a protest to stop white people, and Asians, from entering the school. They protested racism , by being racist . I guess the Asian kids were too smart and realize how bullshit this campaign really was. Gen Z's protected due to so much dark humor online. We have financial stability from boomer parents, early access to technology and knowledge inaccessible to Mills. Only downfall is we're all pretty unhealthy, low attention span and we need glasses. Maxzzz no, it's way more common even in the adult Gen Z members. I have heard that a lot, that people say "it's just because they're the younger generation", but it's also true of Millennials, just moreso of Gen Z. Depression, like the mental illness, not just the "I'm depressed lol" thing that you're talking about, is WAY more common now. And also, just because they're teenagers doesn't mean that you can deny that they have real issues. That's what makes depression worse for so many people, being told that "they don't have it." "You're not depressed, you're just a little down." "You're just sad." Like, actual psychiatrists are being interviewed and it's being reported that yes, more cases of depression are being diagnosed in Gen Z than any other generation. Young people are obedient to the system ask no questions and just want to do whatever to keep themselves surviving based upon systematic standards and they don't question the system much. I hate my generation, everyone pretends to be depressed or have a disease just cuz they want attention. Idk why but they feel as if that makes them special, they think they had it rough all their life after 1 little break up. Now that I think about it, most of the generalization is true but it only really applies to girls cuz only they are the ones that be on their phone 24/7 while most boys like to interact with each other while smoking a blunt and still play sports. Girls started having guys mentality where they think being a player/hoe makes them a bad ass and to them it doesn't matter if someone is the most evil person/biggest thot ever cuz 'as long as they making money' everything is ok. You should do a follow up on the transition generation between y and z. I was born 93 and we had elementary school in the 90s before cellphones or laptops. We're taught how to use a floppy disk then one year later introduced to everyone having cell phones (pre sidekick days), learning how to use usb drives, and virtual instead of face to face hangouts. We watched the original viral flash animations (peanut butter jelly time banana/end of ze world) before YouTube existed. People two years younger don't know they even exist. It's a middle zone, like millennial.Z. We appreciate the new tech as part of childhood but also remember the value of the way our relationships were before technology. From what I've experienced as a Gen Z, that's not true at all. Almost everytime someone in my school brings up politics, everyone agrees that they're more left-winged. Almost everyone I've run into is understanding of sensitive topics like mental illness, sexuality, bullying, addiction, ect. I've only run into a few people with a "everyone here is such a snowflake " mentality. A fair amount of kids in my school are LGBT or allies, and it's easy to find people who are super supportive if you look in the right places. I also, however, think that generation labeling is a bit bullshit as everyone is their own person. I have one friend who is super left-leaning with equality, but issues like weed and immigration she's right. mimimomomama mi nah bro not true I'm gen Z currently 19 yo and in 2012 I was 12/13 lol people that age definitely did not impose those stupid safe space PC ideologies. And before you say it yes I do understand that gen z starts at about 1995 and people born in that year during 2012 were 19 but I disregard them as many of their peers and fellow college goers that were older were millennials with those ideas in which part indoctrinated the gen z coming up in those universities and tumblr pages. Somewhere along the way the younger side of the gen z age groups have seen the outcome of this and realized (for the most part as there are always outliers) how ridiculous and damaging to society that way of thinking/living is. The majority of people I grew up with and the ages younger than me seem to be on the same page when it comes to ridiculing those retarded ideologies. So yes gen z technically was a part of the beginning of the safe space culture to an extent but the millennials were the true orchestraters so in my opinion those gen z PC followers are lumped in with the millennials when it comes to ideology. I am hopeful for the future as a lot of people my age and younger that I know and observe online are nowhere near as sensitive as the group previously stated and yes I realize that is anecdotal but it's the only information I have without actually surveying the populous lol	Age	Age - General	3/261	1.149

Being millennial is waay cooler than you think! In our lifetime we experienced the good old vibes of the 90s and early 2000s like animes, real MTV, WWE Attitude Era, Prequel Trilogy, Jurassic Park, Toy Story, etc, while we saw the advent of cellphones, smartphones, Facebook, and Youtube.We are able to enjoy and appreciate the good old vibes of the Gen X (and we call it nostalgia) and the things that Generation Z enjoys now like Xbox, Social Medias, etc, we're already playing it when they're all still in diapers.So it is clear that the Millennials is the best generation ever.The only down side here is that many people have a wrong notion that the pesky Generation Z is us! :(Old	Age - Over 65s	2/124	1.613

I'm 34 born in 1984 and I hate the label millennial. I can remember life with no tech at all besides a wired telephone in the house. I remember the quality of life being MUCH better without this stuff!! Just old enough playing outside was the entertainment not a iPad at 4 years old . I actually had a childhood. Fishing with my dad instead of a iPhone fishing game. Of course I'm the oldest possible ' Millennial' label in years so perhaps I'm not really one at all. When I was 16 we had just gotten a basic cell phone and it didn't have signal most the time. Girls had to to be contacted at home on parents land lane or pass hand written notes. I saw just enough of what the ' old ' life was to know it was more fulfilling and real. Today why do anything when you can just play on your phone! It's destroying our society. I like tech don't get me wrong, but I use it to educate myself and enhance my knowledge. It's access to information you otherwise didn't have before without digging in a library for hours. My dad was a Marine Vietnam vet and my granddad a WW2 vet so perhaps I'm more of a baby boomer than a millennial despite being born 1984. I'm a 90s kid and life was playing outside in the country and experiencing real things, not living in virtual reality. Gen z is optimistic about future??? Sure...because they all think communism is going to make everything great one day. Good luck with that!	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/266	0.752
It seems like a lot of these differences might not be the result of being in a different generation as much as simply being at a different age , and thus at a different stage of their lifetime. Gen z is not optimistic. We are one of the most pessimistic generations out there (most of us anyways) but we still make things work out. Like so many of understand that the planet and the economy has been permitly screwed and there's little we can do about it. Yet we are one of the strongest and perhaps most desensitized generations of them all. In the United States we have witnessed several school shooting in our day and the idea of death doesn't really scare a good part of us. And we are constantly coming to terms that our world could go to war or get nuked or completely lose control of order because greedy baby boomers and their refusal to make things right. We have the internet but with that comes cons, and no I'm not taking about just phone addiction or online bullying or stupidity like that. I'm taking about how easy it is to just look up real horrible stuff. Also the fact that school is the hardest it's ever been. Prior to contradict you can't just Google most of our homework. Teachers know how to make things Google proof and none of our parents can help us. We feel as if there is little reward in actuality trying so we just skip the work and do nothing because there is almost no point anymore. This might be a long comment...I'm 12, and I feel like people give a basis on a person they meet, due to that person's age . What I'm saying is that people regard you with stereotypes of stupidity and idiotic behavior, even just meeting you for the first time. Sure, there are tons of 18 year old idiots out there, but you can't really put a label on how a group of people act. I bet in the beginning of reading this, when you saw me listing myself off as a 12 year old , you would've probably thought what I was going to say was about Minecraft, Roblox, Fortnite or something weird like that. I can say that many kids my age undoubtedly fit into the stereotype of young people that society chose, but the big thing that I'm saying is that there are smart and dumb people in each and every generation. Now that I think about it, why do we even think that young people are dumb ? Aren't young people (such as millennials) more exposed and experienced to the future that's being created? Aren't they smarter because new information has been created? Is it just old people that hate millennials, because millennials don't act like their generation? The world may never know.(I probably seem triggered because of my long response, but I just was feeling weird today.) However the only difference is I am more tolerant and somewhat pessimistic to life than the Gen Z's. I suffer with mental health issues and generally don't have a very good outlook on the future, my future and finances. Young people don't have the same life experience as adults. Young people will always seem like the most optimistic and full of potential. If they didn't appear that way, then we'd be fucked. If your head gets scrambled at the idea of a kid watching a movie and talking to friends at the same time, than maybe you're just eager to pat them on the back. keep in mind these are broad generalizations and anecdotal. Persons of all ages choose to use or leave the tools afforded to them. One thing I have noticed growing up and today is that 90 or more of the population are eagerly and overtly scientifically ignorant. While Z may use more of the modern tech they can't build, maintain, nor develop technologies as they have grown up in an entertainment driven society that devalues intellect while it promotes religious and capitalistic ideals. Sagan wrote: 'I have a foreboding of an America in my children's or grandchildren's time – when the United States is a service and information economy; when nearly all the manufacturing industries have slipped away to other countries; when awesome technological powers are in the hands of a very few, and no one representing the public interest can even grasp the issues; when the people have lost the ability to set their own agendas or knowledgeably question those in authority; when, clutching our crystals and nervously consulting our horoscopes, our critical faculties in decline, unable to distinguish between what feels good and what's true, we slide, almost without noticing, back into superstition and darkness... The dumbing down of American is most evident in the slow decay of substantive content in the enormously influential media, the 30 second sound bites (now down to 10 seconds or less), lowest common denominator programming, credulous presentations on pseudoscience and superstition, but especially a kind of celebration of ignorance' Carl Sagan, The Demon-Haunted World: Science as a Candle in the Dark	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/259	0.386

I definitely think age affects intelligence but not in a way to make you smarter or dumber. Just a different kind of intelligence. Think about it, kids aren't afraid to put themselves out there and are much more open to new ideas then adults. And it's because of the life experiences that most adults go through. So for me I don't really connect with many kids, I speak about topics that a kid my age really shouldn't know/care a lot about. andie We honestly seem to be the most depressed generation. I know the comment will get kinda long and numbers can be boring but the ones I quote do unterline my point: A study about the lifetime prevalence of depression in 2003 has shown that major depression disorders seem to set on much earlier in younger generations. The first time a statistically significant number of people are diagnosed with MDD usualy seems to be the age of 13, but how early how many people struggle with it is vastly different. For example 25 of the youngest generation in the statistic, the 18-29 year olds, have experienced at least one Major Depressive Episode in their lifetime. That's even a bit more than the 30-44 year olds, eventhough they have spend 15 years more alive. The most drastic difference is with the generation over 60 years. Only about 10 of them have had at least one MDE in their entire life.Eventhough a different generation is young now I doubt that the clear trend in that statistic has changed that much and that we are that much different.Something is wrong, and it seems to be linked to how drasticy our lifes today differ from the way humans developed basicly for the last 200.000 years. The world changes more quickly than every before and we just didn't have the time to learn how to deal with it.I think that our generation is probably the most loving and accepting and that is a good thing, but it's probably because so many people know from own experience or from people around them what it's like to struggle with mental health. Liberals are definitely not the ones pushing pollution into our air, soil and water, either, so maybe educate yourself a little so conversation goes smoothly. And get involved with causes that you're passionate about, like reducing pollution. Being clean, healthy and intelligent has nothing to do with Hollywood pushing an agenda. Love being in gen Z! So many of my classmates are just like this! Many of us have strange ways of doing things which would likely be Why last generations won't like us, but we have big ambitions, and usually take steps to fulfilling those ambitions, from an early age . I'm currently in 7th grade, and we have this website called naviance which helps you plan out your future, from college, to which classes you'll take, all the way up to your career path. And many students including myself do actually use this website without having to be told to, we care a lot about our future, and have seen the mistakes millennials have made along with all the other past generations. I was born in 99 and I literally grew up trolling on the Internet, watching Youtube videos and playing online videogames with my neighbors who were born in 98 and 2003. My brother was born in 89 and his childhood was completely different from mine. The Internet didn't play any part at all in his childhood. He grew up using floppy disks, I grew up using CDs. I think the thing we had the most in common was console videogames, but even then he had a sega saturn while I had a ps2. His first Pokemon game was Red while mine was Platinum. So I can't agree with your intervals, they're way too big for the rate at which technology develops. I definitely relate much more to Gen Z. The millennials we're the first to grow up with cellphones, computers, decent gaming consoles, and so on. I am 30 and I grew up on online browser based games LONG before I was 18 years old . The millennials arent perfect but most anti- millennials are either part of the angry lost generation X who fail to grow up, or people who spread fake Information to quickly get a few views. Sadly most, if not all information in this video comes from a twisted point of view.In truth Z is having a very hard time in terms of reaching the bar which was set by the millennials in terms of education (scores), social skills, and common sense. It is impossible to ignore, impossible to hide.Then again... All of that is different on a country per country basis. It might as well be that the U.S. has a completely different type of millennial than other nations on the planet.	Common, Old	Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	2/159	1.258

Remy Muah The Millennials were the first to grow up with the internet and modern gaming consoles. Yet, back then people seemed to realize the difference between meaningless trash websites and decent websites a bit more. Though, I am not dissing gen Z. Both generations are suffering under severe generalization where people just take the worst individuals (which are a severe minority) from any generation to simply stir up some controversy. HAHAHA! Your profile picture just exudes intelligence. Let me tell you something, Millennial. The bar you set is at ground level. We already walked over it. You are the generation that votes hard in favor of the left. You love socialists and social justice warriors, you believe in open borders and banning free speech. You believe that anyone who disagrees with a rigid indoctrination of self-hate is a bigot. The truth is, your generation is a train wreck. You might be fine as an individual, I can't speak to that. But as a generation, you are the ones who stormed college campuses to get high rates of "education." It's a despicable bastardization of the word. Propaganda is more suitable. You are the generation of student loan debts, fiscal irresponsibility, and identity politics. You are the generation of polyamorous screaming anarchists that hate police, hate the military, hate white men, and hate the fact that Gen Z is more entrepreneurial, more politically informed (doing real research instead of just watching CNN and neglecting to fact-check anything), more aware of how to actually succeed in life (hard work and intelligence over a piece of paper for passing Gender Studies). The only good news is that since your generation drove off the abyss, ours will have an easier time taking control of the ship and maybe salvaging the West.	Gender	Gender - General	1/226	0.442
Oh, I almost forgot common sense. If Millennials set the bar with common sense then God help us all. Millennials think that raising the minimum wage by $10 will increase employment, open borders is a great national policy, men can use the women's restroom, $80k debt for a Gender Studies degree is a good idea because you can demand taxpayers to foot the bill, all men accused of rape should be convicted without evidence or due process, socialism works, and anyone who believes in reaping the fruits of your own labor is a hateful bigot. I still genuinely don't even know whether I'm Gen Z or Millennial, because my birthdate falls right on the middle line. And this video shed light on a lot of unknown facts, but it still didn't seem to compare on a fair basis for a lot of things. For starters: Gen Z was very clearly the focal point. This video was more so statistical facts about Gen Z generation, and sometimes comparing it to a few statistics about Millennials. The reasoning behind a lot of Gen Z's statistics was detailed and sound, whereas explanation behind why Millennials thought and acted the way they did was extremely sparse. Another is quite simply age difference. Comparing a generation who are currently children to mid-teens and their worldview to young adults to 30-year-olds is a strange comparison when not put into perspective. It would have been better to apply the comparison statistics of Millennials from when they were the same age that the majority of Gen Z are now, as they are collecting this data from. Talking about the differing social habits between two generations needs to include the social habitats i.e.: high school, or university, or even the workplace. I think what's especially interesting that wasn't mentioned, is the polarising changes in attitude between the generations that clearly reflect where the desire for innovation and change grows and shifts with each implementation of previous desires for change. Attitudes that the previously newest generation craved yielded unforeseen results of circumstances that the now even newer generation has their own desire to reform and improve on. Workspace relations for example. Open offices were seen as the innovative, cooperative and a more creatively driven work environment when Millennials were entering the workforce, as they were a stark contrast to the soul-crushing cubicle spaces that Boomers experienced. Whilst they did come with benefits of being a more pleasant environment and easier to communicate, it did take away a modicum of privacy as well as increasing the rate of extra stimuli which could be distracting and hinder productivity. Innovation is about improving on what we already have. Learning from changes and mistakes and adjusting to make things better. Many Millennials do prefer the shift back from such open office spaces after experiencing their drawbacks. But that doesn't mean reverting back to the old style, but instead compromising. With trial and error, each generation of the workforce will improve our view of the ideal work environment. And whatever changes Gen Z favour, I'm sure the generation that comes after them will have their own say after witnessing the experience of such reforms, their benefits and drawbacks. z z it's not discrimination. It's a different means to a similar goal. The quickest examples I can give regard racism. We're racist for supporting a strong border. But we want it for reasons like: we can barely take care of our own impoverished populations. One illegal immigrant in one year costs as much as it would cost to provide electricity to a Native American reservation. But they live in squalor. We do NOT take care of them. It is horrible! And our country has one of the highest rates of homeless youth in spite of our first world standing. We believe we need better border security for economic reasons so that we can care for the people in our country who need help. I understand people seek refuge here, but there's a process. Maybe we can discuss that the process be amended so it works more efficiently/quickly. But we can't just let everyone in; how are we gonna take care of more people, when we can't even provide for our own poor? Like we matter too.	Immigrant, Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - General, Nationality - General	3/177	1.695
Alyssa Villa I am not talking about the border only I am talking about racism and sexism and all the other hate related things you republicans love. Why do you hate BLM for protesting against unarmed young black people who are getting shot by police? Why do you hate feminist and women who speak out against rape? Why do you love guns even after what it does to our people? Why don't you health insurance? A lot of people die because they can't get health care. Why do you try to force your religion on others?	Black, Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/96	3.125

z z I don't disagree that there are crooked cops, there's good and bad ones. BLM has a cause no doubt, but there are people within the group who abuse the fight causing unwarranted chaos, catching shit on fire and whatnot. I do not hate feminists, I hate when people fight for gender superiority and automatically label all men trash or fight against things like Miss America competitions or Christmas songs when there are real issues like rape. I don't like that they use rape as an excuse to push a political agenda. Believe Ford when evidence was scanty, but dont speak about Ellisons wife, call her a liar with all the evidence in the world. That doesn't show me the left cares, that shows me the left uses issues of the heart to control voters and gain power. We love guns because we need them to protect ourselves if the government turns on us. Did you know the whole purpose of the NRA was to help slaves rebel and protect themselves? We do want health insurance, but are weary of government controlling it. You know it used to be $5 just 20 or so years ago?? Why don't we focus on making health care and medication affordable again?? I don't have health care, I understand, but I don't trust the government to have that much power. Some people push their religion, because it's part of their religion to spread "the Word of the Lord". As a Catholic with my own religious philosophy, I understand the annoyance of people pushing beliefs down your throat. But this is America. Muslim, Jewish, Atheist, whatever, we should be free to speak and pray as we please. If you have more questions, or wanna have a discussion, feel free to message me. I heard of the Christmas song that was banned and I really didn't like it so didn't all the people who banned it because the girl no through the whole song and I don't really care about miss America I hate fake sexual accusers. The left doesn't use rape to push "political agenda", the left talks about rape because rape is serious and we want to get rid of it instead of ignoring it than the generations before us but every time we bring up it suddenly becomes a "political agenda" and the right,conversetive and people shame the victim for being raped and have your heard about brock turner he raped a girl and two people witness it but the judge gave him 6 months but he came out 3 months later tell me is that American justice?. i second this. generation z are more influenced by the internet. i believe they're more liberal in individual issues due to being exposed to same-sex marriage seen as normal, racism seen as bad, (remember baby boomers grew up and some in the south took part of anti civil rights), most have millennial parents, are exposed in the uproar of gun control since it involved school shootings, and other parts play a role. I also do see them being conservative as they want lesser government and do not trust the government. they're more rebellious also.	Racism	Ethnicity - General	1/94	1.064
z z well, I remember someone went and tried to murder them. That was terrible. We didn't dislike them because they were African American. That's like if I said people only hate Trump because he's white. Obama had shady political ties, armed our enemies, strengthened the power of big government, and then of course implemented federal health care. To many, it really didn't feel like he had our best interest. And lol I can't speak for that. I've not come across a republican religious nut yet, but that's a very limiting view of reps. A person chooses the way they act and what they believe not their political party. And, well, I believe in climate change because of what happened to Venus, so... But I know they don't believe it because the heat of the atmosphere has a natural cycle and the climate has always been changing, for an example the ice age didn't last forever and the world heated up devoid of our ozone depleting stuff, so they presume we have little effect in the way of nature. Alyssa Villa you can't say some republicans didn't like him cause he was black and Trump was the one that said that he would run as Republican because they are the dumbest group of voters and yes he did say that there was a video of him him saying and millions of people heard him say it but when he was running for president the video was taken down and Trump is also the who gives tax cuts to the rich because he is rich that does seem like he has the best interest for us. z z I'm sure some racist assholes didnt like the Obama's because they were black , but we're talking about Republicans not racists. It is not part of the Republican agenda to hate people for their race . That's the misconception that upsets me the most because it isn't even a historically supported conclusion to make. And I know he was supposedly quoted in people magazine to have said that in 1998, but it has since been disproven as a false meme since it never actually came out in the magazine. I don't remember a recording coming out, you say it was taken down. So it is a he-said-she-said fact at this point. Either way, that was 20 years ago and I dont even believe the same things I believed 5 years ago, so I wouldnt hold him to that statement. The rich get taxed like crazy; personally, I feel like there should be a flat tax on income. I'm pretty sure the tax cuts were for businesses though. The idea is that if businesses are profitable then the employers and consumers benefit and cash flow increases. Increased cash flow, better economy, everyone wins. If the employees are not getting better treatment, then the individual who runs the company should be blamed, not the tax cut.	Black, Race, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	3/214	1.402

I just want you to know that there are reasons people believe what they believe. you are being dramatic, you will probably sound stupid to yourself when you are like 20 years old xD. I say that but that's only like a joke when I get a bad grade or something, most of my friends joke like that to be funny too but in reality we really are happy with our lives! I have horrible anxiety and mild clinical depression, but no one actually makes fun of me for it. Everyone is really understanding and kind. There are days when I cry because of the possibility that I may have to eat in public and a lot of the time, social interaction isn't even feasible to me. I'm a millenial and I am not impressed with Gen Z, as I happen to know quite a few of them at work. They have the worst work ethic and can't put down their phones for sh*t. They don't care about their work, undermine authority whenever possible and detest being challenged or finding solutions to problems. They'll wait until someone else comes and does their work for them. It's always all about them and their status on social media. They're so oblivious about current events and their grammar sucks. They can't even spell correctly or have a meaningful conversation with a real human being. It's all about their Snap Chat and Instagram. Considering it's always only ever been a small handful of people to actually shape this world compared to the amount of people that existed on it. Any generation claiming intelligence is laughable honestly. You are either lucky enough to be exposed to smart ideas, or your the one creating them. Nobody is a superior intelligence just because they have fancy things telling them all this information they can hold onto. No matter if every young mind is more intelligent than any philosopher in the 1600s. If you aren't in the 1600s it doesn't matter. I swear every time a new generation pops up, the previous 2 always criticize it saying like 'Oh when I was your age we didn't have smartphones and computers so we just played outside all day, because we didn't have the luxuries you have today,' but what they don't realize is that they were the ones who made the iPhones and technology we have now, plus in the future like 50 years later from now will have way better tech than we have now, and they even may have a cure to cancer finally, so the criticizers should stop being salty about the stuff they created, and the future inventions that may one day save their lives. One day the iPhone 10 will be historic and ' old ' like a old flip phone is to us now, and that's ok, cause eventually going on a field trip to the moon with NASA would be the boring field trip every high schooler has to take at some point in the future. So overall the older generations that came before the newer ones need to stop complaining about petty little things like what they had, cause they actually had better things than the silent generation, and need to have an open mind for the future. Erin JJ no we're not. We're Gen Z. Most of us started using the Internet in 1st grade, so for me at least it played a big part in my childhood. If I had to resume my childhood I'd definitely mention Youtube, those short videogame sites like Miniclip and Disney and MMOs like Club Penguin and Habbo Hotel. You can't compare statistics between generations in one point in time. It would be more conclusive if the polls were conducted at an equal age in each generation. Many things change with maturity and life experiences	Age	Age - General	1/36	2.778

Generational stereotyping is so lazy. I can just imagine the hoard of 15 year olds to 20 year olds thinking they're better than the millennial right now, lol.We are not separated by "Generations" not at all, rather by revolutions that can happen years or decades apart. For example the growth of mobile phones will have a huge effect on the differences between people born before the millennium and those born after. I notice people half my age who are so much more savvy with a phone because they've grown up with it, but whether those people are more likely to leave a bad review after a purchase or prefer working in groups or by themselves or prefer face to face meetings or emails and texts is entirely down to an individuals personality.The problem with generations is that people try so hard to squeeze as many correlations between differences in time, but most of the variables that influence who we are as a person, whether we're lazy, productive, clever, stupid, mean, or nice are completely subjective to our experiences and relationships we develop as we grow up, and not so much whether we had a phone when we were growing up.On the other hand wisdom and life experience are completely influenced by our age irrelevant of point in time, for example teenagers tend to lack empathy and have limited social skills and this can be described as anything from "Narcissism" to being "Independant" The truth is through out history 30 to 40 year olds have described younger generations as narcissistic with records going back to the 18th century, there are people who thought "young people read books for fun, books should be for learning" "Television will stop children appreciating the value of books" "Children play computers all day, they never watch television with their family anymore they're unsocial" "Children are glued to their mobiles these days they don't know how to take apart a computer anymore"... "Children spend all day in the matrix they don't experience real life anymore" "Children spend all their time in the matrix reading books, they don't fully appreciate all the cool stuff you can do in the matrix"	Age	Age - General	2/365	0.548
The multitasking trait does not make sense. The video describes it as being able to talk on your phone and watching television simultaneously. But these things do not carry any mental stress to execute. I'm not awe struck by this observation because anyone can do it, really. I would be amazed if the multitasking was being able to drive a car and do an intense mathematical calculation without a mistake in either or. However, my point is that VERY VERY VERY few people can actually multitask (I would not be surprised if it were less than 1 of the entire human population), so genuinely multitasking is misleading to patent it for generation Z and should be removed from the list.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/120	0.833

Millennials do not equate to Generation Y or Echo Boomers, who explicitly are the generation that followed Generation X born in the seventies and late sixties, and who are also the children of the Baby Boomers. The term millennials specifically refers to people born at or near the year 2000 hence the Millennium mark. Those are the young people who are now coming of age that the term Millennials refers to. It makes no sense whatsoever to refer to people as Millennials who were already 20 years old at the time of the millennium. Dear kelly amber,I can definitely use proper grammar. In case you were actually wondering if the "use of proper grammar" is within the list of my capabilities. Actually I am very proud of using proper grammar in my two native languages. In regards to English, you can be sure I put all my efforts to use the proper grammar as well. The fact I made a mistake (among many others in this text maybe), might be due English is not my native language and it will take time for me to develop my knowledge on it. And that's within my capabilities.In addition, I wouldn't say the inability to use proper grammar would make that person a " dumb ", but the will to not use it. In example, you have proven that you can actually use the proper grammar, and you apparently know enough grammar rules to detect my mistakes and to correct them. Yet, you're dumb enough to not type the dot at the end of your sentence and dumb enough to type your name and surname in lowercase.Definitely not everyone in Z generation is dumb , but for what I can tell, you are. Is not me the one making them look like an proficient working and behaving adult, is the video who talks about "how good they are at it" (multitasking lol..).For what I can see in the video and in the street. Most of GenZ are just addicts. They are addicted to internet and social "connection", same way as ppl in my age were addicted to other stuff.My point is addiction is never good. Internet and social networks are less harmful addictions than drugs, in example, which was the most common addiction back in my days. I will never support a video about how great is to be addicted to drugs because "lool at how creative they become, or how good they sleep Monday in the morning" therefore I don't see anything good in how good genz are at trying to keep 20 activities simultaneously and failing at them all. I remember the main wake up call to America after 9/11 was the sudden realization that terrorism was no longer something that our country was immune from, that it is a very real threat and can happen right on our home soil at any time. I remember it led to America as a whole becoming terrified of terrorism similar to how we were terrified of communists through the cold war basically leading to Muslims being outcasted and harassed like you said even though in reality it's not that simple because there is such a thing as domestic terrorism. the main point being that since 9/11 our society has been living in fear and has never really recovered from the impact of that day, I was a 10 year old in 5th grade when I saw it happen and to this day its still horrifying for me to watch even though now I'm almost 30... Pretty sure a lot of the unrest comes from people just deciding that 'peaceful' protest is practically raiding a city. And Gen Z is a desensitized generation (the internet being the blame for that), we kind of aren't terrified of stuff (I mean, we are, but we make jokes about it so that we get over it). Take North Korea trying to 'Nuke' us, people my age weren't afraid, we made fun of them and laughed at them, even at the prospect they might hit us.	Age	Age - General	1/86	1.163

Sin Man Thats the main difference though, most millennials from my generation grew up without the internet and adjusted to it later on so by growing up before the turn of the millennium in the 90s we had to learn the old way of doing things before adjusting to the new way. Sure we did have internet back then but it was so slow that it would take like 5 to 10 minutes to load a web page and it took up the phone line so it was there but it wasn't so advanced that it would take over your life like what is so common today. Sure there was technology to make life easier but it wasn't so advanced that you couldn't live without it. At first when everything started going to hell in the early 2000s we were afraid at first but now its been getting worse for so long that its hard to remember what life was like before. It's just hard to remember that there was a time before all this started when the least of America's problems was war or a terrorist attack and more about the OJ Simpson chase or when Bill Clinton had a nice blowjob in the oval office. It really was a much more peaceful and happier time to be alive than what the world has turned into since then in the modern era. Yeah, being a Gen-Zer means being optimistic... About depression! Growing up we're told the world is a horrible place so what do we do? We just make the most of it by laughing at it. There's nothing we can do except try live up to the expectations of everyone around us. It sucks.Yes, we maybe on our phones all day but I'll use it by looking up articles to learn about mental health. Considering I deal with it I also want to help other people like me. I also try to learn about things that school can't teach me. I know people my age doing the same thing. Most of the time we will talk about problems in our world and what we should do to fix it even if we can't. I also use my phone to focus on things I need to do. I will play music when I have an anxiety attack, need to clean my room, or do homework. It helps me focus. I'm glad we have the internet. But it doesn't make school any easier. Once again, stress and expectations from our families and teachers.Personally I don't like social media. I don't even use it often. I only have Instagram and that's so then I can keep in contact with my friends. And just talk with my internet friends if they got a problem. Kinda like a therapist but for free. I've been looked at by older people who think I'm just like any other rebellious teenager who loves being alone in their room, on my phone all day, listening to music. If I could go out I would. If I could hang out with my friends I would. Literally no one I talk to even likes hanging out with their family because everyone is so judgmental. Unlike us kids and teens who don't give a crap what someone wears, what their sexuality is, or what they like. I'd say most of us are very open-minded people. We only really care if your a b*tch to us or not if I'm being honest. It was times of countless suicides, colombine type shootings, sad suicidal music, massive drug abuse and so on. And so where 90's teens. I think these were the worst times to be a teen, Gen Z seem to have it way easier. Problem with these types of surveys is that the age differences alone bring about these kinds of discrepancies, not necesariially the age they grew up in. For instance a 30 something who works 8-6 and has a family is far more likely to appreciate online shopping and shipping than younger demographics who have the time and willingness to shop. Sure, some of this like optimism has to do with the environment of growing up (dealing with The Great Recession) but a lot of this has to do with age and maturity. Older generations are always less optimistic. This had been an observed trend.In other words, these types of studies are highly overrated. Besides embracing internet culture, the generational gaps have always been overestimated. It's probably better to look at the habits of a young 20 something being vastly different than a older 20 something (or 30 something).	Age	Age - General	3/148	2.027

born 99 and remember when tapes were falling out and seeing vhs and DVD ads on tv for the movies coming out in the early 2000s. I remember playing online games on XP back in 2003 and playing gta iii on PS2 in 2002. didn't really understand how to play but just wreck and laugh cause I was 3. then I remember when the cool kids had mortal Kombat on gba and then the psp and ds came. Damn was it good. I also remember alot of the rap and rock I heard was from the late 90s and the biggest album I can remember at the time that was played over and over was 2001 by Dre. In like 2010 the first phone I got was a flip phone. then a candy bar phone (the old one where it's buttons are all exposed and the screen was tiny as shit) and finally a shitty smartphone that lasted about 14 or 10 seconds without being plugged in to a charger and it had an antenna that you pulled out for tv. and then my first Android in 2013 to then having a ZTE maven that lasted me from 2015 to right now. I remember going to friends houses and playing games and trying to skateboard and do bmx shit. Basically what would be classified as millennial shit I suppose. though sites say 1980-2000 is the millennials and forward is gen z but then that varies. I guess it's just who you are and how you were raised. and what you'd rather be listening to nowadays. or enjoy playing. either way I guess it doesn't matter because you can watch old movies and understand them and then have Jeb from MEF come do a hilarious simplification of the Godfather trilogy and enjoy it. Not sure where you got these ideas and statistics from. I'm 21 (Gen Z I think) and NO ONE my age is exactly like the Gen Z you have described in the video. My generation hasn't hit the work force yet, so it's almost impossible to say how we respond in a working environment. As for technology, attention spans are definitely shorter than any other generation, but everyone hates video chatting - it's so clunky and inconvenient. As far as multitasking goes, we may get a lot of things done at the same time, but the quality of that work is terrible. Nice video to explain how each think at the moment, though in my opinion, it feels a bit unfair to the Gen Z. Mainly because of the ages they are at now. Think about it, who wasn't positive and optimistic during their Teen and young Adult, college age ? I know I was. I didn't know how life and society worked or had experience, I thought things were easier to solve than what they actually are or didn't care at all and I also had the Gen X telling me I didn't know jack shit and I took things for granted. It's crazy scary how savvy gen z is. I work with kids as a career and they are getting pregnant so early and trying to be a grown up but what they lack is connection to reality and relationships. Their world is based on the bias of the person behind the screen. Which is also why I think gen z is committing suicide so much more than other young generations. They believe the media opinions much more and therefore are likely to do things that are trending all for the experience. They are growing up in a culture that shames being judgmental and celebrates experimentation; yet societal law and culture is more staunch than ever (except in Chicago) in giving harsh punishments and life-lasting consequences. This is where gen z is most vulnerable because they lack the resources to learn the ability to judge right and wrong, safe and harmful, good and bad. <3's to gen z. For every GenZ that sad in this thread that they are depressed: -you're all adolescents: everyone is depressed at your age . Trust me. We millennials used to cope with emo stuff and we were equally depressed.- it doesn't mean that you aren't: you can easily compare your life with the life of everyone in every moment of day and night. Anyone who believed every word of this video is just idk (insert word here). Especially the ones praising "Gen Z" (which is just a label btw). All of those nonfactual traits about both generations don't even apply to everyone. Not everyone is the same. And of course Gen Z are more optimistic at their age right now (the majority of them aren't even adults). They haven't experienced many things yet. When Millenials were younger, they were optimistic too (and the same goes for past generations). But that also can't be said for everyone, because we're all individually different, and we all go through our own experiences that ultimately affect how we live and act.P.S. Stop believing everything you hear from YouTube videos. Do actual research or observe the world around you. Just because someone says it, doesn't make it true. Peace.	Age	Age - General	1/144	0.694

Oliver Dowding I think it does make his point less valid. He generalized a whole generation of people as dumb cry babies when it is simply not true. Some of them are, some of them are not. So why say 'gen z are cry baby idiots?'	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/46	2.174
Edi its okay to generalise sometimes, or a better way of saying it might of been "more often than not...". You cant cover every base in a youtube comment otherwise they would turn into essays. I read between the lines and got the drift of what he was saying, i dont believe he meant EVERY single person on gen z was a cry baby and useless with technology...and if he truly did then thats not something id agree with. Stereotypes are not invented for the sake of it, they have some basis in reality otherwise they would cease to be a stereotype. For example many gay men are flamboyant, whilst its not true to say ALL gay men are flamboyant i would understand someone making a generalisation. The original comment certainly rang true with me.As for your Japan example, if you asked a japanese guy "Are you a pervert?" Him answering no does not make it any more or less valid because he doesnt speak for every japanese person...just because he isnt does not make an overall stereotype true or false. If you could magically ask every citizen at the same time and get a truthful answer in some kind of poll then maybe so. You would be able to say with certainty if it was a minority/majority or a disproportionate amount that were perverts.So where have these millennial/gen x/gen z stereotypes come from if they are not based on any sort of evidence?If i said, all french people like to eat cheeseburgers...you would say im talking shit.If i said, all french people like to eat frogs legs and snails...would you not somewhat agree? Gen Z is basically the dumb generation. They live in the land of dank memes and lit af music with no lyrical significance. They can't put their phones down and for the most part are pretty lazy. HOWEVER the current distinct factors of Gen Z will change, as will the current distinct factors of Gen Y. Gen Z is still very young, they might be unbearably immature and lazy, but they're in their early 20s at the most, they'll grow up, they'll develop a work ethic, they'll mature, they won't depend on mobile devices ect. Times change, people change, which makes this video bullshit because whatever makes Gen Z, Gen Z and Gen Y, Gen Y.. I feel being a millennial should be based more on when you turn 18.If you turned 18 in the year 2000 or after you are one.If you turned 18 before 2000 even if it was on 31st December 1999, you are Gen X.I feel the term "millennial" is based on the millenium. Therefore being 18 is when most consider one an adult so if they were still growing up in 2000 or after before turning 18 than you are a millenial.Edit:However if you are born in 2000 or after then you aren't growing up into the millenium so you are a Gen Z in my perception.I believe every generation should be an 18yr span so anyone born January 1st 2019 - December 31st 2037 is the next generation.Thought:2037 is a crazy year to think about in 2018 lolAlso I'm a millennial! No, they are not really conservative. They think they are conservative but they are neoliberal. There is a big difference between conservative and neoliberal. Many people think nowadays that the right-wings wave is a conservative wave. But that is untrue. It's a new neoliberal wave. It seems that you don't know what I mean. Read the book "The Good Society" and about the Mont Pelerin Society. This book is from Walter Lippmann. Lippmann is/was one of the most famous journalists and political commentators who promoted the social-economic (Neoliberalism) ideas of August von Hayek (he was economist) The neoliberal era is today predominant (since Ronald Reagan and after Keynes' Bretton Woods system ended. Hayek and his Chicagoer Boys advised the US-government at the beginning of 70's. And other countries like Pinochet's Chile, GB under Thatcher and many more). Neoliberalism has nothing to do with liberalism in social-way. Only in the economic-way. Hayek said once that we need 2-3 generations till the neoliberal idea will be accepted and lived. The Generation X and Generation Z are this generation. Especially Generation Z. They accept neoliberalism without resistance. Because they were indoctrinated from the beginning. They think they are free, strong and freethinkers. But they are not free, strong and freethinkers. They living in a neoliberal bubble with invisible chains and borders. The scene at 3:33 was the perfect example. The discussion between GenX and GenZ with the optimistic vision of GenZ. Whoever have always a optimistic vision cannot see the danger of the future, the danger of political acts and manipulating. They close their eyes because it does not directly affect them. They stopped thinking. It's nothing to have the best academic grades nowadays (btw with big debts) if they were educated with neoliberal ideas in school, college and university. Many Nazis had awesome academic grades and they did big crimes and looked away. Lippmann Hayek wrote something about the "optimistic vision". I don't remember were that was. But it was something like this: Whoever have only optimistic vision about himself and his future he doesn't look back and does not question anything like the social-economic way. He does not want to see the bad developments in their own society and the world because he thinks everything is ok or will be ok. THAT is Generation Z.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/384	0.521

It was spring. I had heard dial up for the first time in 95 and knew we were under Alien Invasion. I quickly saddled into my toddler overalls, dove into my baby J combat boots, and cinched on my camo bucket hat. As I drove out to meet the enemy in my neon green/yellow Jurassic Park stamped Jeep, I knew something was amiss. As I drew closer to the Betty Kroger kitchen play set I could sense a lurking inside the cabinet doors that shuttered with the crackling of pebbles as my Jeep and it's plastic wheels ground to a halt. I was in trouble. It wasn't until I heard screams coming from back inside that I quickly put pedal to plastic swerving through any and all obstacles and straight in between hands clasped neighbors on the sidewalk that I finally pulled into our walkway where I had ultimately discovered the truth. After 10min my father had lost connection to our dial up at a near 99 photo download. I could tell he was devastated. So much so that he remained like stone, silent in his thinking man position. You will transition Humans to the 5th golden age of man but also to an age higher than all other golden age. In our terms passing the test. You should not fight each other but band together. Now on to this changing of years for generations is only for those who have money to make more money off of those with little. The true years of generations is Millennials (Group A): 1981 to 1988, Millennials (Group B): 1989 to 2001 (pre 911), i-Gens: 2001 (post 911) to 2012 (pre Dec.21), DNA Gens: 2012 (post Dec.21) to 2019, Divine Gens: 2020 to 2028 (pre Big Event), Golden Gens: 2028 (post Big Event) to 2039. or we can just throw away the whole notion of generations that divide us and just focus on being decent human beings that find ways to get us on a good payroll and stand for innovation within economics and politics. Why would you even call Gen Z 'igen'? Who voted on that? Probably some out of touch people who decided a label of that type would be fitting for a generation that probably doesn't even want a label. Millennials aren't some sort of weird force, they're people in our modern day society. Gen z are people in our modern day society. We are all the same. To those defending baby boomers:Most of them generally have a terrible demeanor. My dad is one and he's extremely religious to the point that he believes every word of the bible. Baby boomers were raised by the silent generation, which has caused baby boomers to adopt things like racism and homophobia from them. So, while baby boomers may be hard workers, they are typically in most cases assholes. Not to mention the stuff about the economy.Millennials are usually more intelligent too, because they've had access to one of the greatest inventions of all time (Internet) for most of their life.I've also recently heard that millennial divorce rates are lower than any other generation. Seems like they're better at relationships and communication too.All of this is a good thing though, because it means that humans are learning and progressing towards a better society than the ones of countries today.Notice how people call millennials (or Gen Z, I guess) stupid. That's because a majority of them haven't grown up yet. Once they have kids, get married, etc., they'll appear less stupid. Millennials would be atleast 4 years by 1999. Mason 11 Your comment is the truest I've ever read. I'm kinda in the end of the Millennial Generation. I don't think I fit properly in either... but still.. I feel less hope for the newest generation because they see "Technology" and social media as the only way to accomplish ANYTHING and that's so not true. They are indeed "married" to their phones and think that life only exists off of that. Often thinking that because they have phones and info and "the world at their fingertips" that they are more mature, smarter and grown up at 13 than people who are senior to them and have actually lived through life and life lessons... It's sad. I also see no respect in GenZ... or at least not much of it. I don't wish myself into any generation, I just wish people were more humane to the people around them every day and that we could reinitiate times when we cared about our fellow man more thanwe care about how many "followers" we have. Aquaman Yes, I completely agree and admit that I am biased. I obviously have not met face-to-face or online all 2 billion Gen Z'ers. But from the sample I have encountered, especially online, 4 out of 5 did not result in the best experiences. (In person though I often have good ones with the borderline Gen Z'ers/millennials my age but not the adolescents). When you have a dislike, prejudice or displeasure of something - especially a specific group - it's gonna derive from some personal bias. And that's simply because you consistently experienced something that irritated or degraded you. So again I know my viewpoint on Gen Z is biased, but a negative viewpoint of anything will always have a bias to a certain extent.As for 'offense,' I didn't think anybody who has replied to me so far was offended. By triggered I meant that they were irritated to where it could not be ignored. So like when you for example labeled me as 'insufferable,' it seemed because you had to let it go from your chest, or else you'd stay tense knowing that I was an 'egotistical' person, according to your standpoint, and not getting to address me. Thus it comes off as butthurt to me. I do know that Gen Z is young of course and that they aren't really able to make world changes yet. But with the power of social media, I do have bleak expectations. And I know there are the exceptions to my opinions. While there are not as many Gen Z exceptions out of the total I've encountered, the majority of Gen Z could very well not satisfy everything I listed. Again the only way I'll know is by meeting every Gen Z. But from what I've seen as of now, it urges me to make those sweeping generalizations whether they're true on a larger scale or not.	Age	Age - General	1/316	0.316

It seems as a whole they will do anything to protect their hierarchy from anyone else entering in. We are a threat to their systems and a lot of millennials refuse to have kids because we feel like there will be nothing left for them as we feel for gen z. In general, Millennials are treated HORRIBLY when we enter the post-college-degree workforce. No one wants us because the economy is so bad and we are seen as a threat and shunned by our older co-workers. I am a millennial. The things that were past down to us. Have us getting in debt before we even experience life. It's crazy . Most of the time you need experience to even get a job not just a degree. Tho only way I figured I could get over that patch was the join the millitary just for the free school and experience. It worked put for me. I got 4 years of experience that I could take with me after my 4 years. I went to school for free and I am now working on my Masters for free and getting paid to do so. While going to school I got a job due to my 4 years experience in the military. I have been out since 2013 and I am living a great life free of debt. We gotta play the hand we are dealt. Let's me honest mist children don't join the millitary to fight for this country. They join for the school benefits. All I say is . I think that a lot of people say, gen z is born from 1995-2010, which wouldn't making any sense in 2025, high schoolers and college students of 2025, is supposed to be in the same cohort as someone in the workforce for 11-7 years. The research of having a 30 or 29 year old with a 25 and under in the same category, is like with having someone born in 1979-1994 together in 2020. One is fourty one and the other is twenty-six years old , 1980-1994 or 1981-1995/1996 together, a 40 and 26 or 39 to 25/24 together, is incorrect information. I think generation cohort research will change in the year 2025. The millennial was January 01st 2001 not January 01st 2000(which was instead a leap year). These are all generalized and pointless, if you ignore the obvious hints toward products. You have a bundle of vague scenarios with no content and a giant waste of my time. Might as well have just stated, PHONES! MOMMIES BOUGHT THEM! Or THE INTERNET EXISTS! As far as dreaming goes, wait until they get crushed by reality. They're in the "get off my couch and move out already!" Stage. At this point I stopped paying attention to the video, as it rambled on about something related to working together. Which makes no sense. Saying a group prefers to work alone is like saying the blacks prefer grape soda. Yeah. I just straight compared this to racism . It's a matter of opinion of which, I thrive working alone, and almost always hate people, it's not a generational thing, it's more like a mental disorder you learn to deal with. (91)Reality is everyone starts off different, great grandparents had to work like hell to get us here, their kids had it easier, our parents took over what was started, and now the standard expectation is through the roof with advancing tech. I shit you not, I seen Burger Kings expect college degrees to make a sandwich and clean a toilet. The only difference between millennials and current gens entering the workforce is they haven't gotten screwed yet and have a chance to learn. Preferably from another country, like Germany, where college is fucking free.Tbh I wasn't planning on a rant, but the audacity this video seeps, through ignorance and blatant inexperienced opinions is daunting. Could it be 'independent' is a pc way of saying they are antisocial not knowing how to communicate in person or work with others because they are stuck on their phones? When I want to share experiences with PEOPLE they join me... not post pictures on Facebook Instagram... it's ridiculous people would rather look at a screen, recording an experience or something, instead of fully live that experience in that moment! Just to show others what they did?! it's so superficial as well.. if you're on your phone recording during experience you claim was 'worth recording' you didn't fully experience it yourself.. it might as well have been a video not an actual experience cause you saw it through your camera screen! For example when I go out to a restaurant I don't like people on their phones.. I'll kick you off my table! It's so antisocial! I'll see groups of people going out to eat 'together' each on their phone no eye contact.. it's crazy to me! I swear, like I'm not old but the changes I seen in my short 30 years is insane I can see people losing their humanity in the future, physically being plugged into a computer... it's practically already that way just the physical connection hasn't been realized! A degree doesn't mean everything but to say that a degree doesn't mean a thing is not entirely true, as long as the degree didn't come from a trade school. I've met a lot of guys that had gotten bachelor's in electrical engineering from ITT, and most today them were so dumb , I don't know how they got a degree. It just shows the standards from that school. They would have never graduated from a 4 year University. While you can manage without a degree, having a degree (from a 4 year University) makes you stand out, and makes you more valuable and marketable (for when you're job searching).Of course, I'm assuming you get a degree in something that's useful like business administration,accounting, psychology, computer science, electrical engineering, and not something dumb like a degree in art or music or something dumb like that. Since you already have your foot in the door in that industry, I'd get a degree in whatever it is that you do to secure your position, and possibly use that degree to ask for more money. Gen Z can NOT multitask. This multitasking myth is just an excuse for lack of commitment, poor attention and low comprehension. To prove it let them watch a film, read a chapter in a science book and write a poem with their smartphones switched on. Afterwards get them to read their poem and ask questions about the film and book. The poem will be weak and any memory of the film and book will be scattered and superficial. As adults these 'multitaskers' will constantly flit from job to job (if they can get one) but never become proficient at any of them, and from one shallow temporary relationship to another. They will have numerous passing interests and activities but never excel at anything. Their lives will pass in a haze of instant personal gratification, getting nowhere and contributing nothing . I dread to contemplate what generation of children they will raise. Probably feral.PS. I'm a boomer and I CAN multitask: I just took a leak and listened to youtube while the kettle boiled. Mike Runyon if you're judging from what you see on the internet then that doesn't make sense though because nobody has a strong personality on a platform that is meant for instant mass communication. the internet is meant to bridge a gap to allow depersonalisation. if you talk face to face you will see the little quirks and hear the opinions that distinguish people. and part of the thing that comes off as lack of personality might just be a lack of relateability to you. Mike Runyon yeah I get that but I think a lot of the traits that you're talking about are just common social tendencies of that age group and I think that occurs in every generation at some point. I just think since gen z is so young they're just now starting to figure out and explore their own opinions and beliefs, therefore have not been as outspoken as people from previous generations. but I don't think that's the same as lack of personality. I think that's just how it is when you make the transition from childhood to adulthood... you go through a weird stage of trying to figure out who you are. this is probably a contributing factor to the social tendencies that they all share: it's just a way to fit in. Honestly I feel like comparing Gen Y and Z is like comparing adults to teenagers. As a teen i was addicted to social media, played way to much video games, cared way more about peers and what people thought about me, but part of adulting is letting go of perceptions and embracing the independent identity. There's a reason the oldest of Gen. Z are considered emerging adults and the youngest still attend middle school, i like many gen Y obviously was care free a decade about living in blissful adolescence semi if not completely dependent on my parents, but growing up means taking on responsibility and independence which also means taking on the weighted stress, less hanging out, and increased focus on creating a stable independent future. A comment from someone who knows science:1. Big problem with the operationalisation of the subject groups: "gen z" and "millennials": what is the significant difference between them? why did you cut off at age 22 exactly and not 23 or 24?1.1 How do you know for sure that the "differences" you found (IF they were true - because they aren't) were not just due to different ages? if you did this video again in 10 years with gen-z as the older group would you find the same findings as you found with the millennials? if yes, that indicates that the difference was due to age and has nothing to do with their socio-economic environment.2. This video is based on assumptions and literally NO scientific evidence whatsoever. this is just stereotyping a whole generation and assuming things about them with no experiments or really anything valid to back it up3. The only reason this video exists is because it's good clickbait and it gets people to talk. basically a moneymaker. so what you guys did is: you put out wrong information that some people actually believe in exchange for.... The best distinction I've seen for millennial is 'old enough to be impacted by 911 and entering the job market during the recession'. Those are both us-specific, but I can see how they would seriously impact the behaviors of a generation on a widespread scale. To make any assumptions about the following generation seems silly - they're young students, almost exclusively, so them doing student-y things doesn't define their generation; it defines their age group. Gen Z here. 23 yrs old . So as one of the oldest of this generation, I believe that the data will vary depending on how every gen Z is raised and by which gen raised them. My mother (43yrs) was a gen Xennials, and father(56yrs) was a baby boomer. I can agree that I sorta think like a millennial (I'm getting married to one lol), anyways, I went to University, on alot of scholarships vs my fiance who got into alot of loans and now has alot of debt. I believe that gen Z is being underestimated in this, they have corporate businesses that reach out and deal out scholarships. Millennials didn't have or take up alot of scholarships to avoid their debt problems. Gen Z saw all of the Millennials problem and are thinking, how do we do it differently and get further ahead to our end goal... Just a thought.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/152	0.658

Gups actually it's the opposite. Most millennials we're raised with the thought that they are special, they are owed success, and get congratulations for just showing up. So when gen y grew up they received a huge let down because they were unprepared to be challenged. Gen z has seen a decrease in that parenting style and as a result Gen z has a better work ethic and are more prepared to take on the world. Not to mention with the new technology constantly adapting Gen z has more options for work that no one thought of before. Take me for example I'm 13 have a college grade reading level and am starting a website and business on my own. Because of my parenting style which is the opposite of what was common for millennials I have more resources and will likely earn money before my brother who is a millennial gets a job.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/154	0.649
Autumn WhittingtonNot really. It was ingrained into millennial to go to college and you will be guaranteed a job. This was taught to them ever since grade school. The millennials jumped through the hoops that baby boomers told them to jump through. When they came out, those jobs weren't theirs and that employers didn't value their employees like back in the day. Millennials were pretty much brainwashed to believe that is the way to obtain success. However, there are multiple ways of success that don't involve a degree. You can have been a real estate investor, start up a business, or set up software that gives you passive income. The only reason why Gen Z has this understanding was because of their immersion into the internet age and learning from the screw-ups of millennials. Millennials didn't even have that close to the level of access or opportunities to use such technology. Gen Z will be very successful since they also don't have to face a recession anytime soon. Gen Z lucked out more than you think.	Age	Age - General	1/179	0.559

I wouldn't really say that because of vine and snapchat that gen z has shorter attention spans. If you're gonna judge this by social media and what's popular, I'll say this: Vine and snapchat died pretty quickly. Instagram and YouTube proved to be longer lasting in the end. Instagram took what everybody liked about snapchat, which just the stories honestly. YouTube videos from popular channels are longer than they've ever been. When I was in middle school and YouTube started getting popular, they were dumb videos lasting maybe 5 minutes. Now they're generally around 30 min. And a lot of the time between 40 and an hour. And people enjoy longer content on the platform much more now. People in gen Z will listen to your to 2 hour long podcast or listen to a storytime youtuber for an hour. Not that I know for certain that this directly shows the attention span of a generation. Its much more complicated than that. But if you're gonna use a social media app that lasted maybe 2 years to judge a 10 -15 year generation, I'm going to counter using a more current trend. I'm simply disappointed with Society. It seems like no one gives a shit about anything and all the young kids are piggybacking off the hard work of their parents. Hell im only 15 and I see kids my age who think that living with their parents for the rest of their life is realistic and even good. People have degraded so much since my grandparents generation. Now all these kids have terrible role models and have become borderline degenerates. I mean you listen to the stuff that kids my age listen to and it's disgusting. Then you have preppy kids dressing up like thugs and taking drugs and stuff. It's sad. Every generation has its black sheep, but mine seems to have glorified being a complete dumbass lazy couchpotato drug addict . I pray for the future kids on mine, that they aren't influenced by the rappers and sluts that plague the minds of children through pop culture. Who knows, maybe when my generation realizes that their life was a waste of time, they will try to tell their kids not to do the same. Then again, these kids will probably be living in poverty, seeing that now single mothers are glorified by extreme feminists, and single mothers tend to be uneducated and thus poor. I mean, the divorce rate of parents has skyrocketed in the last 30 years due to stupid decisions in early relationships. Like, oh I dont know, premarital sex . But then the media says stupid lies like divorce doesn't effect the kids, or it's good for them to be independent. What the hell is wrong with these people. Obviously it has a bad effect on the kids! They don't have parents!!! God help mankind. And I hope whatever was said here might have influenced someone to think differently about life, and societies in general. I think that a very important factor in this type of comparison is the age . Millenials are obviously older so that may as well change their perspective in life. The questions should be made to people born in 1990 and five years later to people born in 1995. That way we can take that on the side and have a better comparison.	Age	Age - General	1/62	1.613

The dates aren't important. It's grosso-modo a new Generation each 20 years, but it doesn't imply each and everyone born before and after a certain date is part of a new Generation's values. This type of social analysis start around 1880 because that's when the second class emerged as a political power and the press starts to be written for, and talk about this second class. Why no 3rd class? Well, for a long time 3rd class wasn't voting. The poverty class remained illiterate for a good portion of the 20th Century, and apart for major strikes, didn't really have a platform to express itself like with current social medias. So for the main generations I just go by 20 years (time for a child to reach adulthood), the exact years are just not too important. Lost Generation (1880-1899), Grandiose Generation (1900-1919), Silent Generation (1920-1939), Baby Boomers (1940-1959), X Generation (1960-1979), Y Generation (Millenials) (1980-1999), and Z Generation (2000-2019). So yeah, these dates are nothing official but the official dates I don't think matter. You get the general idea by going every 20 years since 1880. Y Gen are micro Baby Boomers, focused on independant entreprenariat, expressive but quite undisciplined, lazy but inventive. Gen Z unfortunately (I think) might become a new Silent generation, disciplined but conservative. They will look for more stability and security because they have experienced the traumas of terrorism and school shootings the same way that Silent Generation endured WWII. They might be anti-violence and anti-guns but they might welcome back censorship. I am not sure if by "security" they will want to fight off internet surveillance which is a big issues since the mid 2000's, or instead opt for more surveillance, embrace Face ID and that sort of thing. It is still an influenceable generation as we speak. The individual Me, Myself, I aspect of Gen Z is similar to "selfie" Gen Y, but Gen Y is a lot about freedom, live (YOLO) and let live, while Gen Z might wish people kept more to themselves. Y Gen voted Democrates but are very divided, which is normal since they encourage "Express yourself", but Gen Z might be more one-sided toward more conservatives values and that's worrying. I mean: the 40's and 50's again? Please don't. By the way, I'm X. I'm biaised but I think the 1980's and 1990's rocked, and that's all us. Generations aren't really based on the year you were born. That's just s rough estimate. The idea of generations is based solely on the massive drop in the population during WW2, meaning that the few who survived the war (my grandparents) created a population boom (baby boomers) when they settled down and started families in the post war era. Then when the boomers (my parents) had their own kids, they became known as X (me!) who were the ones to discover the internet and the development of social media.... as we approached the Millenium the children of gen X became known as Millenials. Now the thing is that some people have children early in life, others have children much later in life, which is why there can be young Gen X with old Millenials who are close in age . Basically if your parents are Gen X then you're a Millenial. If you're the child of a Millenial then..... I guess your parents were really young when they had you? Putting people into different categories based on there age and then pretending to know exactly who they are and how they grew up is just asking for trouble. This is just giving ammunition to each generation to attack the other, and once again people will fell to need to explain and defend themselves for behaviour that isn't there own. We can't define someone like that, everybody grows up in a different environment with different values. We have our own personality that differ a lot from person to person even if there the exact same age .	Age	Age - General	2/95	2.105

Well if you're going to compare two generations, at least compare them in the same age . The life of a teenager/student is a whole lot different than the life of someone who has been working for a couple of years and is trying to get their life started. Personally I had a whole different mindset 5 - 10 years ago than I have now. Also my view on the world has changed as well. As a teenager you tend to be very idealistic and you think life is going to be easy. That changes when you get older and have to face reality. I do not think this is something generation specific. Every generation changes when they get older. Neither do I think there is such a big difference between the two generations if you take age into account. I live in the same house with a couple of generation z'ers and I see a lot of similarities with my generation a couple of years ago. The last thing I'm going to say is not meant as a rant on generation z'ers, they are a great generation, but they still have a lot to learn and they are likely going to change as well when they grow older... Sincerely, a millennial.	Age	Age - General	2/211	0.948

Many of the attributes discussed about both generations have been statistically shown to be differences in types of intelligences of people in all age groups. For instance, I couldn't find any real evidence showing that multitasking is a strong suit of a certain age group. Instead, it is a type of intelligence that certain people are good at, no matter the age . This video is way too general.	Age	Age - General	3/68	4.412

Very interesting, I can see myself and my brother as good examples of each generation. I was born at the end of 1989 while my brother was born at the beginning of 1997. Only 7 years apart we have so many differences. Just like the video said, I have recently graduated, am carrying a load of student debts on my back and a year later I still can't get a decent job with my degree in marketing. I ended working in a fast food restaurant instead just so I can pay my bills and food to live. My brother on the hand didn't want to go to university after high school and is making money online instead by playing DOTA and doing his own independent things relating to the world of the game. I personally have so many ambitions, so many ideas of things I want to do, but so far it hasn't really been working out for me. The job I'm currently doing is draining my physical and mental energy and makes me feel humiliated, as if despite my years of studying and hard work and the diploma I earned in the end, all I'm good for today is scrubbing the floor and washing greasy plates. And I haven't even started paying off my student debt yet, as I'm still hoping to find a better job that actually fits my degree. To the people who blame the millennial generation for being lazy and self-entitled: what do you suggest we do when even after we achieve a university degree nobody wants to hire us and we end up working our a off at crappy jobs with minimum pay just so we can earn a day-to-day living. Most of these comparisons come with life experience as your Generation Z becomes older and has more life experiences their perceptions and the way they do things will change I'm a Gen X in life truly is no different for me than any of the newer Generations I'm 42 but I've been living with the internet since its creation I've been living with cell phone since their creation I've been living with all of the modern technology since their creation not only do I know how to use the newer Technologies I remember how bad the old ones used to be I was born in 1975 I remember a time before microwave ovens were common or VCRs or even cable television yes the technology existed but it was too expensive for most people until the early to mid 80s I remember the first time we purchased a VCR it cost four hundred bucks that's a lot of money back in the 1984 I remember the first time we got a microwave oven that was like 4 or $500 back in 1985 and it was exactly like one of those cheap little $49 jobs you can buy now with just a turn dial knob kind of smaller only big enough for one plate I remember when the biggest television set you would see in somebody's house would be 25 in any bigger than that you had to have a projector television but the picture quality was so bad and they cost so much not too many people purchased them I think I knew one friend who had one growing up I remember cell phones and pagers I remember getting my first smartphone and I held off on that until 2010 just because you were born immersed in technology doesn't mean you know more about it sounds like an excuse or way to stroke your ego because you have no real-world experience and you want to feel that you're good at something so you attempt to say that you're better at multitasking which is b yeah you're doing three things at once but you're also doing them one third as well that's a scientific fact but with real-world experience you will learn it is more efficient to do one thing at a time you can't watch a movie and be texting and playing on your phone and expect to not miss any of the movie Generation Z only want to separate themselves from the millennial generation because some Generation Z have parents that are millennials and who would want to be in that group with their parents right but from my perspective anybody born after 1985 is kind of hopeless with political correctness	Common, Old, Oven	Age - Over 65s, Religious Identity - Jewish, Social Class - Working class	3/451	0.665

My dad has always been old school so I feel as if I can be more reliable and more efficient then most others that were raised with an easy and privileged life with everything being handed to them. Now I can't lie I am pretty privileged but also not at all rich. We have all worked hard to have just what We need and things to have fun. Thanks to my dad I feel like I am getting all the skills I need to be able to go out into the world and work hard for the things I want and be a responsible easygoing person. I'm a millennial (27 years old) and I teach 11-18 year old in school. I see a lot of differences between myself at their age and them; definitely more technology reliant but that's not always a bad thing. I would say they're more tolerant towards their peers but not those older than them and there seems to be a big divide between young and old since the lines have been blurred. They mostly all have access to a smartphone and are more at risk of being a victim of online bullying and/or predators online, which we never had. This then leads to lots of diagnosis of anxiety and depression, which is great that they're making people more aware of mental health issues that always existed for different reasons. I agree about the attention span and communication issues on a face-to-face basis; they're generally appalling and like to avoid any forms of 'real' communication with adults but they are a cool bunch and are definitely paving the way for future generations by standing up for what they believe in, knowing their rights & in ICT. I love how pretty much every Gen Z-er I've met thinks that when they finish school, they'll magically get the big money job, go to all the executive meetings and travel a lot. I had my own delusions when I was in school, thinking when I get a job, I'll get a flashy company car. Took me a good 7 years to get to that company car and to the boss of my own company.But today's gen Z interns are downright delusional. They try to be edgy and be a part of management, even when they are interns. Basically the cheap labor you get for simple tasks, when you don't want to pay full salaries. I know it's not right, but it's nothing new to the world. I've been there myself. To make good money, you need experiences. Some will be good. Some will be bad. You need to learn from all of them. Be social. Meet people, make connections. Achieving your goals is a bit easier, when you got the right ideas, how to execute them and know the right people. But before all of that, try to be realistic, so you don't get disappointed. Enjoy the lesser cares while you can.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/204	0.49
I hate how we classify the generations - with vague, yet broadly applied generalizations, that are based on misinformation and marketing/advertiser research for people who could potentially have a 10-15 year age gap (or 20 because practically no one agrees on how long a generation is). I'm a late gen Y who borderlines Gen Z based on my birthday. As such, the listed traits for Gen Z perfectly describes me to the letter. So why am I being group with a bunch of to people who are almost 40? My friends and I would even say that we classify ourselves as millennials because we really didn't have the internet as kids and as we grew up sure it was much more available but we still didn't have laptops and smart phone when we were young. Generation Z optimism stems from the fact that they became of age when the recession ended. This generation was able to take advantage of full curriculum, education, and research in education, likewise this generation was more employable at the age of 18. Moreover, this generation saw a more equitable education and education reform from elementary to university. Moreover, this generation was not forced multiculturalism, but lived through it, hence it did not experience this traumatic experience. Hence, why alt-right is a movement of white millennials who were "forced" multiculturalism. As the economy improved, this generation also was able to obtain credit, loans, jobs, etc. Statistics should be used to compare this generation and millennials in this regard as a source of their optimism. However, American 50s mindset believes that economic conditions do not reflect individual and group behavior and outcomes. Most Americans do not believe there was ever a recession or that the economy decline due to wars.	Age	Age - General	2/158	1.266
I think they need to really work out millennials and generation z out better than they have it. Just between the children born in the 80s and 90s is a huge gap in the world and environment that shapes that amount of people. I really think due to tech and world events it needs to be seperate by every decade starting with generation y and then here in the 2000s we may need to start breaking it down to every 5 years because I know with my child alone the world is very different from when birth in 2013 to 5 years old now coming up 2019. I'm a Gen Xer. I recognize that the "world" changed much less during the 25 years preceding my birth in 1970 than it did in the five years following my graduation from college (after serving in the Army) in 1997.Having scrolled down past a few hundred replies, it's interesting to see how many of the millennials are crapping on Gen Z regarding how ill-equipped it will be once it hits the workplace.Most millennials seem to have NO IDEA how much we've had to dumb things down and lower standards in today's workplace/society to accommodate them. It was ultimately to their detriment, but it had to be done. They will "discover" how this all plays out in the coming decades.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/121	0.826
Aaron Hartje maybe the dumb things down is the narrative of main stream America because as the daughter of immigrant parents I was the teacher, I graduated with no debt full ride scholarships and had a job that I worked from home and made three times what my parents did but what I did not have was still enough money to buy a home. I was handed a shit economy at my age my parents owned 4 homes, I couldn't afford a half million dollar home at 22, bubble crisis , then layoffs. A S: It's basically a fallacy that millennials are required to have "far more skills and qualifications" now, but I know what you're saying. It IS true that - with a glut of people in the job market - employers can lazily now simply require more things of applicants simply as a way of weeding people out and streamlining the hiring process. It's a horrible way to go about hiring the best person. Every one of them with any sense (there are still a few of those left. Nine, I think) knows that they'll have to train the person to do the job anyway. Still, it's easier to only interview nine people than 200.

Your disbelief of what is required of entry level grads and millennials in general can likely be chalked up to a lack of perspective. Everyone wants to believe that they're the most brilliant generation yet, and that their struggles are unique and new. But my generation was also doing multiple jobs that the previous one hadn't had to do (as you now, millennials didn't exactly invent coding), and some of us even had to have the ability to do it without calculators or Wikipedia. You're not alone in this. I once volunteered at an after-school program and the other instructors - from the generation before mine - marveled at how smart the kids were just because they were so good at navigating the internet at such a young age. I decided to test that belief by hiding the big blue "e" from the desktops of all the computers. Only one sixth grader was able to figure out how to even get on the Internet. You do not get any credit for being proficient at things that were ubiquitous while you grew up. No one should marvel at the fact that I remember how to use a rotary dial telephone. It doesn't demonstrate any unique kind of cognitive talent. Conversely, I was taking an advanced physics class a few years ago and pretty much all the students in the class were millennials. It was truly baffling, the looks I received when we were asked a question and I chose to perform fairly rudimentary division in my head rather than reflexively reach for the calculator.

This by no means makes me any more naturally brilliant than any of them. The problem involved a 4.5 and a 9, for God's sake. But I knew how to do something because I grew up at a time in which we had to be able to do it and we weren't allowed to have calculators handy until trig. I also observed in those classes that the younger students were interested only in having an answer to write down. So, in a lab in with teams rotated throughout various stations, people simply copied answers from previous groups. There was no interest in the process or in learning the "why," which is what we were allegedly there to learn. It was all simply about having an answer to present. The heck with learning. That's a huge difference in wiring that becomes amplified in the workplace where expectations are suddenly placed upon you. For awhile we pretty much embraced this influx of people who didn't seem capable of dressing themselves because they still had something of value to offer where the work was concerned. Then, as the demographics of the workplace changed, the employees still weren't of the type you'd want to introduce to polite company, but they also now were fairly useless, intellectually. The thing is, they still think they're part of Version 1.0 that was an asset to the business because they, too, grew up with iPhones and had ear gauges. We laugh

Aaron, I was born in 1983 and my age group gets lumped in with millennials but I think it's unfair to take the worst of any generation to label it. Baby Boomers got labeled as lazy pot smoking hippies and Generation X were labeled as self involved slackers by older people. Millennials are still pretty young and most people will grow up.	Age	Age - General	1/62	1.613
MA: Problem is, they're taking a lot longer to "grow up". This is pretty much the case with each of the past few generations, but with the Millennials it's kind of gone beyond that tipping point. When you can be on your folks' insurance until you're 26, you've officially become an infantilized people. And rather than fight the labels as previous generations did, this one tends to spend much more time whining about it and taking no accountability.I never really knew what the Gen X stereotypes were. I'd heard the slacker thing, but I think the extent of that was people begrudgingly having to accept "casual Friday" at the office. It wasn't keeping us from getting degrees and entering the job market at the typical age . We also worked when we were in our teens and in college, which is something that's gone down precipitously with the generation that came after. I agree that broad brushes aren't the greatest, but it's ridiculous that everyone these days feels the need to say, "not every member of (insert large group identity) is like this." That this is actually put out there as an actual point - rather than being something all parties already accept and don't feel the need to mention - is another characteristic we can attribute to the easily offended nature of modern society, best characterized by the Millennials. We all know that not all members of a given group are identical. But that doesn't mean that the reputation a group garners isn't well-earned.	Age	Age - General	1/255	0.392
Aaron, I was 26 years old when that came into play and I missed out on being an adult on my parents health insurance. I notice the media will focus on the safe space millennial college kids that have too much free time but the media doesn't talk about many people in my generation that has been fighting in these wars, working the farm, working 3 jobs and going to college. My point is none of that is the sexy story, The media takes the most negative stereotype and runs with it.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/92	1.087

MA: Let’s not forget the flip side. The safe-space millennials are the loudest voices, as are those on the political extremes, etc. Dog-bites-man is never sexy, but lets also not forget that we are seeing tangible results springing forth from all of this. The fact of the matter is that safe spaces, segregated student unions/graduations, etc., ARE now realities to the extent in which they never were with previous generations. Of course, the same idiots who made the ill-advised move of actually taking anything any of these children said as being worth serious consideration never change the playbook. They were more than happy to try to make a high school kid the voice of a movement against the Constitution. This speaks to another dynamic, which is that millennials also get to be the willing dupes behind which the American Left can hide. Put THEM out there with their limited perspective and understanding of a given issue so that THEY can draw the fire while those basically lighting that fuse sit back and pray to God that one of them gets hurt so it can further the cause. As for the rest, we all know the general ages involved in fighting wars, etc. What I think this comes down to is basically language. It’s similar to how you’ll occasionally get some asshole popping up on a comment board about the U.S. and pulling ”Why do they call it ’America’ when there is a North, Central and South America?” out of their ass. Technically, that’s true. But in the way language is actually used, the entire world calls the U.S.A. ”America.”Similarly, when someone talks about a ”millennial,” they really don’t mean those of that age in general (although they’ll never actually make distinctions). The millennial is almost a sub-group of Gen Y that denotes the worst of the bunch, whether it be on campus or in the workplace. It’s more like you have to fit the stereotype to be a millennial than the other way around. This is probably why people often refer to whiny Gen Zs in their late teens as millennials. Archetype rather than age . If I were you, I wouldn’t sweat it. As with previous generations, just ignore that shit and do things right and no one will lump you in with the group. The recession and War destroyed the millennial generation, which were considered the generation that was going to be admitted into college almost 100 rate, (this became true), meaning that it was foretold that this generation was going to be the most educated, the pioneers of science, democracy, education, etc. All of the good. What happens? This generation enters college, the recession happens and war does not end, all universities nationwide cut their research and programs, students get devalued education, taught only basics but not the essentials for industry and research. The recession left many of this generation without employment, living with parents, and hence losing competitiveness in employment despite their college degrees. Now, older generations are so ideologically brainwashed by idyllic America that they do not see the causes of why the millennial generation is the "loser", the despairing, and the snowflake generation. Generation Z entered college with optimism because universities reinstated full curriculum and research, and hence their employability was better. Hence, why generation Z is optimistic and now will accomplish what their older siblings were prophesized to do. On top of that, generation Z were also hired right after high school in contrast to millennial generation, and hence why generation Z has the same mentality as the 50's idyllic Americana of individuality and right-wing economic policies. Generation Z will also be the most Right Wing, ultra-Nationalist, preservers of unrestrained Capitalism, and will also be the ideologues that will make Neo-liberalism the Law of Human Organization for centuries to come	Snowflake	Ideological and Political Identity - General	1/251	0.398
The problem is that Millennials experienced the Recession when they were in the working age. The high rate of unemployment in this generation and their high rate of college education meant that they lost work experience opportunity, meaning that they left college without work experience, and high student loan debt. On top of that, education lowered its standards as well, so college education became worthless and irrelevant, confirming the republican right's cynicism against academia and intellectualism. Hence why the term "snowflake" became prevalent by the Republican base because this term referred to students who were complaining of high student loan debt and unemployment during the Great recession and their complaints regarding the irrelevance of their college coursework (hence, the stereotypical "gender studies" or multicultural studies taught in universities). Losing work experience, even entry level, during working age may have consequences and show why a high rate of these students never worked until post-grad years and continue to be underemployed despite college education.	Age, Gender, Snowflake	Ideological and Political Identity - General, Age - General, Gender - General	4/162	2.469

I haven't seen any real differences between millennials and gen z when millennials were young. The biggest difference between the two is that millennials had some exposure to a world before smart phones. I don't think if you looked at some sort of statistic you'd find millennial teens were lazier or more entitled than gen z teens. Teens are still crying for the latest phone, they're both rude, the older generations look down on them for their liberal attitudes. Gen Z may be more liberal and open minded at a younger age than millennials but that's about it. Neither have in any way shown to have better work ethic but we wouldn't know yet because the vast majority of them are in high school or just getting out of high school and most likely haven't finished college. Millennials seem childish now as adults but gen z probably will as well because both generations tried really hard to be grown up before they actually were. Gen z will probably carry on that same mind frame millennials did of children pretending to be adults when they're actually adults.	Age	Age - General	1/186	0.538

I really don't see how using apps and the internet makes an entire generation process information faster. This sounds like pseudo science and you give no real facts to back up anything (saying "research shows" in not proof). Multitasking is basically impossible as shown in the Journal article "Division of attention: The single-channel hypothesis revisited" MRI scans show that when we attempt to do two things at once, our mind simply switches attention between the two. We focus on one task and then quickly refocus on a second task, but never successfully perform both at the same time. The frontal lobe in our brain controls which act we prioritise, and our minds are unable to process two tasks simultaneously. As the word 'multitasking' was originally a computer science term that refers to machines, it's hardly surprising that this is beyond the grasp of human minds. Generation Z grew up with technology that millennials got to see become integrated into everyday life. Just going from a black and white gameboy pocket to modern console gaming blows my mind sometimes. It makes me think of how our great grandparents went from radio to television, and possibly even using the internet. Generation Z does not have stronger cognitive abilities, they just have more information at their fingertips than millennials did at their age . As many other people said, most of these people in Generation Z are still kids and have not experienced the real world yet. Give them about 10 years and see what "multitasking" and instagram followers will get them.	Age, Black	Age - General, Ethnicity - Black	2/259	0.772

But once you start judging me by things I can't control?It makes me want to cry.I want to start raising awareness for a topic that isn't talked about much: All the sh*t my generation gets just for their age . Kids my age are constantly mistreated for no apparent reason. We're always mocked about how we were never part of 'the good ol days'. (Holy crap, I'm actually starting to cry.) I feel like gen Z is just raised up with so much self-confidence simply because they are taught adult things at young age already (by the Internet). Millennials had lots of respect for the older generations and had to teach everything for themselves. I don't know about gen Z but I don't consider Millennials as lazy (being one myself). Most of us are just overworking to a point that they are getting sick of it. There is a lot of pressure in university (at least here in Germany), people are only striving for success and less on being social. I hear from older generations that these conditions didn't exist back then.	Age	Age - General	1/111	0.901
S Dude Generation Z is not only raised with confidence, but also self-shame. Even if you see most of the Generation Z as confident, many of us are so self-cautious that some even consider self-harm. All because of the internet. We have no control over what the internet gives us. This generation might be the most successful, but the worst to ever exist in terms of their mental health. S Dude Since the human society is survival of the fittest, the ones who adapt the best are the ones who will achieve the most. In this case, the Generation Z adapt faster than Millennials, so we might achieve more. However, even if Generation Z takes the stress as normal daily routine, its buildup still affect most of the Gen Z. Stress causes mental illnesses in cases, especially at young ages, so all of this put together equals to: None of the generations are perfect, each has its own disadvantage. Millennials realize the stress, while Generation Z don't, and both tend to overwork themselves.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/104	0.962

Angelica Adams I agree that you don't have to be the smartest to study (learning by memory is 80 of it). I don't know about the situation in America though.. what I do find really disturbing is that here in Germany you need a really good numerus clausus (NC, i.e. average grade) if you want to get into medicine, which is ridiculous. School grades don't necessarily correlate with intelligence (some people just have a better memory than others). My brother had to move to argentina just so he can study medicine. And then there's not enough doctors in germany. Additionally, there's a rule saying that x of students have to be foreigners, which is another reason why my brother had to go abroad (I'm an open minded guy and I support immigrants/foreigners since imho everyone has the moral right to go anywhere he wants) but this also means that my family is affected (kinda off-topic, just wanted to say this).	doctors	Nationality - General	1/160	0.625

It's the people and the predators that have access to you. The strangers who are influencing you and showing you which behaviors are "okay" for people your age . The internet has pushed a lot of young people into adulthood and adult behaviors at an uncomfortable pace. We found my eight year old nephew watching what he thought was Sonic on Youtube but was actually some adult not-porn. My cousin was twelve when he started getting on facebook and Instagram hitting on twenty year old women who were responding to him. Sick, adult men prey on young and naive children. That's scary. Bolt SRNA your looking at it from a millennial view, the maturity level of modern youths is much higher as we are exposed to much more stuff at a much younger age , look at the average English class, many of them will view the world in a political, economic sense, often looking deeper into it than the gen x or y that may be teaching them, in my class of 14 yr old , we're often teaching the teachers about particular relevant political/war/social/economic/international events	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/83	2.41
Beautifully put, by the way. But there are certain points in here that do distinguish between generations, like multi-tasking vs focus, realism vs optimism, and trust vs distrust of brand/advertising. Things like independence and attention span, though, are pretty much just based on age .	Age	Age - General	1/44	2.273
+Mrturtle 1928When you are older, you will realize maturity has nothing to do with what you are exposed to. It has to do with how you process and react to the world around you. It is for that reason you can have people who are 60+ years old and lived far more life than you, but is far less mature. Furthermore, much of what the younger generation is being exposed to is in fact indoctrination, not exposure. When you are older, I do hope you will be someone who matures, so you can learn how to spot the differences. We "Millennials" have received our dose of propaganda and brainwashing of course, much of it wasn't as bold as it is now, but we still had it. However, we have started to gain the years and the freedom that comes with that which better enables us to start seeing through the lies we were taught, and how we were manipulated... Sadly many of us (just like with every generation before and after) do not take this opportunity and will hide behind the comfort of the familiar and assurances of the ties of old authority figures, but the fact remains, the longer one lives, the longer one has to learnIn the meantime I invite you to consider, the 'mentality' of your generation, or the 'mentality' of my generation are things I have seen in those before us, in Baby Boomers, in those before them even. So perhaps we should wonder, are generations as different as we are told? or are we merely having different elements within our respective populations showcased as representing all of us? Karin Maaka - Thank you for pointing that out. I am fully aware of generational labels not necessarily indicating ones behavioral pattern. Millennials are different - very different. An entire generation raised up, many awarded for nothing more than showing up, taught that winning and losing don't matter, that it's someone else's job to defend you, that someone else is responsible for what you do - these things among many are responsible for what I believe is a generation lost. Karin Maaka - Then I'd imagine that you learned something of great wealth - the value of family, the ethic of work. 'Millennial' is really an American term set to a distinct group. Generally, it does not extend to other countries, nor certain places within the US. The term itself is a connotation applied children often of privilege, usually white, possibly Asian, on rare occasion Black or Hispanic, that were raised in a particular manner which lends a sense of entitlement and undeserved acclaim. A more objective way would have been to compare the attitudes of Gen. Z now and that of millenials when they were also in the same age bracket. Truth is most 13-24 year olds are generally optimistic and this trait is not unique to any generation or culture. Stop painting millenials with a doomsday brush!! 25-38 year olds from time immemorial have often seen life through the same dark lenses you just described, and as people age , memory and brain processing speeds drop as well. Same cheer, different day. And what the previous generations refuse to understand is that just because we have different problems, doesn't mean our problems are not to be taken seriously. My generation should have more credit as far as the diversity part. We are more integrated and more accepting of different people of different backgrounds and culture. (I'd like the point out that the whole trophy generation thing makes no sense. The way in which the education system was made was the industrial revolution and based on creating employees, today we have a more creative and innovative society which since the education system has not changed in the slightest puts people off learning. I do not doubt you are a good teacher but people my age want more than just learning from a textbook and lectures to sit a standardised exam, Once the education system becomes practical and allows for creativity and innovation than learning facts to regurgitate them onto an exam, engagement will go up and you'll have students more focused. Somebody doesn't understand generalizations. He didn't call you personally or anybody else from genZ "entitled and lazy"so you have nothing to be upset about. He's a teacher, so (assuming he did this job for years or even decades) you tend to notice trends for each new generation that comes your way. So "on average GenZ people are more..."He is also working with a not insignificant sample of people each year, 30 people or so. So while still only his opinion and not scientific at all it's still quite a valid sample size. I've seen plenty of social science research done with far fewer numbers. I literally said in the very last post before this one that it is his opinion/an observation. Are you already having problems with your attention span by any chance? Jeez it was one post ago;) jkSure some of the behaviour could definitely be explained by their young age and things like the ones you mentioned were definitely said before for previous generations. But to suggest their age is all there is and that generations and behaviours in the classroom don't change is silly. Just an example. In my parents and grandparents time the classroom was expected to be a quiet place and teachers had lots of authority to make that happen. In my generation students talked over/ignored teachers frequently. And in a few generation after mine even physical assaults along other bad behaviour on the teachers weren't uncommon and they had little to no authority to stop that. So things most definitely do change from generation to generation in the class room and elsewhere and it can't just be explained as an age thing. I mean this whole video is about differences between generations, isn't it (and yes, generalizations about them as well).	Age	Age - General	3/194	1.546
So things do change from generation to generation and it's not just an age thing, luckily in your UK case (by your account) for the better. But it's still just your observation. Now I could insult you, call you a foolishly optimistic young fart without any experience on the matter that shouldn't comment on anything, but I won't. Again, assuming he's done this for years/decades, I'd say he has a pretty good comparison to work with over the years and his opinion holds some value.	Age	Age - General	1/85	1.176

This is all stuff that has been researched before. The average attention span has dropped since the 00s. The newer generations are more demanding, they expect their services met now, immediate gratification. The reason older people complain more in your waiter/retail job face to face is cause they've developed the balls to demand the service they want with age. But be sure the younger generations are surely writing a very harsh review/rating on the service as soon as they get their hands on the nearest smartphone and are more likely to deny service from the same company in the future if anything doesn't suit them right (low brand loyalty, plenty of other options). Bet they are also thinking "Why do I have to wait here in line, isn't there an app I can use to order this food NOW" ;)Demanding, entitled and very uncompromising customers. And if they treat their teachers as just a "service" as well you can see how you get to a "...well maybe you shouldn't teach..." comment rather quickly after just some minor criticism.	Age	Age - General	1/179	0.559

Germain Martel You're right, in general maturity correlates with age . I never said it didn't, I just said it's not always true (as in your case). Or do you think that a 25 year old immigrant w a kid and two jobs is less mature than a 35 yr old who went to college working in IT? It depends on the person right? I agree gen z is more spoiled than the millennials were but that's simply because as technology improves and the standard of living in the world (especially the first world) rises, prices go down and people generally are allowed better living environments to grow up in. This means that my children will be even more spoiled than I am. There's nothing wrong w this though. It pushes forth innovation until society reaches a point where they are perfectly comfortable w everything they have (we're obviously nowhere near that yet). Still, I find it supremely rude to look down on people, especially students who you teach, by calling them entitled and lazy when you don't even want to put in the effort to try and do your job properly. There's a reason your student's aren't listening to you and you should probably figure out why that is and fix it. If it's because our attention spans are shorter, which is VERY true btw, then try to find a way to keep them engaged. I have ADD on top of being gen z and I still managed to graduate w a high GPA in the IB program and got into a chemical engineering program that was 3rd in the country. That was thanks to my amazing teachers that created a competitive atmosphere which allowed me to excel (also my parents and myself but that's beside the point). Lastly, I actually find that offline (bc we tend to become quite brutal online no matter who it is) gen z holds gen x and baby boomers in pretty high regard. We respect that they worked hard and achieved. The only generation we really look down on is millennials because they're too idealistic and complain about everything 'holding them back', but aren't willing to change their situations to find a better outcome. Weird being 23 on the cusps. I'm very much like gen z , I was born in 93, by the time I was 10 9/11 had happened by the time I was 15 the economy had crashed . So for basically all of my childhood all I heard was that everything was going down . As a Gen Z kid (2001), I have had access to tech my whole life, but I wasn't really born into it. First few years of my life were spent on the floor with toy cars, and I didn't really get into computers or any of that until I was 10. Granted however, I did get my first phone around the age of 12, but as I was living abroad it was only for texting or calling people, which for me just meant parents. I got heavily into learning how to use computers efficiently when I was at the same age . This is because where I was going to school, we all got to use MacBooks for a majority of our projects. Anyhow, a few other things are that I find a lot of people around my age to be kinda ignorant or stupidly immature, but I'm finding that's less the case this year. This is in part because I've been able to travel a bit, which has in turn gotten me to be a little more on the adventurist side. Hell, one of my favorite things to do is explore randomly with friends, with screens away for the most part. Millennials are the generation of awakening. The first generation to receive advice from our predecessors and collective knowledge around the world at the same time. From that we've learned to be more accepting, compassionate, and understanding of one another. Realizing that college isn't for everybody and it's not necessarily going to get you a good career. Jobs are much harder to come by in our age too, so we literally take what we can get, and put up with a lot of crap. We're called entitled, when the simple fact is we just know better. I'm a millennial and some of this is pretty accurate. I think the optimism carried by most gen z people could have been enabled by the overdose in sensitivity and political correctness the past decade or so, basically they are brought up in a protective bubble education system and society where all the harsh reality are usually blocked from their sight to give them the illusion that it's all good all the time. Words people threw around back when I was in highschool now gets you suspended. LGBT awareness hasn't been that big of a topic a decade ago and unisex bathrooms haven't been around until the past 2-3 years. I am in a pretty cool situation to compare with gen z peers now that I'm heading back to college for my second bachelor degree. A lot of these people born in the late 90's are what you would call "snot nosed" self centered and over confident people. I'm born in 1988 btw. The cultural differences between these two "generations" seem to boil down to the optimism of youth (gen z) versus the tempered realism of a slightly older age cohort (the millennials). The supposed differences in behavior and attitude are better explained in the context of age . Also, let's keep in mind that these two supposedly distinct groups are extremely close to one another in terms of age and that any substantive differences would be hard to quantify because of this closeness. Gen-Z is still going, pal! These days, people (except me) would put the start of their Gen after year 2000, and split the early/older millennials or Gen-Y (early 80s) into a sub-generation that's likely as close to X as Y. Speaking of X, either their gen is rather small in date range, or some of these younger boomers are X... The transition and crossover is obviously grey. As an Australian, your definitions of the generations is strange. Millennials are those who were alive at the turn of the millennium but were not yet of age . (Some restrict it to those who can remember the turn of the millennium.) Either way, 1980 is too early to start it as folk born then are still clearly members of Generation X out here. From my point of view, it would seem that you guys had bought into what the baby boomer 'experts' were pedalling on how to get a good career. Meanwhile, no one ever contemplated the unintended consequences of this, such as millions of candidates, for only hundreds of jobs, and creditors don't care. They want the student loans paid.Yeah, between the coddling, the participation trophies, the following vs. outside the box thinking....and then tossed into the real world unprepared? And I thought us X's had it bad. We learned too late to warn you, that working hard, and keeping your nose clean, was all a steaming load, as it is not enough. That, and we didn't have social media shoved on us at a young age for instant gratification, because we didn't even have the internet then.	Age	Age - General	1/137	0.73

Hi Mai Le, thank you for your kind words :). Ironically, I did Chemistry at University because of my undying love and passion for it lol (hi five for loving such an amazing science!). However, after graduating, I realised that the job market for it in my country is stagnated (something the college fairs don't tell you). Just a little advice, if you want to do Chemistry, try to do an application of it (environmental, food, material etc.) so if you want a job after graduating, it will be easier to be absorbed into a company that requires an Environmental, Food, Material Chemist etc. Additionally, you can also take that knowledge and develop your very own products that you can sell. Another thing Mai Le, if you can acquire other skills (trades) along the way such as plumbing, auto mechanics, tiling, electricals, woodworking, baking, hairdressing etc then these skills would become an asset when you get older (you can do something you love (apart from chemistry) on the side). Furthermore, even if you LOVE the sciences, having a minor or certificate in a business subject is also a good idea, it makes you more marketable, all rounded and makes you stand out from the rest in your resume (I did a Major in Chemistry with Minors in Analytical Chemistry and Entrepreneurship). I have a lot more "adulging" information that I wished I knew when I was your age , so feel free to ask :)	Age	Age - General	1/244	0.41

SweetTea742 I'm honestly so impressed with how you've handled expressing your opinion. It's almost impossible to post any opinion on the web at this point with no unreasonable conflicts, and your writing style has completely outdone that fact. Congrats to you for that. Anyways, I'll speak for the majority of Gen Z and say that by a very young age, (myself being only 13,) we come to realize how society really runs. We replace all of the 'happy' even fictional thoughts we had about what the world was like, and not only realize the true environment we're living in, but those we don't live in as well. We take what we do own for granted, and after it's eventually gone we're filled with regret. We understand we won't change the world ourselves, and therefore are building the path to step forward and rebuild this competitive, 'each man for themselves' mind-setted community. We are beginning the start of a new society, one of which takes people to work together, rather against each other, to grow. Technology has solely helped with this, as the connections online are much easier to all since there are no doubts or fears of being judged or blamed. It's the virtual world the Millennials set up, to assist Gen Z to set up this world in reality. I'm almost positive technology and the world itself will see a major positive increase in the near future, as we are all subconsciously working together to form a sub-Utopia. Heaven on Earth isn't possible, but we dream to set it up for future generations to build the next closest thing. Although we may focus on the majority of things previous generations did, the slight life 'fraction' that we differ from our predecessors in our life 'whole' can form a 'whole' new future. By ourselves, our small fractions don't effect the total. Together, the pieces connect and rebuild the total. Replace it with a newer, polished version. If you chose to read this entire thing, thank you for listening to me blab about what I think Gen Z will accomplish through the help of the Millennials, and what we will do by helping the next generation.	Age	Age - General	1/365	0.274
I'm in Gen Z (born in '02) and I'm actually terrified for my future. Unfortunately, I love the arts and want to write but I'm so nervous about pursuing that. I was diagnosed with MDD, which is pretty much very severe depression, so it's not abnormal for me to have zero motivation and do nothing all day but I try to make myself happy when I can. The arts just make me happy. I'm not much of a traditional artist but I love writing and music. Most of the time I wish I was into more practical things that could get me a stable job but idk I'm just not. I need to be creative to be happy.	Nothing, Zero	Age - Youngsters	2/118	1.695

Millenials like to get silly degrees in stuff no one cares about because they want to live out their dreams. When Millenials don't have things go well for them, they often endlessly complain about it or do nothing to change their situation. This is not always the case for all Millenials. I know personally I dont want to do something in life that doesn't make money, and I know that sitting around and complaining about shit doesn't do anything to make me any happier.My dream is to be an artist, however I chose something more realistic with good job prospects for college. It might not be what I want, but it's something I felt I would be happy doing.Here's a story.A friend of my sister, who is a millenial, went to school for Bio chem at an expensive and private college. She was never able to find a job and is still paying off her student debt (But is almost done!). After a few years working as a barista at a Mariott, she was tired of her low pay and decided to go back to school to become a nurse. She's never been happier and now makes lots of money. Moral of the story is, don't follow your dreams if they are bound to fail from the start. Be realistic and work your way up.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/228	0.439
Hi Phillip, thank you for responding. I honestly cannot believe that you are only 13 years old . You have written such an articulate, poetic and thought provoking comment. It makes me proud for your Generation. I have read your entire piece and I agree with you 100. I think Millenials and Gen Z's should work together to build a better future unlike how the older generations worked with my generation. maybe it's in my country, but the majority of Baby Boomers in the workforce work against the Millenials, they're always trying to bring young people down which is sad... Then again, some Millennials can behave pompous and entitled. I'm interested to see what you guys would be bringing and contributing to the future. Hi Hannah, thank you for replying. While I was at University, I did Chemistry because I loved nothing in this world more than that... However, there were some questionable degrees and Masters programs as well (Watershed Management, Biophysics, Carnival Studies, Mass Communications etc).... The Universities marketed the life out of them and promised the potential students a life of grandeur if they choose to do these degrees. The older generations (the heads of these programs) are the ones responsible for putting these degrees out like bait and to make it worse, the college fairs advised you to do it because they found 98 of their past students graduated and found jobs in the best companies or started their own venture with the degree. Oh yeah right!!! Poor ting scratching at home unemployed! You're right about the Biochemistry, I have friends who did Biochemistry as well and ended up working small, odd jobs to make money, the degree landed them nowhere. After getting my degree, I realized it wasn't all that unique because 150 students just came out with a Chemistry degree just like me and we would all be part of the race looking for jobs. After getting my BSc, I stopped right there and wanted to use it and apply it to something useful and in demand (like food). My other friends choose to do their Masters and PhD's as they thought it would make them more employable (college fairs pushing the agenda). Obviously, after graduating with your Masters or PhD, you enter the realm of being "overqualified" and your in the same boat with a BSc degree holder. Hannah, you've hit the nail on the head, you are so right, you have to be realistic and think outside of the box, think about what you're buying into (the commitment to a school/job) and how it's marketed to you. Be realistic! I think people can still follow their dreams but it's not as simple and linear as we assume it's hard work and focus.	Nothing, Race	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - General	2/335	0.597
As one of the old millennials, I can say that, the Boomers fuked us good. They are the only generation who stole from their young, in more ways than one. The Silent generation before them spoiled them to death after WW2. They were horney, came home, impregnated women and built the country. The Silent generation went throughThe Great Depression. The Silent generation passed on material values and forget the moral values. Thank about it and it won't take long to see that the Baby Boomers are the most materialistic generation. Some of their parents are still alive. I liked them a little bit more because they didn't carry too much of a fuss and seemed to possess real life wisdom. I guess that's why they were Silent Gen. Boomers just wanted to sell us dreams to fill their pockets and Social Security benefits them.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/145	0.69

"We (Gen Z) actually laugh about the fact that you thought (millenials) you could do and make everything you desired, when it is not. How do we know this so early? One simple word: Internet."The internet has a lot of bullshit too. I hope you have learned to sift through facts and fiction. Just an amateur filmmaker Internet? You mean the echo chamber that are social media and fake news? The facts are that Gen Z struggles to differentiate between a news article and an advertising article, which is really worrying. Internet is a great tool in the right hands... I'm just very skeptical that GenZ are "the right hands" seeing their abysmal lack of critical thinking (which could be due to their young age ... yet again... college and scientific disciplines teach you critical thinking and it seems Gen Z loathe these). I am Gen Z (born in '99) and I've known that I wanted to study Biology since I was 12. I've always loved the subject, but it didn't become a true passion for me until around 7th grade. I never was interested in going a pre-med route (but I thought about it). So I spent high school going back and forth between research and engineering. I did the research and determined that it would not be a smart decision for me to go the research route. I would have to spend a lot more time in school and I would be stuck paying for graduate school by myself. Considering these factors, I decided to study Biosystems Engineering. With this degree, I can get sucked into medicine, food, environmental, sustainability, and agriculture and do things as the research route. A lot of employers will pay for you to go to graduate school. I've also done extensive research in starting salaries for BE majors that graduated from my school. On average, they make $61,000 upon graduating and have a 97 job placement rate. So suck it up, move back in with mom for a year or two, and save all my money. (She has 0 issues with this.) There goes my debt. I've also figured out how I will pay for school. (Not completely, but if my plan goes all well then I will be between $10,000-20,000 in debt.) My main concern is finishing my engineering degree in 4 years because its very common not to. Besides that, I look forward to my future.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/262	0.382

I feel this wasn't written by a Millenial or a Gen Zed... As a Millenial with younger siblings, knowing their friends and all that... I would say we are more or less the same only some differences due to maturity. Even though they didn't grow up without technology and missed out on a lot of things my childhood had, they still enjoy the outdoors and learn to put down their devices on their own...still, much more sedentary. Overall, they are calmer than my peers but definetly not happier. My advice to them is to stack up on skills, especially internet/technology related skills, or creative-thinking skills, but they don't need that advice, they know. What they do need is more emotional support, relationship guidance etc... I feel Millenials should be more understanding of that need, however, we have this bitterness at being "the generation" that switched from our childhood memories of playing outdoors and climbing in trees to the tech savvy and obsessed and everything is our fault somehow. I often hear Millenials even denying that they are Millenials. I think get over it and help your successors feel understood, even though they are that awkward annoying age (Which, we went through! Remember your Myspace profile and when your Facebook status was in 3rd person... that time) In the future we will need to work together.	Age	Age - General	1/225	0.444

The difference is simple, millennials are decadent and bloated fools who cannot handle reality. They grew up during a very interesting moment in history, the 80s saw the collapse of the USSR and the end of the Cold War, as well as the rapid advancement of technology. Those who grew up in these times knew only peace and prosperity, they believed that they could do or be anything, that technology was the cure for all ills. They believe that you can live life in the moment, without considering either the past or the future. Once the 2000s hit, everything they believed was debunked. The truth is that you cannot be whatever you want, that technology can be harmful, and that peace is a sham. Generation Z is different. We grew up in the age of global terrorism, economic collapse, civil war, mass shootings, migration crisis, ethnic conflict and endless foreign intervention. We understand that peace is only momentary, that technology is an opiate and that life isn't fair. We understand that unearned tolerance is cowardice. We understand that the world is unpredictable, and that we must plan for whatever prosperity or hardships may lie ahead of us. We also learn from the failure that is millennials. We understand that idealism is destructive, the millennials are the example of this. In summarization: Gen Z lives life proactively, as they understand the future is uncertain Millennials live life reactively, as they believe the future is irrelevant	Age, Ethnic	Age - General, Ethnicity - General	2/244	0.82

Yes, you did grow up in a time of peace and prosperity. Your childhood was mostly completed by the time 9/11 happened. Teenaged years leave very different impressions on people. I was only 3 when 9/11 happened. When I was 9 the housing market crashed, and was 10 when we almost lost our house, and 11 when my family declared bankruptcy. My teenaged years consisted of seeing European nations go bankrupt, and the total collapse of the middle east, which led to its impoverished citizens flooding into europe. I saw kids my age being massacred by psychopaths and foreign terrorists. I watched Europe be rocked by suicide bombers, stabbings and mass shootings, some killing hundreds of people. I watched a mans legs be taken off by a bomb in Boston. To put it simply, both my childhood and teenaged years were set in a natural world (natural order being conflict). You lucky (or unlucky) to have already been a grown adult during these times. Do I find these acts morally depraved? Absolutely. Do I cry? Absolutely not. Conflict is the natural order, and only through conflict and struggle. Hard times create strong men. Strong men create good times. Just ask my older brother (who is actually a millennial). He grew up in abject poverty, sometimes not eating for days. This taught him to cherish moments of prosperity, and to always plan for the future. He is now a doctor, and will never have to worry about money again. Take his experience as a lesson.	Age	Age - General	1/254	0.394

The critique I have of this video is that I felt like the entire video was talking more about gen z rather than actually comparing gen y and gen z. You talked solely about gen z and then threw in a couple thoughts about how gen y is pessimistic because we're working so hard to still be poor and worried about student loans... Which is very true!! LolLike you stated in the video, the biggest difference between gen y and gen z is that gen y can remember a time before a phone was glued to your palm and everyone was so connected online through social media. It's weird to imagine the times my parents talk about when they would call people to catch up and find out what they did after high school/the last time they saw them... nobody questions what anybody is doing anymore because we broadcast our lives everywhere. This is why I deleted social media! I realized how much I disliked being so connected all of the time... it's overwhelming to me because I couldn't find a middle ground between actually living my life/being in tune with my own thoughts and paying attention to all the outside noise on social media and comparing my own life to what everyone else was doing with their lives. On social media people tend to only post their golden moments which causes you to become disconnected with the human experience. Social media gives a false perception of what everyone else's life is like and you begin to think you're the only one struggling. (At least in my experience). I became disconnected with reality in some ways! Also, I noticed how much I didn't care about taking pictures and videos of everything once I deleted social media.. I realized half the time I took a picture was solely to post it... which I didn't even realize I was doing until I deleted social media. I would get an urge to take out my phone and take a picture of something, it was like a reflex... 'Oh I gotta let everyone know I went to the park today! I gotta get a good picture.. oh wait never mind'. Lol. I realized how much I actually enjoy things now because my mind is completely present in whatever I'm doing. I am much more connected with reality now because instead of focusing on the need to update people, I'm just living. :)Cheers everyone	Nobody, Weird	Age - Youngsters, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/411	0.487

SweetTea742 I'm glad someone can agree in this day in age! I do feel invisible sometimes because I don't have many friends that I actually hang out with often. I hang with my dad mostly and my significant other... besides coworkers and that's only when we're in the mutual workspace. When people are laughing about popular memes and about things celebrities are doing I can't engage because I don't know what they're talking about. I think this is especially weird for me because in this day in age I do not have another friend that isn't on social media. It feels like seriously everyone is!!! I am definitely a minority, at least among my age group. Although I feel out of the loop sometimes, I would never go back to being so engulfed in social media outlets. It was almost like an addiction honestly, but I got so fed up that quitting the last time was not as tough as my other attempts. Although I feel out of the loop sometimes I enjoy that because all through high school and my first few years of college I was so connected and it was seriously affecting my mentality. I always thought i 'didn't have time' to read the books I wanted to, to just sit and be still, but since I deleted the accounts I found I have a lot of time to do those things, I just used to stare at a screen a majority of the time. This is beyond incorrect on so many different levels. Generation Y (the forgotten generation) follows directly behind generation X. The majority of Generation Y are the youngest children of the baby boomers (just like myself), our older siblings are Generation X, the generation after us Gen: Y is the Millennials (being the children of Gen X) and now the youngest generation is Gen Z. Also the majority of the technological advancements came from us Gen Y with a investments from Gen X. Like....Im getting sick of society trying to fuse Gen Y and Millennials together. Us Gen Y's vote, work hard as hell, are purchasing our first houses, creating and sustaining our own business, etc. We are separate generations that show ZERO likeness to the Millennials. Shoot, when I was in middle school with them old ass Macintosh computers it was a requirement to learn and pass both shop class (tools, wielding, sanding and construction) AND digital architecture!!! We were A+ certified in middle school on technology that WE advanced! Shit we had to take programming and coding classes in middle school too, cause even though the internet had been out for a decade or two, it was going to be us who had to push it further. We had to learn binary coding (serious my teacher Ms. Leone' would make us study stuff like: 00100011110 meant "A" and so forth and how a semi colon (;) could ruin an entire codex procedure. Ask a millennial do they remember or know what Oregon Trail is on an 8bit computer in history class! I do, didn't kill enough squirrels and everyone died. Problem with the "remember 9/11" rule is memory is subjective, some have better memory than others. I know an October 1998 born who remembers it since she lived in Manhattan at the time, and I know plenty 1996 borns who don't. I also know quite a few 1996-1998 borns who do remember the year 2001, including the part of it before 9/11, but not 9/11 itself since they were still at an age where they didn't understand the concept of death yet. Right, I agree, but the ability to prove that you remember 9/11 means you're a millennial. It's more of a rule to rebuke those who say "Oh, millennials are 23+" like in this video. The lines are much more blurred than that, but this is still much too high of an age to draw that blurred line. If my sister can remember 9/11 she can also remember a lot of the same things other late millennials remember. She watched SpongeBob, Rugrats, Rocket Power, and that goofy Nickelodeon temple of doom game show. It's definitely 21+, max. I'd argue it's 18+, but it's really pretty impossible to tell. I was born 1999. I remember being 6 or 7 and using my mum's 2006/7 computer to play games on the Internet. But I also remember my first phone at 12 being a Nokia. My first touch-screen should class as a brick phone (4 cm thick, can't download your own games, ect) My first proper touch screen phone was at 15 and a half. Most of the phone stuff was because my parents are babyboomers (just) and didn't believe I was old enough for a 'high tech' phone. The phone I'm writing this on is a 'Samsung Glaxay J3-2016' a 2 year old model. (Not complaining, brand new models cost an arm) So do I class as a Millennials or a GenZ? i was born in 1998 and the first computer we had was when I was 7 or but we didn't have Internet I got my first Nokia when I was 11. Then I got my actual smartphone when I was 17... Mt little brother who's 8 was playing on a computer at 4 y/o and even had a tablet. Now he's playing video games while chatting + watching YouTube videos at the same time.... I really think 1996-2001 babies are a weird transition generation lol	Transition, Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	2/86	2.326

eh beg to differ. Born in 94 my senior year I only met a couple of freshman students and I literally mean a two, who actually knew what dial-up, AOL, VHS, Gameboy (original, color, advance), telephone, Myspace etc. was... Myspace, seriously? Not to mention one of the freshman told me in one of his classes the teacher had a projector and half the class had no idea what it was when the teacher got it out and used it. There's more I can list off but what I'm saying is even though there's a 4 year difference, born in late '94, it's a huge gap. I even asked a couple of sophomores in one of my classes if they ever watched a certain show and only one and the freshman knew what I was talking about. When he says Gen Z was born in it he doesn't mean it literally, it's just that they were so young in the boom of technology they may as well have been born into it. Hell I didn't get internet at home until '03, being 9. I knew about it and how it worked because my uncle had it at my grandparents' home.	Senior	Age - Over 65s	1/199	0.503
I'm gen z(2000), and was introduced to the internet at age 10. My younger sister born about 5 years after me was introduced to it at age 5-6. Which would be the Baby Boomers. I somewhat agree with what you say, it is safer to say Gen Z is a tad bit later. But I think 2000 is too far away. If the Millennials generation is from 87' - 99', then Gen Z would be from 00' - 12' would make my sister, who was not even going to school yet, a Gen Z as well. And that doesn't make much sense. Well, 1995-9/11 is a weird period in terms of generation.Thing is, researchers are extremely divided on that period whether or not we are Millenials or iGen.I know that I had access to video games and internet at the age of 4-5, I was born in 2000.And those same researchers do not know if they should base it on Internet(NOT SOCIAL MEDIA, that is Gen Alpha) or 9/11.If it is Internet, yeah sure do post-2000 since internet's real boom came after 2006(?) with Wifi starting to grow really fast.But if it is 9/11, in terms of security and nations and stuff...you don't really realise anything when you are 6 years old . Of course you remember the impact on everyone, but not what it actually did to the world.Again I would like to point out that Gen Z is about the internet access growth, not social media. Social media = Generation Alpha and they are born after 2010. We just grew up with social media as we became older, we were not born with it. Millennials are much more likely to become Liberalist as it's the party that promises equal pay for all and apparently therefore success for all through Socialism. Socialism has never worked before, but most Millennials are too blinded by their past experiences with Capitalism.Gen Z on the otherhand, (atleast the ones not being brainwashed by Millennials) are more likely to follow Conservatism, the party that promises a free market, which means an economy that the government controls nothing in the economy, which is promising for the Gen Z, who see it as an opportunity to fix restore the economy, without the Millennials, who will soon be controlling most, if not all, aspects of the government, butting in and trying to declare Socialism. Heck, I also met many who are around my age that didn't even realize that they are Millennials themselves. Ironically, they complained about "those damn Millennials" while referring to teens. I'm curious as to why are there so many different age categorizations for Millennials and Gen Z. I was born in '96 and the category that I always understood myself to be in was millennial. I guess a 'young' millennial and older millennial being in their early 30s. Given the information in this video, I disagree with the age grouping as everything that was stated in the millennial end of things is more familiar in terms of experiences between my peers and I. For instance one big one being college debt and another being the actually watching technology and social progress and actually being part of that progress, rather than being born into it necessarily. Everyone in my generation feels so entitled these days. Really can't stand it... We're also living in an age where people don't think for themselves anymore, for instance, Gen Z generally just consumes the mainstream media and accepts whatever they hear as true. My parents taught me right, and I know some good people from generation Z, but the vast majority of us is made up of narcissistic, uninterested, entitled brats to be honest. Oh well.. I guess that's their lives.	Age	Age - General	1/81	1.235
Caelum Blanco really? My parents are quite right leaning and I turned out to be a feminist- same with most people I know (seriously most people in my school reject what they've been told all their life that's wrong and recognise that mainstream media often leaves out what they don't want you to know (eg the numerous crimes against black people in the us). As for entitled, I feel like most of us just want to keep our rights and not have to fight and suffer in wars old white men thought up for us- and we want to stop the conflicts going on now.	Black, Old	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - Black	2/106	1.887
Noelle Nunes I still believe there's a kind of buy-in to a certain agenda, especially the more Left of center ideas that the younger generation gets into. Just a question, why do you say " old white men?" and why does it matter that they're white? Personally, I think everyone needs to get over race these days and stop caring about skin color and start viewing everyone as an individual. That's truly freeing in my opinion, it's the kind of thinking that gave blacks freedom! As a pretty hardcore conservative, I think it's misinterpreted that we hate women and want to praise men. That's not the case; A lot of us are actually first wave feminists. We want EQUAL rights for women, we don't want to project them higher than men, praise them exclusively, and stuff that the third wave feminists are doing. Happy to be able to freely discuss this with you! :)	Old, Race	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - General	2/153	1.307
Caelum Blanco I say old white men because they are generally the people in charge. I also feel it to be necessary to mention race , because as a person of colour, I feel that racism can only be solved if people realise and accept their privileges and disadvantages, so not seeing colour is not an option. I'm not going to say I have a deep understanding of segregation since I am not black or American, but from what I understand it was ended by black people raising issues and campaigning for them to be ended. As for feminism, all we're asking for is for easy access to things like birth control and to not be hindered and shamed when having an abortion, to not be victim blamed when raped, to not be harassed in the streets and workplace, and to have equal pay. First wave and second wave feminism did nothing for women of colour and LGBTQ women; it only helped white women. Third wave feminism is about including all women and tackling larger scale issues in countries and smaller scale issues in communities	Black, Nothing, Old, Race, Racism	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	6/184	3.261

Noelle Nunes So then you don't believe all men and women were created equal? You believe there's some inherent disadvantage to certain people because of their color or race but I don't think that's the case. I don't think blacks are at a disadvantage because of their skin color, but rather there's a culture within their race that might put them at a disadvantage should they adopt it. Either way, it's certainly NOT due to their skin color, rather, a culture that exists among them. That's what's so great about America, we don't care about your skin color, we care about how successful you want to be. This isn't the case in many other countries. And last I heard, a woman who works as hard as a man, in the same field, will get payed the same amount. The wage gap has been debunked long ago because it doesn't take into account the specific job occupations, hours worked, and workplace environments. Women tend to take different jobs than men, work different hours than men, and take different priorities than men. This results in the so called "pay gap" where women get payed less. That's simply because they're working different jobs and working different hours. They're all payed accordingly to the jobs they do have, I promise you that. Moving on... I find modern feminism very paradoxical because it says A) Women are equal to man B) Therefore there's nothing wrong with hitting a woman C) It calls a hit woman a victim and it "attacks" the person for hitting a woman (Which I believe men shouldn't do anyway). That's just one example, and it applies to a lot of other things in feminism. Feminism has feminized men, made us less protective over women, and raised men who don't have good ethics and end up harassing and raping women.. it's a little ironic you see. I think men should protect women, be nice to them, be chivalrous... It doesn't mean women have to yield their pride, it's just a nice courtesy (I mean when you give a cash tip to your server, it isn't calling them weak and saying they NEED the money, you're just being nice.) The fact is, ALL women can vote now, and that's a good thing. :)	Nothing, Race, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	7/380	1.842

I never said men and women were not created equal- we should be but we aren't- same with being a poc. If I were a cishet white man i would be much luckier than i am now, a bi Indian woman. I should be equal, but unfortunately I am not (cos thanks colonialism)! I can't talk for an entire community, but from what I've seen black people in America are definitely discriminated against in America- racial profiling and police brutality are a real problem. Unarmed people are being shot up just because they're black. If I went to America right now, I could be called a terrorist simply due to my skin colour. My Muslim friends would be harassed and discriminated against. There are a disproportionate number of white men in higher level fields due to sexism and racism. In poc dominated places there is less funding going into school, and for both women and poc, they are discouraged from working there- how often have you heard that something is a 'man's job'? Probably not a lot, considering you are male. But when women take different hours it's often due to them having to take care of the kids. Men should also take responsibility for their children if they are complaining about women working different hours. There is still a pay gap even if a woman works the same as men- in the US, it's $0.77 to a man's dollar. In regards to your view on modern feminism, we're saying nobody should be hit. Anyone who's hit is the victim. Modern feminism also stands up for male victims of rape. There is also no need to be protective over women- I really don't need you to protect me. More men have raped women before modern feminism was a thing, and modern feminism has brought it to light, therefore making it more visible and reducing it. What does feminising men even mean? Does it mean men are now wearing more 'girly' stuff? Because makeup is literally different pigments being smeared across your skin and skirts and dresses are pieces of cloth- they have no gender. Is it to do with men liking men?Instead of only men protecting women, we should all protect each other. Saying that is very reductive. And yes, it's good that we can all vote now, but that doesn't change the fact that as a woman, I am still less advantaged than a man. I should be, but men and women are not truly equal yet.	Black, Gender, Indian, Nobody, Racism, Sexism, Terrorist, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Ethnicity - Native-American, Gender - General, Religious Identity - Muslim	11/419	2.625

+Noelle Nunes thank you girl, im a black woman living in america, and i agree with what you wrote. yes everyone is BORN equal as humans, however they're not born equal in society. because of that difference (phenotypical, gender , etc), people are treated differently so they dont get the same experience (less opportunities, more discrimination, etc). being color blind or pretending that race doesn't exist doesn't solve, it simply ignores it and brushes it under the rug, where it continues to persist unaddressed. we have to call the inequalities to light so that they can be noticed and handled properly through various social initiatives. anyway i just love what you had to say. and im a feminist too :)	Black, Blind, Gender, Race, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	5/119	4.202

Ilan Kutsman THANK YOU!!! Gen Y and the Millennial Generation are 2 separate generations! They're trying to make a 20 year span into 1 generation (even though a generation is usually 10-12yrs). I'm 31, born 1987. I'm a Gen Y baby. Both of my parents are baby boomers, I'm the youngest child out of my parents, my siblings are Gen X, my nieces and nephews are Millennials and my youngest nieces and nephews (3yo-15yo) are Gen Z. Literally EVERYONE that I know who is in my age group (28-36) are the youngest children of baby boomer parents. In no way shape or form am I or those people Millennials. Our mentality, our work ethics, or technological understandings our education and just our entire upbringing are drastically different. WE don't keep our hands out waiting for a handout, we work for what we have, we're buying our houses now (Millennials can't even afford to pay rent for an apartment), we have a full time job while having our OWN business as secondary job if it isn't already our primary. I usually don't nit pick over stuff like this, but even last night we got into a huge argument at work over this...seriously. Roughly 9 of us who are between 28 & 36 we're telling about 6 maybe 7 of our coworkers (lazy fucks) who are ALL 22-25 that they are Millennials and that they aren't part of our same generational group. We're Gen Y. Even if you look up Generation Y it stops roughly around 1993 but even googling it, it'll say that some sources will merge the "Millennial Generation" with the Y Generation. If anyone realizes Millenial means 1,000 years, thus for us that would've been the Year 2,000. I was in 6th grade during the whole Y2K fiasco, 90 of those Millennials weren't even born or were still having their diapers changed. Ask a millennial what was their starting wage at their first job...mine was $5.50 prhr at age 15 with a workers permit. How do you take almost 20 years and literally try and forge them into one year. Shit, even my Principles of Business Management 301 text book for my MBA, VIVIDLY states that Millennials and Gen Y's ("The Forgotten Generation") are 2 entirely different generations, with completely separate spending habits, ideals and executions on savings and investments and understandings of banking and commerce. Growing up, I was ALWAYS taught and referenced to as a "Gen Y" kid, a little after my second nephew was born (I'm 14 at that time) I start hearing his generation being called Millennials. Now in 2018, him and I both are Millennials and they're trying to give them the title of Gen Y. Look it up, Gen Y is actually called "The Forgotten generation"...why would they call us that, if we're Millennials? Thanks for actually understanding! Your comment made me happy that someone(s) else also understood this. Those crybabies, can't hold a job and want everything for nothing pos ARE NOT Gen Y, we ARE NOT THE SAME!!!	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	3/507	0.592

I know the origin of the term, it's from a book called "Generations: The History of America's Future, 1584 to 2069" which was published in 1991, however, I first encountered the use of Millenials at around 2013 and people born in 1982 like myself have nothing in common with Millenials.1982 is late Gen X and not an early millennial.Millenials typically rely heavily on social media - except facebook -which is considered for " old people".Gen X you'd typically find use only Facebook and WhatsApp where they're members of groups of parents of kids who are in their kids' classes.Because of Facebook, I could find most of my high school classmates and none of them has a Twitter or a Snapchat account. A few have an Instagram but they're into photography proper and not taking selfies or photos of their lunch. If you understand how generations work you'd, first off, understand that Gen Y grew up with the internet, where as Gen Z was born into it's hay day. Another interesting fact about generations is that I'm a Gen X, even though I'm born in 91. Because siblings are always part of the same generation and because I have 2 siblings born several years before me our average age is before 1990 making us all Gen X. Because I, like my brother and sister, was raised in a house where most Gen X people would have lived in. With a misunderstanding of the internet and a lack of access to new technologies. This is also compounded as, unless your parents had obscure timing (being old parents or premature parents) your generation is actually dictated by your parent's generation. Finally generations are mostly a way of stereotyping people based on when they were born. At a certain point any person will "give up" on new technologies, throw up their hands with "I don't understand these new things" and this is what cements you to be a part of the previous "generation" the difference between a Gen Y and a Gen Z is if the Gen Y person is at the state of "I'm comfortable using my texting, who needs snapchats or discord" But I know Gen X (like legitimate older people not people on the edge like me) that are even more described by your stereotype of Gen Z than actual kids born into Gen Z. As a millennial, this is how I see the differences between us and Gen Z. Millennials are the disillusioned and fatalist generation. We were raised in a time of hope and given instructions how to reach that dream, then when we did the things, everything collapsed. We were called entitled and should be grateful to have any job, so we did. We took on 2-3 jobs just to scrap by. We banded together, shared what we had, and accepted that everything was fleeting, so try to find small joys in the moment. Which is why we're apparently killing every market out there. We're patient and understanding, because we look at the person across from us and see ourselves— sure that the waiter, the cashier, the uber driver, etc aren't where they expected to be either. Gen Z, however, was born in this shit storm, so I see them as the realist generation. They look at how things are and know if they don't do anything, the shit storm is only going to get worse. They're more tolerant of what makes everyone different, supportive of new ideas no matter where they come from, and give a big "fuck you" to anyone that tells them they're too young to do/know anything about the real world. They look at the raging debt millennials run around with, see how well the "normal" route worked for us, so look at a new path for solutions. They're accused of the instant gratification generation, but really, they're the "why wait?" generation. If you have a good idea, an amazing opportunity, a chance to make change, then do it! Whereas millenials see failure as affirmation that everything is horrible and nothing will ever change, I see Gen Z pick themselves up, dust themselves off, and go, "Well, that didn't work. Let's try something else." What this video described as impatience among the Gen Z when something doesn't work, I see as a generation that doesn't accept that it's just the way things are. If it's broken, then fucking fix it! Bottom line, both our generations get shit on and told we're the problem. That we're entitled and selfish, but we're neither. We're just a bunch of people trying to figure out how to survive in this world that was created for us.

RobynMost pathetic piece of text that I have ever read.First you say ”’we’re too obedient and doing as we’re told’ and you want to see rebels hoping Gen Z would get to ‘do it’ Then you contradictory say how boomers trash millennials, supposedly for exposing their wars, xenophobia, fucking up the environment and the economy for everyone - which is an actual demand for change.Millennials get shit from boomers because they don’t like the change that they see, boomers are sociopaths and have lived their entire lives selfishly shitting over everything and everyone and when some people say ”dur, millennials whine, while gen z just shuts up and gets shit done (which isn’t true since there is absolutely no evidence for that, they are self-absorbed and remind me of boomers)”. Shutting up and ‘getting shit done’ is exactly the opposite of rebelling, but being compliant to an unfair and hostile environment that the boomers have created and are still clinging onto it when nobody but them wants to live in that kind of world.	Nobody, Xenophobia	Age - Youngsters, Nationality - General	2/177	1.13

What luxury are you even talking about?People these days cannot afford housing, education, a simple lifestyle. Your parents have bankrupted the country, they have invested absolutely nothing into the country but indebted it for everyone else. Vast majority of young people today will have debt well into their 50’s and 60’s and that’s only even if it goes well for them, and boomers are going to be left off with property that nobody can/wants to buy and then they will keep blaming everyone else when they also will be the cause of collapsing estate market in 15 years.Even ’ highly professionals’ today have a hard time saving not only for a property, but for a liveable independent lifestyle. Purchasing power of salaries is down, massive debt means retirement plan is also not happening. That’s where it will completely crush the economy. Rachel T Not really. Just because you're young doesn't mean that you haven't had problems in your life. I guess I'll talk from experience. I was abused by a parent when I was just a little kid, and taught that I was nothing . Then I was mercilessly bullied by not only other students, but by my teacher who hated me for my mental disabilities, causing me to go through a period of depression and suicidal thoughts. The majority of middle school was just me becoming sadder and sadder, and realizing how horrible the world really was. But eventually I managed to pick myself up, and am optimistic for the future. My optimism is based on my experience of things eventually getting better, and my mindset of trying new things when your original plan didn't work is me trying to pave a better future for myself. And it's not that I blindly think that things are going to be perfect and happy, it's just that I want to work hard so that I can have a somewhat decent life. This is actually pretty accurate for the millenials and gen z'ers I know. I'm a millenial and my sister is a gen z, and the differences on life outlook and multitasking are spot on. I know people get confused when they hear millenials are really that old , but really, we are. The last of us graduated high school in 2012-2013. After that point, the technology industry changed the way people after that looked at life, that's for sure!	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/78	1.282

Millenials: 1980-2000Gen Z: 2000-2020A lot of ppl do not realise most millennial are older now and thats why they struggle to find good jobs and lasting happiness in life bc theyre older and know their baby boomer parents fucked it up for them. Also, it makes no sense for the dates you chose. A generation takes time, it has to be more than 15 or so years for it to actually count. If you counted every 15 or less years it would make too few people part of one generation thus minimalizing the need for generations. It more sense to have it as increments of 20 or so, especially considering that most people raised from 1980-2000 grew up on the same/similar historical events. Really generations are about the historical events in society that you grew up and, thus, how they affected your growth into middle age . No one past 2000 has experienced anything in history like what ppl born from 1980-2000 have thus the break has to begin after 2000 and not mid 90s. Ppl born after 2000 also experienced a more technology based life compared to those 1980-2000 which furthers the point that the break must begin there.	Age	Age - General	1/201	0.498

Funny how rich white people are more for communism/socialism, but the working class (lower-mid classes) are more for capitalism.Capitalism gives all people equity, while the other political systems give a false narrative of "equality". You should do research, the information is out there. Btw I am not rich, but I am a white man... Which has nothing to do with the level of money I make (28k a year in southern california, which is pretty garbage considering I take care of 2 people as well as myself).Capitalism gives EVERYONE regardless of race , creed, or sex an opportunity to become rich.I'd recommend taking a political science class (find one as un-biased as possible) as well as a economics class... Ditch the gender studies, it won't do anything for you except teach you how to whine about false oppression.Or you can go to a trade school and make way more than myself and 99.99 of those who have bachelor degrees. christ, the last intelligent gen he says.. your intellect isn't exactly being challenged when you live in the economically unrealistic and unsustainable era of post-ww2 western society. where everybody was living on easy street for a third of their annual income as just a local salesman or factory worker even. loose statistic, but true and relatively accurate. if anything, the baby boomer generation was the lazy one, with their heads up their privileged asses, who pushed all their children into a rapidly changing tomorrow they naively thought was going to be exactly like yesterday. yeah, real intelligent display. on easy mode to boot. arrogant imbeciles. lmao. not all of you, of course. but many it seems. but i'm being harsh. can you blame early farmers of the American southwest for causing the dust bowl with what was not known at the time to be destructive and unsustainable farming practices? no, they didn't know any better because they couldn't have. but the second they rise from their graves and start talking down to me about my actions in a Brave New World they had the luxury of not ever having to grapple with... oh hey, and btw. you wouldn't need to apologize for your broken English if you got up off your lazy, foreign, culturally-entitled, fat ass and made an academic effort to improve it. or are you just commenting from bumfuck? if you are, don't respond. i don't give a shit about your outsider opinion in that case. have a good one, jack	Fat	Physical Identity - Physical Features	1/253	0.395

+Indeed Milord yeah but a lot of the things that ruined the easiness for the baby bloomer generation were (are) policies that millennials and generation z people uphold or support. For example, the push to have college payed more by the government has increased tuition for private colleges by an estimated average 60 and up to 90. Also your point about baby bloomers making a lot of money off of easy jobs? There is a non-degree job shortage right now because everyone wants to go to college. In the U.S there is an estimated 30,000 non-degree jobs that pay over 50,000 a year (I think, I can't remember the right number).p.s. I am a gen z. Please don't judge me based on my age . hmm. that is right. socialism is a beautiful idea but it puts massive strains on resources already spread thin as is. especially considering our colossal defense budget which can't even have an accurate figure placed on it. brings to mind how you hear many express concern that socialism seems to work well for smaller first world nations but is a logistical nightmare to pull off for a superpower. as per our relatively amateur but rapidly advancing technology and infrastructure, at least.but yep, those job/income stats sound about right. not very much opportunity for the lay man nowadays. its just... whenever one contemplates not the difference in values between Capitalism and Socialism but the difference in implications between the two, the scales of justice tip undoubtedly in favor of Socialism. but then there is realism to consider. if it can't be pulled off economically, then it can't be the answer. and then I'm reminded of Voltaire's Candide. and how the Catholic Church of the Medieval period made it a standard to preach to the peasantry of the time that 'the world you live in now is the best possible world. so stop complaining.' yeah. it's a pickle for sure. but color me a special snowflake when i say i don't swallow the rich man's pills and propaganda.but i appreciate your thoughts, supposed z-brother. Too much generalization on each generation. The older part of any generation is vastly different from the younger part of that generation, and is a problem with having 15 years or more belonging to the same general generation. I'm 33, and I have more in common with views of the previous generation than what you say millennials are. Also, preferring to work in teams or solo? That is not a generational thing, its a personality thing. My younger cousins all love working in teams and such because it means the work can be spread out and if they don't want to work hard they don't need to since someone else will pick up the slack. While I love working by myself since if I don't get the work done, it's on me, if it's done, then it's because I did it. It's not a generation thing, but rather more of how people were raised and how their personalities are. Also, saying don't focus on the years too much. That's a bad idea. People are 100 confused by what is a millennial and what is gen Z because no one can agree on the generation years and names. Like, if you go by the years given, then Gen Z is responsible for the huge spike is current school shooting and the trashing of out constitution on college campuses, yet that is all being blamed on millennials by the media. Millennials by you're given range would have us out of any type of schooling except for going for doctorates. Also, lumping Gen Z like that when the youngest is what, 12 or 13. Kids just hitting puberty don't really factor into stuff like this and comparing generations isn't something viable to do until the entire generation should be in the workforce and government. Also multitasking is a myth, and isn't actually possible to do. You can rapidly change your attention from 1 task to another, but that does not make you more efficient or better at any task you are currently doing. In fact, it makes you worse at all tasks you are trying to complete. It was scientifically proven years ago that a very very small number of people could truly split their attention equally and still maintain 100 efficiency, or close to it, while doing more than 1 task at a time. In the work place, I'd rather have someone who is putting 100 of their attention into their job and not someone who thinks they can carry conversations, work and do something else at the same time. A better video would have compared Gen X to Millennials since both are actual adults, both generations have had time to make their mark in the world. But in reality, the best is comparing the older part of a generation to the younger half of the generation and seeing how vastly different they are and then figuring out this generation shit is stupid and needs to end. The Millennials are less optimistic because we remember how it was before 9/11... GenZ never got to experience that. It honestly makes me sad. Like, I can remember CLEARLY walking through Penn Station without seeing military guys holding AR15s every 10 feet... GenZers, it's just always been that way. Millennials are an interesting generation and I'm so glad I am an older one, because I had a 100 "offline" childhood, and then the internet got SUPER popular when I was in middle school - prime socialization age. I'm thankful for that. Best of both. However, I do think it's super interesting how, because we spoke on, and depended SO SO SO MUCH on AIM and MySpace and original-texting to communicate, 100 written text, Millennials are more terrified of face to face, or even phone, conversations than GenZers (who grew up playing chatroulette and camming with rando's in Russia as tweens LOL.. kidding, but you know what I mean).... like, they probably don't even know, but that was a big thing when I was in HS and college, how my generation was scared of talking on the phone with strangers and didn't feel confident unless it was a typed conversation. It was an actual concern LOL. I mean, think about it, "video tech" as it is now - where you can easily video chat on wifi or LTE.. or even if you go back to when you could only do it on Wifi.... that's only been a thing for what, like 5-10 years? And even webcams and skype wasn't REALLY like something you'd casually use until I was out of college (2008ish).... it was JUST becoming big, and like chat roulette and those kinds of sites... but kids who were born in the late 90s or early 2000s... they were still kids when all that got popular... They grew up video chatting their grandparents, or friends from Summer camp who lived far away, and strangers too.... We didn't have that, and it's so interesting to me how that came back around. IDK it's just interesting to me that even though they're even MORE technologically dependent than we are, as this video said, they're more open to face to face interaction, and may have found the perfect balance between the two. I wonder if this will be a point of contention when millennials are bosses over genZers in the workplace eventually (or which has already started). Probably not actually, cause not like they'd CARE about texting with us, they just wouldn't mind talking on video or phone either. They say anything that existed before you were around 7, you think of as simply something that IS (like think of how you think of.. what's a good one for both generations?... ok think of the microwave; You never stop and go, "Wow... it is really something how quick this heats up food!" LOL It just is something you've always had. Anything after around age 7, you consider "technology". Basically, if you can clearly remember being a thinking human when it was invented. A good one for this that'll make GenZer's laugh - "Tivo" or DVR. I can remember so clearly when that was invented, and remember writing, and still have, in my HS journal, "OMG! TV that you can pause and stuff? What will they think of next LOL?! But srsly that is so cool." Hahahahahaha.....	Age	Age - General	2/563	0.355

A 4-year college degree isn't worth the paper it's printed on anymore. Unless you're looking to be a dr, attorney, engineer, etc etc, you're better off going to either a community college or a VOTECH. Depending on the skill you learn, most VOTECH education pays for itself in 3-5 years. I dropped out of 4-year college after the 2nd year because it was so dumbed down and I had no need for (radical feminist) Women's Studies or Sex Week. Most of the kids were really lost, too young to make such a big decision about their lives, and none of us gained any real marketable skills. After that I went to an EA (executive assistant) VOTECH and got hired before even finishing my finals. I ended up completely paying it off in 2 years, not to mention doing work that I love. In the 70's to 80's, there was crime and drugs, the U.S was dangerous because you could die at any moment and child kidnappings were on the rise. Just look at how many dead bodies of kids kidnapped in the 70-80's are found nowadays! Back then race wars were still being dealt with because it wasn't so long ago that segregation was demolished, most of you would have different views on your friends and family members than you would now!Not to mention interracial relationships were still a sort of taboo that could change how people thought of you! Sure, things might not be going so well now, but let's just appreciate what we have and how far we've come:*Gay relationships and marriage is legal now, which in the 70's-80's were still frowned upon*Our relations with other countries are getting better*Domestic abuse isn't very high and people actually speak out about what's happening*Kids are better at defending themselves from attackers and kidnappers than back then*And we celebrate our differencesThings are getting better, even with a few step backs; lets just leave things to the way they are! This video became white noise to me the moment it started to lose so much sense between two generations, halfway through (maybe even before that point) once my brain started to think about either both generations, or myself, and that they kept using percentages as a reliable mark with no given source. I knew this video was going to be blatant garbage. It is made up. It's for businesses and stuff to get a general idea of the characteristics of the people they're trying to market to. Not everyone will fit their generation's stereotypes. It's not meant to be used like this at all. The way it works, it's possible to have a parent and their child in the same "generation." So as you can see, it's pretty arbitrary when it comes to individual use. It's just a way of envisioning data on all people in an approximate time frame, and it's far from precise. The cut-offs will stabilize more as time goes on, but since the generational transition is ongoing, we don't yet have the benefit of hindsight to help classify people based on exact dates/landmarks. It is all made up. Baby boomers was a thing because there was a clear increase in births after WW2 and there were big differences when that generation came of age in the 60s and 70s compared to their war time parents. I was born in January of 1996.... I have always considered myself generation Y for many reasons. It has always been my understanding that generation Y stopped in June 96' and generation X started from there on! I was also raised by " old fashioned" parents, therefore I was expected to be more mature than my age ! That maturity would put me farther into the relm of generation Y. On the other hand, I had my first computer at a mere five years old , & I take advantage of anything on the internet I can! I feel like some of us that are right on the cusp, can get either the worst or best traits from both sides... That all depends on how you view those traits! Well I'm a multidimensional being that has gone far beyond these conceptions as my soul is far older than the majority of any generation. Gen Z has mad potential for innovating the world, why Millenials have mad potential to aid in the cause by making changes through the society at large and structures of local and world politics. Millenials will be the mystic healers of the future, and Gen Z will find themselves trapped in very mazes they create and the virtual realities of which they resonate and come from. But the parents of Gen Z will breed and raise and teach some of greatest geniuses ever to walk this land as they will start from young age . Millenials are more the understanding and usher in the knowledge of the other dimensionsalities, while Gen Z is the actual expression and beings of those other dimensionslities. Its going to happen, because technology and children growing up together. You cant change that, stop complaining. Also there isnt a specific age that tells you who's this generation and who's that generation cause according to this video I'm a GenZ although I know both sides of having no business with technology and technology growing. I was born in early January 1980. I always thought I was Generation X. I look it up and it says early-to-mid 1960s to the early 1980s. And I miss the millennial mark about a year or 2. I was 14 years old when I started to hear about the internet in 1994. I didn't get a home computer until around 1997. I didn't get the internet until around 1999 or 2000. Though back then it was dial up. When I was a kid in the 80s I had video games to play with. I personally don't think young kids should have smart or cell phones. I guess I'm one of the people who the gen Z represent is based on. At least my blue hair and tattoo would agree with that. But I also don't see what's exactly Hipster about it. Weren't hipsters the one who always wanted to be individual so much? Coloured hair these days isn't rare, same goes for tattoos. I think they rather chose this representation because it's a summary of things more likely to be seen in Gen Z. We don't worry that much about dying our hair. We don't think everyone with tattoos is a criminal, people can just wear what they want without getting judged (And no not like Hipster judged but more like "if she has blue hair she's probably a hobo punk and can't work").In my parents generation, a tattoo would easily ban you from most work environments and coloured hair was even wilder. i don't think generations should be defined by precise time increments. like i was born in 86 so i'm a millennial? my childhood was much more gen X than someone born even 5-10 years after me. so much happened and changed through my childhood that i don't think it's accurate to lump me in the millennial category. i didn't even have a cell phone til i was 19. i didn't have a smart phone til i was 26, granted it was a lil late but a lot of people my age didn't have them still. in my early 20s you thought nothing of someone asking to borrow your phone because they didn't have one or they'd left it at home. of course there is more to it but just having cell phones and smartphones at a young age basically defines you as a person, being that your experiences with constant contact with others (good and bad) and access to information 24/7 changes how you live day to day. i'm only 31 but feel like screaming '...back in my day' to people who are in their early-mid 20s now. they are so different.i was lucky as a kid we did always have a home computer and internet because my dad was a nerd lol but it was super rare, if we had school projects we used to have to go to the library and look up stuff in books. google didn't even exist til at least when i was in high school or maybe after i graduated ('04) .. youtube didn't exist til i was in college.. myspace was the social media of choice and it was way better than facebook. If you were born in 86 there's a good chance you're Gen X, I'm Gen X and born in 91. If your parents were a part of the Jones Generation (Or Boomers II) then you're probably a Gen X, unless they were considered old when they started their family. Cutoff for that is 1990, but since I had 2 siblings born before the cutoff and I did grow up with them I'm still a Gen X, the Invalid Generation, The Lost Generation, The Orphan Generation, or the Dropout Generation named so because most families were dysfunctional, usually divorced, abandoned children or parenting took a back seat for any number of reasons. Not exactly a Generation name that's less of an insult than Millennial. The only way you can skip a generation with your siblings is if you were raised isolated from them. The cut off lines for the generations have always been quite hazy and based on approximated cultural shifts. Labels only serve to limit, pitting generations against eachother has been going on since the dawn of time and it's very small minded. Baby boomers criticize and blame our generations but then so did their parents and grandparents. Not to mention blaming future generations is quite narcissistic and serves no positive purpose. They'll just think we're assholes, rebel more, and still do their own thing in the end. I'm technically gen z myself, older gen z. Didn't get a cellphone till I was 16 and it was a flip phone while my friends had iphones. I don't like social media, I think it's desensitizing and projects a false sense of ego. Maybe it's because I'm not American and this sounds like a very narrow research, but this video sounds like poorly put together stuff found in whatever articles Google pointed to. Most of this things, apart from obvious, are only signs of age and maturity. The biggest flaw here is the optimism bit. I'm GenZ, I have a few older friends, and let me tell you: most of us are not that optimistic at all (that contradicts the bit about giving second chances to stores and being tolerant - you can't be tolerant if you expect the error to happen again).Our multitasking and short attention span are not just provided by tech, but a bigger level of anxiety. Every generation is more anxious than the previous one. We think about money because we've seen the economy collapse right about the time when people starting asking "what are you going to do with your life?". Have you ever read any Tumblr post?And, come on, who the hell is 23 and grew up with smart tech? Older GenZ still lived the days where everything - or most of it - was analog. Some of us had Nintendos! This video didn't even touch on nostalgia, politics and worldview - which differs a lot and it's the only thing that's worth talking about.By the way... Not much for infographics here, that's basic AE/Illustrator animation.	Age	Age - General	1/232	0.431
1980? What a ridiculously wide range of years to be making generalizations about. People who are about to hit 40 are very different from people in their early 20s, who are of course also very different from preteens. It's silly to me that they've made a video about the stereotypes of each generation and ignored the fact that there is no clear dividing line between them, and the fact that a lot of these differences are mainly due to how old you are, not which generation you fall into. I was born in 1994 and relate to most of the gen z stuff far more than millennial, even though I am a millennial. I grew up impoverished and didn't get internet access for the first 10 years it was available and I think I got a cell phone when I was around 15. All my friends had gotten used to having to manually type things on flip phones without a pull out keyboard or a screen keyboard and I just skipped ahead and never had that issue. I remember MSN, Quizilla and Geocities once being the big things and then becoming relics. I have a lot of hope for the future, but I have that hope because I am nonbinary and have been out since 2011 (when I was 16). I felt so alienated and different in high school and everyone thought I was making up who I was despite that not being the case. I was trying to explain it to people and signing petitions for Facebook to let us pick different options for our gender on the site and when that finally became acknowledged. I feel like a bunch of progress went into hyperdrive then. Things are not as bad while still being shitty these days. But considering I used to think I wouldn't live to adulthood, let alone see a world where the average English speaker has a basic concept of what " transgender " means/has heard the term before... I'm a teacher so I had do to a bunch of research on generation. It is common to identify with another generation than the one you belong to. The generation of your parents (if they are quite old or super young) for example. Or if you are on „the edge' of two generations. That's all generations are, ways to stereotype people. It's used as market research so you can figure out the best way to market to a particular age group based entirely on stereotypes. The problem is Gen X, Gen Y and Gen Z are really the poster children for what exactly the generations are used for outside of the marketing planning. Making fun of the newest generations. Why do you think Gen Y was given a silly name like "Millenial" and used as an insult by Gen Jones and Gen X. Gen X wasn't called gen X because there was a lettering system involved, it was called Gen X because... you can't really call it the orphan generation. Jones generation was busy getting divorced, remarried, and abandoning their kids so most gen X's were kids from broken families and even if they weren't this was during a time where parents were typically... terrible at being parents anyway. Thus called Gen X "dropout generation" and "lost generation" never really caught on because they were too offensive to actually use. Gen Y and Z came around because they needed a working name. (Just like the Jones generation was called Boomers II at first)Gen Z and Y's difference really is that Y grew up with the internet, and gen Z was grew up in it's hay day. "Millennial" is a shortened and dumbbed down word replacing "Millennium Generation" to make it a more fun insult to sling at people. Well, this was interesting. Although the same pattern has always repeated itself: older generations are always worrying more than younger, this is due to life experience. And younger generation has always been more adjustive and getting hang on the newest stuff than the old ones. I have mixed feelings about these claims e.g. 13 is really old to get a first phone, I think the proper age is more like 8. Working alone vs in a group depends on the task. I enjoy the films in theater because at home I have not had a big screen since 2005. And yes, I'm old , born in the 70's . Good video.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	4/110	3.636

Most of you could not be more wrong and don't understand how generations are defined. A generation or birth cohort are a group of people who were raised in a specific span of years which lead them to have similar experiences and therefore similar values and outlooks on the world due to their experiences. In the case of Gen Y, the hint is in the name. Millennials are those who were coming of age around the start of the new millennium (year 2000), so this generation would start in the early 1980s since Generation X started in the early 60s and ended in the early 80s. A generation is not only defined by time but by world events - the best example being Baby Boomers because they tie in with the end of WW2 (1945/6-1964). Due to rapidly changing technologies and political landscapes via globalization now, there tend to be slight overlaps, and generations tend to vary from 15-20 years. Gen Y is shorter than prior generations because technological advances came along at exponential rates, which is why even older and younger millennials had different experiences growing up. The oldest Millennials are almost 40 now with the youngest already in their 20s, so there's no way that you're a millennial if you're a teenager or child now. The media was just so focused on Generation Y that they ignored Gen Z longer than expected.	Age	Age - General	1/234	0.427
Let's say it one more time to be clear: a generation is based on date of BIRTH , which is a unambiguous term, not "coming of age " or other vague term.	Age	Age - General	1/31	3.226

It sure does. :(Aww, Lilith Scyther, speak for yourself. Most people I know have a considerable amount. :(And can't find work after the degrees, either. I really wish we all hadn't been told as kids that we had to go to university to get a job, that it's normal to go extremely in debt for education, and that we'd all land great, high-paying government positions the moment we'd graduated. I know now that all those things are lies, but when you're a teen and every adult's telling them to you like they're the most obvious things in the world – ESPECIALLY parents and career counsellors – you believe them. They screwed us over pretty badly. sigh I know a lot of them were well-meaning... maybe university really was a quick path to a great job back when they were our age... but I DO wonder how much those counsellors were being paid to sell us an extremely expensive education product. : A lot of us got sucked in on lies to buying something we didn't need or want, and the debt is all we have to show for it. I feel like I've been defrauded. And I feel like an idiot for falling for it. I had some savings – about $8000 – when I graduated high school, because I was always good with money. Now, I can't remember the last time I've had a single dollar to my name... and yeah, it's stressful. Every month, I'm not certain I'll be able to pay the rent, while eating requires I go even further into debt.And I'm one of the lucky ones who does have a job (my city's got an insane unemployment rate – Canada's highest), albeit it's part time and always seems to be cutting my hours. :(I don't mean to complain, but sometimes it's nice to get that off the chest, eh? And besides, I want to prevent Gen Z from being sold that same lie that university is some kind of magic key to a perfect future. It's not. It's useful if you need it, or will find 4 years of study fun and can afford it. If not... consider very carefully whether it's the right choice for you. Don't put too much stock in anecdotes, but... personally, I noticed my college-educated friends are doing a lot better than us university graduates. And many people who didn't bother with advanced education are doing just fine too, if not better (via trades or the military). There are a lot of university degrees on the market, and having one just isn't enough anymore to make you stand out to an employer... so only get one if you want it, or if you know something you want to do will require it. And if you do go that route, start doing extra work (volunteering, learning skills, networking...) to differentiate yourself from the other grads, starting day one of your degree.	Age	Age - General	1/494	0.202

+Carlo A Also, the millinneal generation experienced higher rate of college admissions. This was the era when almost everybody went to college. However, this generation also experienced the Great recession and the consequences of international affairs, 9/11, Iraq war, multiculturalism, the first black president. While this happened, there was cynicism growing from the opposition, the older generation, the Alt-Right movement who you now see in power, and the republican base who point to the failures of "multiculturalism", intellectualism, Obama, etc. of this generation as their narrative. Yet, they do not understand that the millinneal generation held off employment for college education, experienced recession during university studies which cut off a lot of funding, university studies devalued, and were not employed or underemployed. What happens next. When post-grad millineals find out that their education was devalued, not relevant to industry and employment, and never held a job until 22 or 23, millineals met with the previous generation mentality that they were supposed to take care of themselves at 18, have a job at that age , have a home by 24, get married, have children, this old mentality becomes the propaganda of the previous generation to denigrate the failure of millinneals without understanding that the previous generation set the foundation for this failure. +Spect8orSpecter The recession and War destroyed the millineal generation, which were considered the generation that was going to be admitted into college almost 100 rate, (this became true), meaning that it was foretold that this generation was going to be the most educated, the pioneers of science, democracy, education, etc. All of the good. What happens? This generation enters college, the recession happens, all universities nationwide cut their research and programs, students get devalued education, taught only basics but not the essentials for industry and research. The recession left many of this generation without employment, living with parents, and hence losing competitiveness in employment despite their college degrees. Now, older generations are so ideologically brainwashed by idyllic America that they do not see the causes of why the millineal generation is the "loser", the despairing, and the snowflake generation. Generation Z entered college with optimism because universities reinstated full curriculum and research, and hence their employability was better. Hence, why generation Z is optimistic and now will accomplish what their older siblings were prophesized to do. On top of that, generation Z were also hired right after high school in contrast to millineal generation, and hence why generation Z has the same mentality as the 50's idyllic Americana of individuality and right-wing economic policies. Generation Z will also be the most Right Wing, ultra-Nationalist, preservers of unrestrained Capitalism, and will also be the ideologues that will make Neo-liberalism the Law of Human Organization for centuries to come. In my opinion, it seems like this whole video is just an attempt to market a product based on flattery towards their primary target group. It appears to be one drawn out click bait commercial. The reality is, every person regardless of age , status, race , location, etc..... all have a unique and important, worthwhile potential available in them and offer value. Unfortunately, many people just aren't aware of how to access that potential because of either a lack of learning opportunities, fear, lack of support from other people (who, consequently are living an identical struggle, so the cycle continues), and in a very, very large way, social conditioning (from sources just like this one). Life is a flow of balance and perspective. You can't have old without young, lazy without hard working, certain without uncertain. So it is with everything, it would be impossible to realize the concept of one thing without it's opposite and in that way value and importance comes from everything and everyone, regardless of what year they were born or who others might erroneously classify them as. The reason Gen Z are more conservative is as kids and teens we don't really see any consequences saying what we think. So we just always tell the truth. And if someone says something that we think is wrong, we don't say 'well we should try understanding' we just say that's stupid. Millennials are always worried what people will think if they speak their mind. So they go with the crowd. Gen Z don't mind standing out. You can decide which is better, and just so it's clear I am conservative and Gen Z, so maybe I'm biased, but I'm telling you how I feel so you kinda know what our thinking process is. But I just don't agree that because one person wants something different or says things are bad we should just believe them because of their race, gender, ethnic background etc. It's hard to look up to Millennials when the majority you see Online are crying about things that don't really seem worth crying about and seem like they just want attention. Kids don't look up to cry babies they look up to people who are tough and just deal with life. That's why we look up to the Gen X and older crowd, because Millennials seem like cry babies. Also before anyone says I'm racist or whatever, I am part Japanese, part Portuguese, part Filipino, and part Irish. I don't get offended if somebody who isn't Japanese is wearing a kimono, in fact I love that. I love my culture and love seeing others who love it so much they are embracing it. It's like people are looking for things to get sympathy from. I know a bunch of Japanese people who feel the same as I do and most of them are full Japanese. Unless you are like Logan Paul and are gonna paint on the Japanese flag, run through the streets, and harass people then I'm cool with you. I understand that most of the whole generation stuff is supposed to be based on age difference. But I'm also sure this is simply because Gen Z is so young. A couple things; I think gen z is too young to be making generalizations on their outlook on life and what they find important. Not even 5 years ago, almost all these same "Gen Z" traits were being attributed to millenials, so I think most of this can be chalked up to age and maturity level more than what generation someone is born in. Second, when you look at the science, multitasking is literally impossible. The brain doesn't have the capability to focus on 2 things at once, you're just switching focus back and forth between the two things which often equates to lower comprehension of topics, reduced quality of work, and reduced productivity. Gen X here (43). Gen Z are starting to go to college and they are way better the millenials. They work hard and have jobs in high school. I have high hopes for Gen Z. Millenials do nothing to save money. They do not do yard work. Fix anything or do shit. They even hire housekeepers. Go to home depo and try to find anyone under 40 there. All of my customers who are millenials they have jobs like graphic design or designer. I laugh at the men who look like hipsters with their tatoos and fierce hair and beard. +Jordan Moch I'm sure you could find a few that where cynical at the time due to personal experience or that just being their personality. Age	Age - General	1/58	1.724
+Jordan MochBecause people want convenience and parents give technology to kids to sedate them at a stupidly early age . They become accustomed to a sedentary lifestyle. Moreover, evidence has shown that doing so also reduces people's attention spans severely and even cannibalize certain areas of the brain. If any generation from any time had this technology, the same would happen. Also, think about how this generational garbage isn't the same in all places, not even in just America. Think of the Amish: do you think those kids are anything like millennials or people from generation Z?And it's not like the same trike you hear from older generations about newer ones hasn't been said through the ages-similar comments about apathetic youth have been said since ancient Greece .	Age	Age - General	1/129	0.775

Squeaky Deeds Done Soap CleanYou mentioned that giving electronics to anyone at an early life stage can drastically affect their personalities later on in their life, which is interesting. You claimed it negatively effects the brain by "cannibalizing" it. It would also be interesting to show me this evidence that this happens. So how exactly does being exposed to this sedentary lifestyle as a child necessarily bad? The Amish? From what I know, that demographic is just too small in the US to affect generations or even public policy. I mean consider the history here; about 150 to 200 years ago the Amish was more of a sizable population to influence culture at that time, same with other immigrants or sects at that time, due primarily to agrarian living standards and the mixing of European ethnic religion practices. What I'm trying to say is consider history. It wasn't until the 1950's - 2000's that urban sprawl began to take form with people moving to the suburbs and metropolitan cities meaning different living standards. Which in effect began to secularize America. There are indeed immigrants today from South Americas and the Third World at arguably considerable heights like European immigrants of 100-150 years. This is most likely affecting the Millennial and Z Generation. It's all about timing, immigration, and location.I very much agree with you on the on last sentences. BUT you realize if you re examine, look carefully throughout history, you noticed about 40 and 50 years ago a generation of teenagers and young adults who were Baby Boomers at the time were derided in the youth. Fast forward about 10-20 years (sometime on the 1980's), Generation X comes up. Who do you think they hated? The Greatest Generation who were in their 50's/60's? Nope. The Boomers. This continued on for about 20 more years until the Millennials emerge (2000's) Who do you think they hated? The Gen Xers above them? Nope. The Boomers. The Gen Xers somehow got spared from all this societal blame shifting and scapegoats by the succeeding generations for reasons varied, mainly due to being a "small generation". Yet the Boomers single-handedly have gotten and gets blamed for nearly EVERYTHING.	Ethnic	Ethnicity - General	1/366	0.273

Gen Zs are still living with their parents and and haven't even grown up enough to feel the full weight of what it means to be an adult. Most of them are still waiting for the day they're old enough to buy alcohol . Staying up all night, bumming drinks off their older friends, or getting a fake Id, those are the highlights of their life. Yet, millinials graduated into a depressed economy where college tuition is crazy high, student loan debt keeps pilling on, and companies were letting employees go as opposed to hiring. They now have to compete with seniors in their field with much more experience who were let go from their jobs. How can you even compare the two? I didn't use the internet, because it simply was no use for a young kid. I also clearly remember the shift from 'brick phones' to flip phones to slide phones, I myself had a flip phone until like 7th grade when I updated to a slide phone. And I remember the pure feeling of Panik when you accidentally hit the internet button on your Motorola, cause you thought your parents had to take a loan in order to pay for that shit. When I was young no one used dvds or cds to a large extent, and I remember how annoying cassettes were when you accidentally pulled out the tape, and having kids movies like'in a land before time' on vhs, alongside some weird fitness/boxing video of a man in tight tights. I also remember borrowing my older sisters disc man when self made music cds became a thing. I maybe didn't still use it in my late teens. But I still grew up on it. ICQ was the shit when I started using the internet.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/216	0.463

But I definitely remember when VHS stopped being popular and the rise of the DVDs . I am not saying that CDs and DVDs didn't exist when I was born I am just they weren't that common place until the mid 2000s . Also how entitled are you think the you know everyone's experience ?! Maybe you grew up with a higher socioeconomic background than I or other people sharing thier experience which why you were exposed to technology before it was that common place? jermaine tobin well I did grow up in Germany, maybe we were a couple of years later, the point is, that people like me who were born late 90 till early 2000 didn't grow up with smartphones etc. We still saw a transition to modern tech. I mean I still own some of my old phones/cassettes so I don't think I have 'wrong memory's' in that area. There is probably a difference where and in what social class you grew up, and in german 'upper middle class' kids born in 99 did not grow up emerged in tech, but rather with similar experiences as millennials. I was born in 1984. I remember what it was like being safe everywhere, actually having privacy, and the worldwide web didn't exist. Almost nobody you knew had a cellphone, and smartphones didn't exist. Texting didn't exist. You had to actually buy a paper map, and know how to read one. Pretty much everyone had manners too. Until I was 6, homosexuals were considered to be mentally ill. Punctuality used to matter too. If you were running late, you couldn't text your friends or family, so you just showed up on time, or people left. Just about everyone was white too. Back then, you could wish people "Merry Christmas", and nobody was offended. A person with a mental disability was simply referred to as "retarded", which really just means their brain is slower than average. Also, when you played sports, everyone kept track of the score, and people would lose, and not get a participation trophy or ribbon. I also remember when they started giving out participation awards. I would purposely throw them in the garbage or smash the trophies right in front of the idiots who gave them to me. See, rewarding someone for failure, used to be an insult, because it was an assumption that you were a sore loser. In junior high, we went to a gun range for a field trip. Really, if you were born after 1990, you basically just missed the greatest decades in human existence to be a kid. i'm generation z, born in 2000, but grew up with a TON of technological changes going on around me, and a huge amount of changes in terms of social attitudes. firstly- during my time at school, schools have gone from using projectors where you place a piece of paper to be reflected with a bulb, to an electronic, interactive whiteboard- the computers have gone from cream, huge boxes, to slim, sleek screened laptops. recycling was popularised and social issues like gender , sexuality and other things have been explored. i'm not a big user of social media, and the majority of people in my year aren't. the things that have influenced our identity more than having electronic devices around (which, for most people, atleast where i live in a poorer area, crept into the home in around 2009 to 2013) are the development of the things i've mentioned. And just about everything in this video was generalizations and as another comment pointed out is essentially the differences between the older and the younger; not much difference between these generations and separations of generations before the turn of the century. This video is extremely biased and says nothing negative about gen z. You say they multi-task but do they complete their assignments and do it well? You say they want personal space and have a "I can do it alone attitude"; really? Where? Ive yet to meet one that was halfway competent at anything that was not social media related. They dream big and attempt bullshit jobs like "Social Media Influencer" cause they think it has value. 1 make it, 99 fail rate. Gen z does not pay attention and "be in the moment" as a slide in this video suggests. Have you ever tried to employ one? They have no social skills because their lives are online, so face to face communication is very difficult for them to manage; especially if they feel "uncomfortable"; they break apart. This message goes out to everyone here. Think for yourselves; don't let some clickbait video tell you how a random group of people are or 'should' be. I'm a millenial and I sadly see Gen Z falling into the same trap that my generation did. All of this is just marketing crap made to generate views. Don't buy into it, and always think for yourselves, not just for the sake of what's 'popular to like/hate' at any given point in time. Most peoples' critical thinking and observational skills seem to be in the gutter at the moment and it truly scares me. It gives me the feeling that nothing will ever change, even by the time I get to old age. In reality, the things they relate to millenials don't apply to much younger people (I honestly didn't know a single person my age back in school who enjoyed working in groups or didn't at least have a 56k modem unless they were poor, and for those that are group-minded, at the end of the day, humans are social creatures), and I'm sure anyone born as far back as the 70s (Gen X) would be able to relate to a lot of what they said for Gen Z. If anything, I would argue that Gen X was the most individualist of any modern generation, if generations are actually a thing (there is ongoing debate on this). Suffice to say, what is said for Gen Z now is the same stuff that was said about millenials back in the 2000s. I know; I was there. This is how it's always been no matter the generation (damn 60s kids being rebellious, emotional snowflakes), but I think due to overwhelming pressure by mainstream media today (yes, this includes youtube) and social media constantly feeding biased opinons to everyone 24/7, people are less likely to think for themselves now more than ever before. I highly encourage everyone to look into confirmation bias and the barnum effect. It explains very well how videos and articles of this nature operate and why they should always be taken with a grain of salt. Gen Y, you're not special. Gen Z, you're not special. What makes you special is being an individual and staying true to yourself; not according to what some infographic or marketing team says on the internet. Alex Debstepper Think about it.Majoritively, the media is dominated by the left wing (millenials, typically). Not only that but the generations before (of course ones raised in the 80s) are left wing too. The pendulum swings back. Left wing is no longer counter culture anymore. It's part of our culture. And like in the 60s the rebellious counter culture rebels against what has been established for decades. We're just "right wing now"Born in 2000, still in school, do a bit of weed (typical in England) and in the centre. Like classical Liberal or centrist. But more right wing than some of my peers, especially older ones.We're more money orientated and are more inclined to be capitalistic or libertarian, which is fiscally(?) right. We dont disagree with gay marriage but we (more tolerant ones) allow the freedom of religion of others. Christian, Muslim, etc. We're for free speech and anti authoritarian. Kuljin20 im sorry u met some gen z people who are like that. But just bc some r that way doesn't mean every gen z person is like that. Ive been through a lot in my life and there were times where one side of my head was like "why not give up? Ur worthless anyway". But i would tell that side of me to take a hike and i pulled through. I only wish others were more hard working and patient. Not saying im perfect. I struggle with my anger daily as well as other issues. Life is never easy, even when we have peaceful moments. It saddens me that a lot of the kids i met r lazy and easy to give up when they r the future.	Hike	Nationality - Italian	1/130	0.769

Biman kashyap, I'm the same as you I hate seeing people go into relationships that are obviously gonna fail and I hate when people ask other people to date over social media and especially when they barely know the person, but just so you know... I also hate it when people put other people into categories weather they are apart of that group of people or not, your saying everyone in gen z acts the same EXCEPT you. Must be pretty self absorbed. Also we aren't the only generations with fed up relationships. EVERY generation has dumb and smart people. Look around, stop stereotyping people. I feel like when it comes to financial planning and optimism for the future, the reason millennials are more pessimistic is because they were just entering college/becoming adults at the start of the giant recession and felt the aftershocks when trying to enter the minimized job market. That's also why they would prefer to work more collaboratively (traditional office environment), because that was how they grew up learning to be successful. The traditional office environment was appearing to be failing by the time Gen Z came of an age to think about that stuff.	Age	Age - General	1/94	1.064

Somewhat? It really depends. "Baby Boomers" mostly applied to white, male, middle class Americans. Think of the stereotype and then try applying it to a poor black woman . It just doesn't work as well. That wasn't the marketing group with disposable income. The later terms attempt to be more inclusive, and that's kind of what makes them so much less accurate. They attempt to describe a hugely diverse group of people under a single umbrella term. It's no wonder the comment section is full of comments that are essentially, "So this is just about old people vs. young people". That's all that is left and even that is often questionable. whether or not you had a cell phone in high school/early college years seems to be a strongly influential factor. in some rural areas, it wasn't common for high schoolers to have cell phones until like 2004 or 2005. so they coulda been born as late as like 1987 and still living the life that the previous generation grew up with. You know founders of tech companies that were around before these people were even born.... Over all this video was nothing but a elaborate WIX commercial with no solid facts... I mean... 'born in 1980' so a person pushing 40 with baby-boomer parents would be considered a millennial according to this video... its just wrong.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/115	0.87

GenZ are thin skinned and weak. They're accustomed to having a lot, and will raise hell when they don't get their way. I grew up in foster care, and had to learn to make do with a little. I suffered, physically, and emotionally, and I caught Cdiff in my early teens. Now, at 23, I can take so much punishment without batting an eye, and I never get sick. I can get a lot of use from few supplies, and I appreciate what I have. Look, kids shouldn't have to suffer like I did, but unfortunately the world doesn't care. We can't forget the strength it took our forefathers to make this country, and we need to remember that while things can get pretty good, shit happens, and when it does, love AND strength will win the day. Well, I'm in kind-of a weird buffer-zone between the two (born in the year 2000).The first smartphone didn't come out before I was 7, I was born in to a world where forums were still very active all the time everywhere and where people had just gotten the hang of this internet thing, and when I was 7, there was NO WAY I was going on the internet, because around that time, the entire "Dangers of The Scary Internet" bs was a thing.I don't think I got any kind of internet access before I was 9 or 10, and even then, it was super restricted internet, mostly due to paranoid parents, but I doubt I was the only one like this.I don't consider Gen Z to have started properly before maybe around 2006-2007-2008 maybe, because kids born in those years were the first ones I saw using iPads before starting school, and even later years being the first babies I saw getting actual 300 usd iPad 2s with their sticky, shitty little fingers.But looking at the attitude part of this video, I definitely see myself as being both kinda?I don't know, I feel confident in my future plans, and I have some pretty solid ones (studying a school subject that will actually teach me useful stuff etc.)But I'm also definitely not the kind of person to just give up on an online store if they mess it up, but that might be because of my knowledge of how it works and what can go wrong, along with a personality trait. Yeah, seeing how Pew's definitions for Gen X and Millennials are 16-year spans, being 1965-1980 and 1981-1996, we can assume that they'll do the same for Gen Z, with it being 1997-2012. I also find it amusing that you have early '60s babies who want to be Gen X instead of Boomers because they don't want to feel " old ", meanwhile you have late '90s babies who want to be Millennials instead of Gen Z because they don't want to be seen as young and immature. I look at in a much simpler term... If you vividly remember 9/11, Millennial. If it was before your time or the memories are fuzzy at best, Z. Ok... except Gen Z is the most depressed, volatile, Pharma-addicted, un-confident and entitled generation to ever walk the planet. Millennials are confused because we grew up in the days when technology wasn't so pervasive. When we were in our teens, flip phones were just becoming accessible to lower-middle class families. Tablets? More like palm pads and only adults could afford and own these. Laptops? The library is where you went to play runescape in front of a bunch of people you didn't know. Facebook? Nah, try MySpace. Amazon? I think we had Ebay, but I never used it because of all the scammers from Nigeria. Millennials grew up in the guinea pig age of the internet. We knew the difference between the cyber world and the real world. The world was full of magic as a kid because we could be outside enjoying kickball with the neighborhood kids at one point, and inside playing Pokémon on a gameboy after dinner. However, we knew the value and priority of both, and we respected the old traditions passed down to us from generations prior. But Gen z... You can't even get a Gen Z to think about a question without him or her wanting to consult google. They're afraid to communicate their opinions and beliefs for fear of not getting enough 'likes' on their post. Not all Gen Z-ers are bad and vice Vera's for Millenials, but the majority I have met have major issues. Despite this though, the makers of this video definitely allude they are superior. I call BS. You should not present GenZ kids as superheroes.You said some BS about kids being able to multitask basically as many things as they want. The truth of that "fact" is that they can multitask the poo out of anything with a screen. Being able to watch a film, send an email and a text, all while balancing a fidget spinner on each of their toes is not multitasking. It's layering sources of instant satisfaction and seeing what hits first. Then snapchatting about it. But when it comes to sitting down, and unitasking a book, those lovely and useful short attention spans you mentioned impede them from enjoying the experience within.That is, what I think, the greatest danger facing what you call GenZ. Their lives are, more and more, surrounded by the superficial. Social media is basically a superficiality race . The prize for the winner is a perfect online life that doesn't even come close to what is real.You say GenZ prefer to work alone. I say, take away their phone and their WiFi, and leave them alone. The absence of their lifelines instantly causes that person's utility in any given situation to plummet.GenZ lacks individuality and depth is the point. Or at least your description of them does. And if they continually hear really, really smart 5-min video people like you telling them the same rubbish description of how they are. They will end up believing it.But what do you care? All this channel is doing is making that sweet cash off the 2 ads about the same website, which together, I would estimate lasted about one sixth of the entire video.Spare me your flashy animations, tell me where you got your data, and I'll read about it.Because, no matter what generation you are, if you don't read about things you mean to learn, you'll most likely become a stupid donkey. I feel old sometimes when hearing about vines(already dead) or snapchatt (already dead). I think of leaving facebook, but I try to use it to make my own brand and my own community. Im thinking there is a need for a page which looks like a Forum from early 2000s. Where you can have different parts of forums, dedidacted to different topics and conversations. Im thinking combination of Facebook Group and Reddit. Ayone kows of something like that? Nowadays Discord channels are kinda like that, but they dont have Topics only chat rooms that can be used for certain topics. Good point. Younger people in general tend to be more optimistic. I think that when it comes to specific opinions (such as optimism about the future), it would have worked better if millennials and genZ were compared at a same age , like dunno, 18 yo. I think that getting older, millennials have changed their perspective a lot... So it's a matter of age , not of generation. Just my 2 cents	Age	Age - General	2/59	3.39
I have a theory that people that were born after millenials so 99-03 are neither millenials nor genZ,because they grew up with phones and internet but they didn't have smartphones,and they still watched good old classic cartoons even tho they were made in the Millenial times...generation gaps and time is fluid so we can't really say where one began and where one ended 100 exact...but this is just my opinion	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/70	1.429

the thing that bothers me is the multitasking. i hear and see it all the time; people "watching" movies but just really buried in their phones. don't get me wrong, i love drifting away into my phone too sometimes, but when you're watching a movie, you can't focus on it if you're reading a blog post. multitasking, by and large, is ineffective. you'll do 3 things half assedly and accomplish nothing . Don't worry, you can identify as a Millennial. I think the media is too soon identifying Generation Z rather than really considering the experiences that identify both generations. To me, Generation Z is mid 2000s births onwards, so like 2003- or 2004 onwards. I consider people born between 1994 and 2002 to be late Millennials. As long as you remember the 2000s-2010s and the world that that produced and were shaped by it, you are a millennial. As long as you more or less came of age in the 2010s, you are a Millennial. Generation Z will be coming of age and reaching adolescence in the 2020s.	Age	Age - General	2/108	1.852

Alex hey what was the largest slaving network to ever exist and continues to persist to this day? The Arabs? My God your Right. You know that they destroyed some civilizations so thoroughly that the only reason we know they existed is because the Arabs wrote about conquering them. The idea that Western Capitalism and belief systems caused all the horrors of the modern world is a fucking joke when you consider the shit the East was doing. But I guess that white people have to be blamed for the problems of the africans and asians. Did the great empires of old fuck up a lot? Yes most definitely. But they also lead to the rise of modern ideals of equality and tolerance. Apologies if this is rambling and incoherent. That's untrue. The West were it is at today was allowing Communists (The old Soviet Union) to get WWII about 90 won on every front, and then swooping in the last few years to claim victory after everyone else was wiped-out. After that, we were at only 5 of the world's population, using almost 25 of its resources through-out the 1950's and 1960's. BUT our lust for killing and war caused us to spend so much money in Vietnam that we almost went belly-up, so Nixon changed from a hard currency to a fiat one that we can devalue infinitely - so basically we are watering-down everything from food to customer service in an effort to keep the system afloat while the top 1/10th of 1 take half the money in the economy. Capitalism ONLY works when you have people you can exploit, and now the world is tired of our shit, we're on the edge of collapse. "Capitalism is but the gentleman's method of slavery."— Kwame NkrumahThe ONLY hope for America is radical decentralization of wealth and power. Adam Albrec complete bullshit. "Commies did all the work" No they did not. The West kept their industries running allowing them to recover as fast as they did. If the US had not given them the raw mats to build their armed forces and keep them fed then there would have been as many as twice the number of casualties in WW2." Minority using more resources" Boo fucking hoo. Lives and work are not valued equally. I agree that some of the highest paid are getting paid that much only because they write their own paychecks with the tears of their workers but they also typically employ thousands to tens of thousands to a pay cut would barely effect the employees anyways. As well the US is the worlds leading tech giant. Back under the commies in what the West called the USSR there were many antiscience acts done for the sake of the party. More on that relavance in a moment." Fiat currency" Is good. As the world progresses people develop new technologies that change the world. Some inventions are worth more than all the gold in the world. The reason Fiat Currency is a net good is not only due to the fact that there is not enough gold to back all the transactions happening as is but also that new fields of technology are opening up more and more resources which would depreciate the value of the currency like the Spanish Treasure Ships. That is a bad thing dumbass. With affordable space lift that is coming along we can access all the materials of the solar system. What would you value gold at when you can access enough to make everyone solid gold houses. It would end as a fiat currency anyways." Vietnam" Was not our fault. The Korean War, caused by the Reds putting a puppet on the throne, was inverted and done by the West in this instance. The NViets were the ones that started that fight. And resulted in the US not supporting an ally due to internal pressure which resulted in many civilians getting sent to reeducation camps to become good commie dogs for their leaders." Capitalism == Oppression" And Communism isn't? In communist countries you would get imprisoned or killed if, as a farmer, a bad flood destroyed your harvest. Those were actual Police states where wrong think was a crime worthy of torture. At least in the US you can call your leader a bastard and degenerate imbecile and not get dragged away and dealt with while your family watches. Capitalism works well with checks and balances much like politics. And finally some assumptions about you." Complete SJW" Congrats on being a monster who is anti-science, anti-equality, and anti-liberty. You think that a system that promotes efficiency would stoop to mindless villiany, scientific rationale eludes you because you live with your feels over reals, and equality isn't equal because the formerly oppressed group isn't in a position of power. The commies promoted the idea that plants work together to survive which lead to mass famnine and you think that there are people who will work for the betterment of others for no reason other than muh oppression even though you yourself are unwilling to put forth an effort. Competition is a strength and capitalism encourages it. Communism encourages lazyness because why work when you will get the same shit anyways. The commies had to switch to rewarding people for hard work, which sounds oddly capitalist mind you, other wise no one would do anything unless	Commie, Communist, Race	Ideological and Political Identity - General, Ethnicity - General	3/638	0.47

Ah ... sorry but "Millennials" are (and should be) people born in a time that the Millennia was a major part of their upbringing. Meaning they were born in 1990 or later and were 10 years old (plus) when the year 2000 hit. People born in 1980 lived through 20 years of their life before the Millennia, they didn't experience any of the life or technology associated with "Millennials" until they were already adults.University dinosaurs can put whatever label they want on whatever year, it doesn't mean it makes any sense. Same here. I believe that the similarities in ideology are not necessarily about your age group, as much as about how early on you were exposed to computers and internet. Millenials who got Internet in early teens share characteristics with Gen X, but still have the experience of a generally tech-free childhood, which arguably still makes for a solid difference between these age groups. For example, I'm a Millenial (92) and while I share values with Gen X, like the DIY mentality and preference for Youtube-Netflix over traditional TV, I seriously hate the way children are exposed to gadgets too soon, because their parents are too overwhelmed and it ends up the only way they get any peace and quiet. This leads them down a path of an even worse instant-gratification ideology than the one Millenials ever had. It's going to be sad for everyone involved.	Age	Age - General	2/146	1.37

The affects on education, i.e online schooling, faster cross cultural enlightenment etc. We are not talking personal access to 1990's internet, who's affect on society as a whole was relatively weak in comparison to the internet age , of mid 2000's onward, we are talking about the macroscopic changes to society that took place before our very eyes whether WE had personal internet access or not. There is no real difference between generations. Social programming determines how masses process information. It's pointless to even try to measure the differences of generation since all generations are programmed to be slaves and consumers. Generations won't be in the way if one truly taking actions to achieve their goals and dreams. The key is how children think and how children learn. The rest are just socially reinforced variables of mob psychology which serves nothing but give people false sense of pride and boasted ego. People who remember the 90s are not the same as people who can't. That's part of it. If you're born in 1998 you are not going to remember a life pre-internet so I wouldn't consider them the same either. As a few people have said in the comments a life where dial up connection and brick phones were breakthroughs compared with someone who's early memories consist of iPhones and WiFi. I think gen z in reality is failing on average. I remember working at 15 but any or most teenagers nowadays want to live the life that they think they can achieve such a the biggest and best of everything by doing literally nothing , I'm not sure if this is down to Youtube or the rise of reality tv that is adapting their perceived image of reality but I would say it's the totally wrong approach. People who were old enough to be affected by the recession have built up debts and put themselves in positions that were the results of the situation but gen z had a fresh start so they should really have a stronger work ethic to do better for themselves. Obvcourse I'm not speaking for all but on average. Also the generations are categorised partly for marketing. Ross Mcentee I agree that certain things like this can help target products. There are other ways but they can definitely use specially in a business. I agree on social media but i don't look at that example too much since it definitely differs between people. I disagree with a bit though. I don't think remembering the 90s means anything to this which was not pre internet but growing. In came out by the late 80s and started growing in the 90s as well after too. I don't see nobody born in the 90s as being in a diffrent boat from one another. None can't remember a pre internet world and not even some born in the 80s. I look at the difference between who the person is not from a date but it can work with companies just not to such an extent. These things are very vague to begin with and differs between opinions in views but being so specific with dates, ages, and names are not necessary much. I truly will say this is not a accurate way of looking at things. Like myself and my friends we don't believe in this stuff. lol unless I want to think me and my girlfriend are two different generations that is, with this silly video. If William and Neil didn't come up with this stuff it wouldn't be present. This started to grow more today because of them but now they all go in diffrent ways on how its looked. I was born in May of 99 and I could see a striking difference between the kids a year below us. I consider 97-Mid 99 as the void between the two generations. So naive! Both groups have different exposures, it's the same as one having different values, opinions and demands from his/her parents given the same age . Yes, if you ask them it's different! Apparently gen Z matured earlier than Millennials, why? Internet!	Age	Age - General	1/41	2.439
It's weird that people who are adults with jobs and responsibilities have more pessimistic views about jobs and responsibilities than people who are too young to have them. Weirdly, the generation that comes after generation Z is much more optimistic about growing up to be a "princess superhero who can fly" than Baby Boomers, Xers, Millennials, or members of Generation Z. Studies should be done to investigate these differences in generational attitudes.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/72	1.389

The process of naming and labeling age groups has and will continue to be utilized by larger companies and magazines in order to market products and sell ideas to people based on generalized characteristics of each group. Trying to characterize entire groups of people is beyond stupid, as much as you may think it might simplify the wants and needs of your target demographic and making it easier to sell, youd only get a small percent of attention as well as alienating the rest of whichever age group youre marketing too. Generational thinking is only effective to a degree, but as far as i can see people unaware of marketing landscape as well as the companies themselves put too much stock into that way of thinking. Inevitably why they fail and are then mocked for "being out of touch" and also why you can hear people that see something they dont understand mumble "millennial" as if it were an insult. Give it some time and people characterized as millennials will be doing the same with whatever they decide to call the next 10 year age group.	Age	Age - General	3/186	1.613
Every 20 to 25 years is a new generation. If Zers start at 96 then Millennials would have first been born in the 70s! That is bull shit. Baby boomers were 40-50, GenX were 60-70, Millennials were 80-90, and Zers are 2000 to 2020. It does not matter how you "feel" or "have in common with" (which sounds very Millennial of you). What matters is the year you were born.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/70	1.429
It isn't a chunk of time, its cultural and societal influences that dictate generational demarcations. If millennials do indeed go up to 2000 then the age range as of 2018 would be 38-18 which is ridiculous because there is clear behavior shift in that age range. Millennial's are 1980-1995, Gen Z is 1995-2005, Gen Alpha is 2005-2010. Analysts even say by 2030 change will be so rapid that we can't even determine the generational demarcations anymore.	Age	Age - General	2/76	2.632
I see where everyone is coming from, the pace of change is much faster now and IMO I think the first iPhone was a VERY good demarcation. Basically, when you were a kid (thinking 2-5 years old , very formative) did you play with board games, toys, play outside, do any "playing house" sort of things OR did you play with games on your parents phone. Definitely a noticeable difference (at least from my experience teaching kids programming camps).Also: The line isn't strict, its a grey area based on how your parents raised you, i.e. I'm did not receive a cell phone till high school, many of my peers already had one then. The majority of the comments are doing exactly what the video is doing that they're mad about- a bunch of angry millennials saying that Gen Z kids ate tidepods- while that is true for some Gen Z kids, you have to group them in the category of being flat out idiots. This entire video is dumb as hell and only focused on Gen Z, and a lot of kids I know from Gen Z don't do the majority of these things other than the multitasking and being independent. But there's Gen Z kids that are as helpless as an injured fly, since when did our personalities base off of what time frame we were born in? We're our own people. Millennials should be shit on. Growing up with facebook and parenting styles at the time taught them that they can get anything in the world and do anything and get participation medals even if they suck. They don't understand that the real world requires working hard and getting shit done to get anywhere in life. Some people say its just because of their upbringing, but frankly thats a cop out. Something millennials do too often already anyway. They are also to blame for their shitty behaviour and lack of work ethic. Because they used their social media platforms to create echo chambers of their own shitty ideologies. Here's an example. We all know that hate speech is bad, but free speech is vital to a proper society. Not millennials though. They created groups online and talked about this shit with millions of like minded individuals and refused to take input from anyone who didn't already agree. Now we have university campuses everywhere that are straight up against free speech. They think that instead of someone needing thick skin and taking an insult, the insult needs to be prevented by some third party. Millennial feminists blame the patriarchy as if its some kind of god, millennials are what drove BLM to its extreme, the list goes on. Its not a coincidence that all these social groups have gone so extreme at the time when the millennials got to an age where they become politically active. They think the world is to blame for their personal problems and that society owes them something. I'll leave you with this final point. I'm a millennial. Most millennials are so pathetic and quick to point out a single meaningless point or blame something else, that they will say, "Ha you said you deserve to be shit on" rather than tackling the arguments I've raised here. Just like all the ideological groups I listed above.	Age, Patriarchy	Age - General, Gender - General	2/319	0.627

Brian Troy that 'participation medal' thing is a load of bull and you know it. As a 25 year old male who grew up playing multiple seasons of baseball, we always got little plaques and trophies for sure, but nobody really cared or thought highly of it. We wanted the big prize, the big trophy and the bragging rights that came with it. Don't generalize us all just because we got handed trophies we honestly didn't even want to begin with. We also didn't 'grow up with' Facebook. Hell, a few of us missed the advent of the internet by a few years. On average, by the time Facebook opened up shop, we were already in high school or college, almost into legal adult territory (going by 18+). As for entitlement, you're talking out your ass again. I personally am holding two jobs just to pay the bills because the company I previously worked for in the startup tech sector hit a rough financial patch and had to have layoffs that quarter. Many of my fellow college graduates are in the same boat, burdened with a ton of student debt wallowing an a stagnant job market where the only thing you can do it hustle your ass off just to make ends meet.You want to generalize and tell me and others like me that we 'deserve to be shit on'? Seals, I take it you got to "participation medal" and stopped reading. I too am a millennial bro. I'm 26. If you got to the end of my post you'd have seen that I predicted millennial would be more likely to be butt hurt and attack me, rather than actually countering my arguments. This is pretty close to what you did. Though I'll grant that you made a couple points... in my favour. You're a very rare case friend, probably because you're in tech. Devs seem to be more proactive and actually out there doing things, they also have a much easier job market. But the participation medal thing did affect a lot of people. It instilled this idea that everyone deserves shit, its why our generation fights so hard for equality of outcome rather than equality of opportunity. Why we are the generation that made safe spaces and fat acceptance movements. Why we are the generation that thinks generalizing is a crime. I mean think about it. Why are you even offended, you read my post, you saw that it spoke generally of millennials, the words may not apply to you specifically, that doesn't make it wrong. you are one data point bro. As am I. The fact is we have on record the worst work ethic and the most entitled activists of any generation. I didn't make that up, google it. Look at what our generations activists fight for vs previous generations. wanting exactly 50/50 men and women in all the high paying jobs? How the fuck is that fighting for equality, when you look at the stats of what degrees people get and what fields they go into, the gender split in every industry makes perfect sense. Our generation constantly fights for things they feel entitled to, rather than any real form of oppression. You could be right that its not a product of participation medals and social media confirmation bias. Thats what some people say and my best theory so far as well. Either way, you just chose to be offended. Why? a general statement means its "generally true", not "true in every case". Some people suggest that our generation gets so offended because participation medals actually ruined our self esteem and self confidence. because even when we lost we were given things that we knew we didn't deserve. So it made us feel even worse. That's surely true for some people, but I think more people became entitled my it. Admittedly thats my opinion vs someone else's, none of this has been studied enough to know 100 yet. Either way, stop fearing generalizations and realize that if a post doesn't describe you it shouldn't offend you. Honey, you haven't worked with either of these generations because your one of them. Lack of attention span in gen Z means dumb down assignments. Their education has been cut to the bone and they only get a gist of what is expected of them. They don't have patients for details so therefore they suck in all that they do. They refuse to listen when corrected. Work 8 hours? That doesn't make sense to them since they can do the job in a third of the time however detail is lacking. The work they do is extremely shoddy. 13 is an ok age . I'm 30 yrs old . When I was 13 I had a cell phone to call my grandparents and mom. The schools back then didn't allow you to bring them to school, but I kept it in my backpack anyway. I almost got suspended for this, but I explained that I leave it in the backpack and turned off because it is for after-school just in case they can't get to me. With that in agreement with my teachers and admins. they allowed me to do this. This was back in 2001.. Fucking controversial shit back then. Now I think it isn't such a big deal. When I taught middle schools. I am more surprised if a kid doesn't atleast have a flip phone because it is very much a safety and security issue for me. Since I grew up with dial-up internet and with both Windows 95 and Windows 98 when each one of those had came out. I also grew up having first a Walkman Cassette player and then getting a CD player after that. I also didn't get my first cell phone until I was 19 years old almost 20 years old . After graduated from high school in 2004. I also remember when the first DVD came out but until then I always had to watch movies on a VHS tape in a VCR. I also didn't get my first smartphone or android phone until my late 20s since until that time I just had a regular Nokia cell phone that had no internet capabilities and no camera on it for most of my 20s. I'd argue the real qualifier for gen Z isnt access to smartphones and iPads while growing up but access during formative years or younger, coupled with social media. I believe I used the internet for the first time when I was around 8 or 9. I do not remember having a computer in the home until mid-late elementary school. I remember when you accessed the internet via dialup and would get free trials on CD-ROM from America Online in the mail. You couldn't use the landline and use the internet simultaneously unless you had a second landline. I got my first cell phone at the age of 15 in 2005. It was a flip phone with minimal web browsing ability. I think you could do a google search but it would load in about a minute. MySpace did come and go, but it did not have the profound societal effect that Facebook has had. I spent the entirety of high school without a Facebook account, as it was only open to non-college students as of the year 2008 which was my senior year of high school. Facebook shifted the gears of personal expression for teens and fundamentally changed the way they value themselves and the way they judge others. Couple that with the addictive nature of cellphones, and you've got a generation that is subject to a completely different and virtual social experience right at their fingertips that I quite simply did not have. My argument would be if you spent the entirety of high school with either access to Facebook or at least awareness of it and it's influence you are not a millennial. So, essentially if you were around 13 or younger in 2008 you are not a millennial.	Age, Senior	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/291	0.687
Makes sense, I specifically did not grow up with a smartphone. I didn't get a flip phone until 2012, when I was 11. Then at the end of 2015 to the beginning of 2017 I had a smartphone. I got tired of dealing with typical smartphone BS like the touch screen, so I went back to a flip phone. I don't like being able to make a call with basically a small tablet and I don't like having the VAST amount of knowledge on the internet at my fingertips ALL THE TIME, you end up relying on the internet for knowledge about EVERYTHING... and to me, that is scary to think about. You can call me weird and say smartphones are so much better all you want, it won't phase me.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/131	0.763
I was born in 2000 and I've always considered myself a Millennial. My siblings are born on less ambiguous dates and fall pretty clearly into GenZ. I didn't grow up w smartphones and touchscreens. I rmbr pretty clearly when YouTube became a thing. I'm old enough to hate that cars don't have a cassette slot anymore. And Toys R Us wasn't my Blockbuster, Blockbuster was my Blockbuster. I definitely lean towards the Millennial end of the spectrum.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/77	1.299

I was born 99' I used a vhs, cd player, GameCube, flip phone, mp3, blackberry, then smart phone at age 14. We used the vhs till I was around 13 for long car rides. Though portable enough, it was about the size of a small microwave. I used to watch my older sister's copy of sailor moon season 2, and dragon tails on it. SideNote: Though the 90s technically ended 2000, the culture didn't totally fade out till around 2005. The same applied for the 80s, 70s, and so forth.	Age	Age - General	1/90	1.111
I've always identified more with millenials since I grew up in a rural area and my family had dial up internet at our house until 2010, lol. I got my first smartphone only this year (I am 21). Although my family has had a computer since before I was born, and I made a facebook page in grade 6 at school with my buddies. I don't remember 911. The main way I watched movies as a child was VHS. The car had a casette player we listened to. I was really excited to get my first CD walkman in gr 5. In high school everyone used instagram and snapchat. I have never owned an apple product tho. So being on the cusp means you straddle both experiences I think. In my case, I swing more towards millenial because I always consumed the media that my older siblings liked. Most people set the defining feature as remembering 9/11, which puts the cutoff around 1996. I agree with that. 9/11 really changed our perception on a lot of things and millennials were old enough to remember the change. Gen Z doesn't remember a world before 9/11, even if they were born before it.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/53	1.887
People tend to have differing abilities to remember back to early ages. For most people, it seems to be that their memories start back around the age of 5. There are certainly people who can remember further back, but there are also people who can't even remember that far back. There can never be a precise cutoff date because people are not all the same. Generation dates aren't rough either. Different sources say different dates. That's why I said around 1996 instead of saying the cutoff IS 1996. To say it is 1996 is giving it more certainty than there really is. I would say that someone born near the cutoff date can self-identify as whichever generation that exemplifies their values more. I am surprised that you don't remember 9/11 if you remember a lot of things from that time-frame. Sure, you weren't in the US, but it was a big deal internationally too. And it changed the tone of how the US interacts with the world drastically, so it does affect the lives of pretty much the entire world because the US sticks their hands into everything.	Age	Age - General	1/188	0.532

Fair enough. My memory starts around 2 or 3. By four I remember the basic structure of the year and how my daily life was. Events that happened, cousins being born, bookfairs at school, summer camp... etc. But I do not remember 911. I think this is because my parents felt it would be inappropriate to explain such a thing to a four year old . In contrast I do remember the leaders debate leading up to Paul Martin's election when I was 5. Probably because my parents felt it was approp. In school nothing was mentioned. I only found out about terrorists a couple years later and assumed they were something that had always existed. Yes it affected everything, but for a toddler in a foreign country the effect isn't immediately apparent. Then again, my mom is born in 62 and she says that because the population spike in Canada was later than it was in America, she is a Canadian baby boomer. It makes sense with her experience since she and all her friends had 5+ siblings.	Nothing, Old, Spike	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Religious Identity - Protestant	3/178	1.685

Earl Miller, a neuroscientist at MIT and one of the world experts on divided attention, says that our brains are 'not wired to multitask well... When people think they're multitasking, they're actually just switching from one task to another very rapidly. And every time they do, there's a cognitive cost in doing so.' So we're not actually keeping a lot of balls in the air like an expert juggler; we're more like a bad amateur plate spinner, frantically switching from one task to another, ignoring the one that is not right in front of us but worried it will come crashing down any minute. Even though we think we're getting a lot done, ironically, multitasking makes us demonstrably less efficient.Multitasking has been found to increase the production of the stress hormone cortisol as well as the fight-or-flight hormone adrenaline, which can overstimulate your brain and cause mental fog or scrambled thinking. Multitasking creates a dopamine-addiction feedback loop, effectively rewarding the brain for losing focus and for constantly searching for external stimulation. To make matters worse, the prefrontal cortex has a novelty bias, meaning that its attention can be easily hijacked by something new – the proverbial shiny objects we use to entice infants, puppies, and kittens. I mean, what's even the point of this comparison? These two groups are at vastly different stages of their lives with different concerns, so of course their outlook is going to be different.Gen Y:- Middle of their career (hopefully)- Possibly starting a family- Maybe looking to buy a house- Lots of debt to pay offGen Z:- Mostly still in school- Mostly no responsibilities yet beyond "get good grades" and "don't do drugs"- About as unaware of the pre-internet age as Gen Y is about the pre-TV age - Probably (hopefully) still somewhat sheltered from the harsh realities of adult life, because having a nice childhood is important tooI'm just saying, when I was 13-23 years old , I was pretty optimistic about my future too, and at times had pretty unrealistic expectations. People ten years older than me would frequently tell me to "enjoy it while you can", which at the time always seemed strange to me. I get it now, though. Life experiences aside, one generation in this comparison has a fully developed adult brain, and the other doesn't.A better comparison would be between two different generations, *when they were the same age *. I was born in 97 and I've always called myself a millennial because I was alive when the millennium changed. I certainly feel like I have more in common with millennials, because I watched 90's shows, played n64 and watched the switch from dumb to smart phones, etc. But if I'm gonna be labeled as gen Z I'll take it. I can't stand the millennial, group-think, mentality. I hate how far left millennials are. I hate how emotional they are. Yeah, call me gen Z. I was born in 1985, so I'm an older millennial. However, my older brothers were gen xers and I grew up being more influenced by that culture. At the same time, I always felt out of touch with many people my age and in some ways have more in common with gen z. Somedays, I feel like I'm some strange hybrid of gen x and gen z. When it comes to number 2 there's no such thing as multi tasking. You're spreading your mental resources between multiple things and being less productive overall. The kicker is that your ability to perceive your productivity is hampered so you feel more productive, but if you look at the numbers you're actually less productive than using singular focus.I'd point out other holes but it's a pretty shallow video. As a Millennial, i think how you describe the generation Z is not only incorrect but also offensive to the majority of the kids born after the 90's..If anything Millennials and the Post Millennials have common grounds, but the smartphone addiction still plagues all generations.. Gen Z are still teenagers and kids for fuck sakes lol, but they have most definitely their own culture and their trends..And the Millennials already are in their 30's and late 20's..This video is clickbait, nothing but snowflakes and spoiled brat soy people.. ChromeZone i mean everyone does, its like a basic human thing, right? But, to me, generation categories just seem very absurd. Dont seem to have any useful meaning, and actually seem to confuse people more than anything else. I'm thinking of these ads that target "millenials" while actually driving them away from the advertised product just because of how much it doesnt resonate with the people it is supposed to (mainly because that group of people does not exist as a "group with common features", imo)	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/86	1.163

People being rude to my Generation (Gen Y) expect the same results as they have experienced, since Gen Y doesn't conform to older habbits from genZ or the BabyBoomers we have defined our ways in digital output instead of the phyisical limitations of opportunity.In this case, we use the internet as our platform for our work and projects..Look at Patreon, and kickstarters campaigns that's being used, and open source technologies..GenZ would never do that..GenZ, has a great future ahead, but also a hard one with all the corruption and debt around us, but find opportunities in ways that nobody could imagine that's the gamechanger :)	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/109	0.917

ShiranovaFirstly, 1998 is not the most commonly used line.Go to Wikipedia’s ”Millennials” page, the majority of sources under the ”Date and age range definitions” section of that page use 1996 or 2000 as the cutoff for Millennials, 5 sources listed for each of those years. 1996 is also used by Pew Research, and 2000 is also used by the US Census Bureau.Secondly, modern internet started in 1991. By that logic, someone born in the late ’80s would be Z as well.	Age	Age - General	1/84	1.19

I am part of Generation Z and I can confirm that blanket statements that his video makes are bogus. You can’t group generations into ”categories” that dictate what they believe or what they are capable of accurately, this applies to most things. Blanket statements don’t work, averages don’t work (nothing is ”average”, average is the median between the high and low, not the majority in almost every case).Example: you have 100 people, one of them has a thousand dollars and the other 99 is broke. The average says everyone has $10, when in reality the gap is massive. Look at the density of information not the average, a curve on a graph does a much better job at fairly showing data than a single number does.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/127	0.787

Generation alpha is going to be the most depressed generation as their whole life will be on social media. I was born in 95 (so im in between genz and millennial) and didnt get an email account untill I was 12 years old . I signed up for facebook in 2009 when I was 14. From the day generation alpha was born their whole lives have been posted on facebook. When they make their own accounts on whatever social media is around in a couple decades all those photos of them in the past will be on the internet. Everything gen alpha does will be attached to social media and validation of their peers. At least the millennial generation was warned from a young age about the dangers of the internet, gen alpha will be taught to embrace the internet and trust it completely.From the day gen alpha is born, google/facebook/internet giants will have a complete profile on these people. They probably even have the power to manipulate these people since they know them so well. If you have not noticed, I use a fake account because I have concerns about my privacy. Generations are kind of a fluid thing. You can have a technical cutoff year for when one begins/ends, sure. But when you start talking about generalized ideas of what people in that generation are like, then the lines can get a lot more blurred and fluid, especially when you're born around the transition of one generation to the other.	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/59	1.695
Generational dynamics take this into account as there is usually a cusp period of four years or so that separate age blocks into cohorts.	Age	Age - General	1/24	4.167

I think what generation you're from depends also on where you come from. I was born in 1997. I come from central Europe (Poland to be precise, which is somewhere on the middle when it comes to salaries in Europe, not as poor as Ukraine or Balkans but not as rich as Germany or UK) and I'm from a rather poor/middle rich family. Like not starving but also not going abroad on holidays or buying a new electronics every second year. I can remember well e.g. floppy disks, portable CD players (we called it walker) even if I didn't have one. I had a old heavy Nokia with that green-black pixel screen. I also remember the time before Facebook became popular and a must-have. I don't have an Instagram or Snapchat account, neither do I want to have one. But I also don't watch TV which feels like the "newer generation" thing (I only watch stuff online). I remember back at high school when 98 felt somehow normal but 99 was a whole new level. From my point of view, 99 is somewhat the first year of the new generation.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/190	0.526
I was also born in 97 and I think we can comfortably identify as either. For example, I'm very tech savy and have a "do it yourself" mentality but at the same time don't understand some of the typical genz hobbies (like watching streamers over actually playing a game yourself). We were definitely born at a weird time. Early enough to remember using cassette tapes, VCR players and CRT screens but young enough to fully embrace new technology without a steep learning curve. That said, both I and my fiance have agreed to aim for Permaculture, and having a no smartphone policy in our home(which is a sailboat). I think Gen Z(at least in Europe) is splitting in two. You have group one: Conforming Specialists. Who try to keep booming their techy lifestyle as much as possible. These generally have a good view of the government, and immigration of foreign species.And group two: Independent Generalists. Who try to live more in pact with nature, while not expanding tech at the cost of the ecosystem. These generally are more skeptical about the government, and don't normally like the immigration of invasive species like Africans or Red king crab. I'm Garbage tv Generation Z in the early half is really the generation you're describing which grew up during some of the biggest advances in computers with many people still having been using dial-up internet through their childhood, mp3 players, CD players were all common right up to around the 2010s and myspace was something they likely heard of growing up without knowing what it was.Generation Z has probably got the biggest split within itself of people old enough to remember the time before the technological revolution (which I'll pin as being 2000, to 2010, as afterwards technology stopped developing so quickly with intel i-series) and the younger ones perhaps not remembering so much of that. The key unifying factor for Generation Z in the West is having grown up with the aftermath and effects of 9/11 and the ensuing wars on terror, and also growing up seeing the effects of the Great recession which, though some were too young to remember, still has effects on the world around us today. I think I'm close to the cut off.. but every website is different. (I'm '94). I think a big difference is like... my first phone was a flip phone with 10cent charge per text. But everyone had some kind of BlackBerry or other smart phone sometime in highschool. So smart phones weren't really popular until I was past childhood. Past a certain age of development. But I think they can't really decide where to draw the line between the generations. In my opinion, People born in 1980 are pretty different from my generation. 14 years is a lot. Idk. I don't think it really matters that much, except that the media can't tell the difference at all lol. It gets on my nerves when I see 16 year olds being called millennials. We are all over 20. I was born in spring 97, so I am either a young millennial or a cusper. Almost half of my life, I lived without even dreaming about the idea of a phone that people can keep in their pockets to make calls outside their home or this program on the computer that lets people google up random nonsense. Also, i have a few memories of ‘99 that I myself remember vividly experienced though the memories arent as detailed as someone who would be five at that time. 97 is the last year a person can be born in to remember the 90s without the need of photos or videos. I dont remember 9/11 thankfully, i mean who would want to remember the worst day of the early 2000s. I do remember preschool before 9/11 and stuff. Yeah, either young millennial or a cusper. I just dont feel like an old gen z, and I am not going to say that I do just to make you happy. Only gen z characteristic i have is not remembering the 9/11 day.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/179	0.559
As a 97er, i consider myself a young millennial; i have vague memories that I remember experiencing in 99 after I turned 2. Also, I was old enough to attend preschool during the 99-2000 school year, but the preschools in my city didnt take anyone under 4 years old , but preschool is optional in my country. 1995-1997 are the same generation cause they were preschoolers in 1999. I dont relate to gen z cause i didnt have a computer at home until I was 5, our family never had outside phones until I was like 8 give or take a month or two on either end from my eighth birthday; we first got a laptop and internet access only when I was in third grade. I first saw a flatscreen tv only when I was like 6-8. Flatscreen computer monitor when I was 9-11. One thing that really makes me a millennial is remembering that we had to make an antenna on top of our tv work just to get the sound and picture to work.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/176	1.136

I feel like a lot of these points are going to become moot in a few years simply because of age. Optimism and a forgiving nature, for instance are typically things that are edited and updated with respect to their statistical evidence of being proved true or false over time. I know that the older I get, the more interactions I have to prove my initial beliefs are valid or not depending on my interactions with all sorts of people. After so many years of subtly accumulating data (often subconsciously) about the interactions I was correct or not correct about I begin to formulate statistical biases when conditioned by previous interactions of a similar type. My theory is that all people develop these and we believe when younger that these are failings or denote an unwillingness to change when really this is the inevitable course of our experience, for better or for worse. This is sort of a straw man for getting older, to rate things in willingness to collaborate, optimism, and confidence in our ability. These are the same qualifiers given to the millenials before, gen x, the baby boomers and the "greatest generation". In ten years, we will hear the same argument made for whatever the next age defined tribe is, with the gen zs made out as sticks in the mud.	Age	Age - General	2/224	0.893
I'll agree on one thing as a 30-year-old who went through 10 years of college at 2 junior colleges and 2 universities, and got no degree for any of it while losing thousands and thousands of my own dollars (thanks for nothing, parents and advisors): College is a financial and possibly health killer, except for those people who know exactly why they're doing it, what they need from it, have a complete plan for it and after it, and have meaningful connections, especially in case the plan changes or doesn't go through.I had none of these and am working to recover from my experience and salvage a livable future for myself. I am now making good progress thanks to my current job which doesn't require a college education.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/129	0.775

Not enterly correct. Doing several things at the same time is handled not by different parts of the brain, but by different neural processes (actually 3 main ones), and frequently performed highly automated tasks are simply handled by neural processes beyond the frontal cortex conscious activity. It happens in so called basal ganglia and this neural activity needs a lot of repetition in order to retain the pattern of neural activity needed to perform each "subconscious task". This is for example why learning how to drive a car while doing other things requires a lot of practice. Frontal cortex can handle with high accuracy only 1 task at the time and we know that each added conscious task decreases performance per each task by 30. So in other words everyone trying to handle many conscious tasks at the same time, what we do refer to as real multitasking is doomed to make some errors in each. And lowers his own performance. So a multitasking employee has a very low accuracy. What is expensive if high level of precision and accuracy is required in a particular workplace. It's 2018 and I'm 17, it was unique to be a young kid when I was, cause I was the very, very last age group to not have grown up with smart phones, my classmates and I made the transition quite young. Generations are nonexistent. It's just a means of further separating people through age . Supporting and insisting that the year you were born makes you any different than someone born a couple years to a decade before or after you is stupid. The real difference between the young and old is physical and mental maturity and experience (which unsurprisingly, everyone will acquire at some point if they don't die young). By cataloging people into age based groups you are just making an ass out of yourself. Stop with the millennials are different bullshit. A majority of these seem pretty accurate. I'm 15 and since I was 12 I've never wanted to work in a cubicle and waste my life away behind a computer screen working in a company until the younger people come in. People are easily replaced. We may be the young generation now but give it thirty to forty years and there will be a new wave of kids who will do a better job for less money. My parents always warned me about this. I'd prefer to be my own boss,work in a lush home office and maintain my own brand. Probably live in a three story house while my kids are off at private school that's not religion oriented and my wife or husband is out working as a doctor or lawyer. I blog on my spare time and just to keep me mentally sharp and during the summers my spouse,our five (yes five) kids and I take trips to exotic locations where they can learn about all the different walks of life. And we take the occasional trips to Disney in August just to indulge. Around Christmas and Thanksgiving we volunteer at soup kitchens and participate in habitat for humanity. I have enough in my savings account to retire by 53 and travel the world with my spouse. As a hobby I write books about kickstarting a company and such. I've set good career paths for all my kids and have helped them breed and refine whatever passion they have. And I also I payed off my student loan instantaneously by 28 along by adding in some endowment. Hopefully along the way I'm able to give a tedXtalk and donate to meaningful charities to get tax breaks. That's the American dream. We can plan as much as we want but of course life will always add it's own little curves. If I get the company owning,home office,marital,kid and retirement goals checked in I'll be satisfied. My American dream is just being able to bring five human beings into the life(whether natural,surrogate or adoption) and giving them the opportunities I never had while growing up. I want to start a company,find love and die satisfied at a ripe old age . Especially if technology advances by then to help us live a little longer or transfer our brains into sentient robots. I feel like Millenials are the best generation because we had the best of both worlds. We grew up both kind if old school, and with the rise of technology. We played outside more, but also played with technology as it started advancing. We were there when cellphones started emerging, and when game systems were advancing. We grew up with classical 2D animation and 3D animation. Last but not least we had the BEST cartoons and tv shows. the televesion shows and cartoons are TRASH today. The line deciding which generation you are is the terrorist attacks on the twin towers. I being born in 1993 vividly remember 9/11/2001. My sister born in 1996 has no memory of that day. She was k5 I was 3rd grade. My girlfriend who is 23 has a hard time remembering as well. We are only 18 months apart in age . I also experienced things like thundercats reruns and he man and old cartoons. In 2000 things started massively changing in children's entertainment. I was raised on the old classics like loony tunes and Tom and Jerry My girlfriend watched thats so ravem and my sister watched hannah montana. I was just slightly too old for those shows and therefore consider myself the last year on gen y. I also was the youngest of 7 male cousins who influenced me heavily. I am so glad I am gen y and I notice the difference in my world view and behavior. I'm modern and tech savvy, but still remember a world before the tech boom. I played Cowboys and Indians and remember my mother playing cat Stevens and my dad playing Jim croce and the 70's felt so close. The world is changing so fast and I feel connected to the old days where kids now have no idea who journey was or really don't even know a beetles song. I agree with a lot of comments here. As a 1999er, I identify with a lot of parts of Gen Z but I STILL remember those Dial-UP commercials on TV with the Green Apple and beautiful house in the middle of nowhere trying to sell "High-Speed Internet and Cable". I remember when Motorola and other phone companies were RIPPING PEOPLE OFF by selling phones, not of upgraded versions but of DIFFERENT COLORS. I remember New Horizon's launch and knowing I'd be 15 by the time it reached Pluto. I even remember when our family computer would be basically disabled all day because of ONE DOWNLOAD.The world has come far and I was there to see it. personally as a " Gen Z ", i have a lot more tolerance than what i guess is the average, i prefer to do things myself as i think it would be more efficient, but i would think otherwise if the situation needed other people, i don't interact with the newer social media, i have a twitter but i never use it and haven't told most people i even have it, Facebook is the only social media i use on a daily basis.I could only be like this because i grew in a family where our technology from around the 2000s was of 90s quality, i'm from an Asian country, even though i'm not poor i've been taught to take anything life gives you and make it better and to assess situations logically than emotionally in order to live more efficiently, you can call me a robot if you want i'd be flattered, but we gotta remember, most of gen z aren't working or aren't even adults yet, and some of the younger Gen z are classified with the even newer generation, i was born in 2004 and i realized that there was a huge gap between people my exact age and people born the year after, first of all, it might only be due to those 2005's and 2006's going through the "maturing stage", there was a huge divide between us, but i hope in the following years they could be considered as the same "classification" as us, now i'm gonna say this was all from personal experience, i'm definitely not speaking for every person born in 2004 nor 2005, i just observed that us 2004 kids had more tolerance than those 2005 kids, but that's because we entered high school first and our school's landscape changed with us too.When one says "Millennial" or "Gen Z" or "Baby Boomer" etc.... Make sure to consider the individual before the stereotype, these only "tend" to be descriptions of those people in those generations but never an exact representation of each individual.My personality might be a little different as i've been more at my house than outside and more time with myself than with others, therefore i'm in the mindset of being independent and rather work by myself than to collaborate, but neither do i not enjoy going out with friends, i get excited when we schedule an outing or something, but if i had any choice i would choose to rather have a nice honest talk with my friends than to play Basketball... I was born in 1991 i.e. millennials time. Here is my experience. First thing How small 'between 17 and 27' felt . It was so fast. Believe me it hardly felt like a period. To me 14 to 17 was way longer. Those who are at 17 or 18 are just on the threshold of true "real adulthood" (i.e. being part of working class). In my younger days I believed everything that my elders said, like how this job sector will be lucrative and how the easy to pay loan. I graduated with help of education loan in 2013. With my luck my got job quick. It was peaceful for a couple of year but pay was less. 5 years went by and I am still clearing my loan. A big chunk of it is cleared (much better than what usually happens), but it took all my capacity to save. Things are getting expensive, everything including home, healthcare, food and grocery. Being unhealthy is very tiring especially when it takes away so much money and also your income is hampered on daily basis. Most terrifying thing of this age is the speed everything is changing in this world. I lost my job due change of technology (mainly automation). While I am still very optimist about my prospect, I know the It will be tough. I don't think that there is any special difference between Gen Z and millennial, I was like that in my teenage. We used to think same for our elders. But for us it is a tough time now, and Gen Z will have it tougher, especially when they are grown in most easygoing lifestyle. My suggestion to anyone would be to grow as many as faculties and skills, be it normal plumbing, simple cooking or web chatting. Cultivate industrious nature instead of easygoing. Meet as many people and make friendship with them. In coming time we will need to support each other. Time of being individualist is over, now being collective is as important. Good relationship and family, neighbors everyone is important. Coming time has big challenges are there, if tackled correctly there can be some opportunities. But in coming time one has to do a lot of labor, amount of work needed is insane.	Age	Age - General	1/380	0.263

I think the people are born in the 80s or stuck between Generation X and Generation Y and you cannot compare them to people who are born in the 90s or into the 2000s because they grew up with old school parents and new school parents like I remember when I was a kid I went outside and stayed outside all day until the street lights came on if I didn't come home and then street lights came on I got my ass whipped kids in the 90s then have that and people who were born in the 70s did have that I remember using rotary phones typewriters and having a black and white TV I also remember having a color TV a touchpad phone and using the single Apple computer at my school with Oregon Trail on it and I really think we should base it on video game consoles Sega 64 PlayStation 2000 they had PlayStation 1 and the n64 for PlayStation 2 and GameCube and personally I really don't think anybody can compare people who were born in the 80s to 90s because when they were 10 I was 15 and already had a job	Apple, Black, Old	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - Native-American	3/198	1.515

yea you teenagers prefer face to face.. I am kinda glad. I'm gen y. I'm 30 yrs old . I was pretty old skool. When in social events I never pulled out my phone. When I was on dates when I was 18-21 yrs old . The women I Dated back then would pull their phones out while in conversation. And yea, it was rude. I was offended.. and that would make or break a date basically.. I think Gen Z is gonna do a lot better than my generation. But I also understand that Gen Y was mostly undermined by predatory lending practices and the rigging of the laws and legal system to keep them down.. From 2008-2015. Nobody was getting jobs. 1st off you got the generation gap completely wrong on what you have on your video. The millennium's are people born before 2000 in my opinion. For example, I was born in 95 and I still remember floppy disks, huge cell phones, the colorful MAC computers, and 9/11. The Internet was still taking baby steps, internet explorer was the only web browser, and AOL was a huge deal. So unlike the 2000 babies their generation Z they've never known nothing but the digital world. Someone either didn't do their homework/research, or they are very heavily opiniated/biased. I've looked into this pretty extensively. All of the sources have years that vary for the legnth's of all the generations, going back to the Civics and The Lost Generation who came before the Baby Boomers. What I gave you is the most common ranges that I see. For whatever reason, the Sociologists or whoever studies this aren't in concert with the exact ranges, because credible sources all differ slightly. Google and look into it, you'll find the same. The rest of the things they said were mentioned with statistical backing, but it still sounded more opinionated than anything. It's not a great video for it, but the age ranges I gave you are, again, as accurate an estimation that I can come to from reading up on Generations. Dark Decade Fire and Aldo Gallegos did you actually look at any of the sources? I'm guessing you didn't, because he has six total, not 11, but the pastebin post is 11 lines long because he double spaced. So since you didn't actually do your due diligence, I'll help you out. Two of his sources are Wikipedia articles that basically say nothing . One is an editorial blog on the Huffington Post, the other three are editorial blogs written by business consulting firms. None of these are reliable sources on this topic. They are not peer-reviewed, there is nothing scientific about them, there is no reason to accept anything they say, and they have massive conflicts of interest (Wikipedia excepted).There simply isn't any reliable data on the Gen Y/Gen Z comparison, partly because members of Gen Z aren't even adults yet. I couldn't find a consistent year for the cutoff of who is and isn't Gen Z, because people can't even agree on that yet. If we assume the cutoff is 2000, then at best the oldest Gen Zers are just turning 18 this year. There is no way to predict the impact a generation will have when the majority of them haven't even finished high school. I dunno man. I feel more like gen z than millenial. According to this vid. But was born in the 80's.And as someone who grew up with internett and now, not even jokung. Working with the internett as a isp provider.I feel that gen X can be quite wierd if not completely incompetent at certain things. They seem to be very specialized into certain fields snd completely oblivious to anything outside it.Millenials are kinda ok. But at times very obnoxious. They have very broad understanding of things and and soak up learning quite well. When i try to explain things. They will rarely argue against it.Unlike Gen X.Generation Z however seem to be more like Gen X again. And completely helpless without internett.While millenials and Gen X can survive a couple of days without internett.Gen Z goes apeshit over just a couple of hours without.Many also like to argue against you just like gen X with better know how where instead of experience from age its i've seen it on the internett type of deal.Also when it comes to internett vournability. Millenials are the most sceptic and seem to be most aware of internett security.While Gen X and Gen Z are completely oblivious to them.Basic things such as admin rights to their routers are open and easy to access to. While millenials tend to change everything and make it more secure.But thats just me.When it comes to student loans.Glad i aint american.	Age	Age - General	1/256	0.391

I don't think it's fair to say Gen Z was "born into" a technology fueled lifestyle. I feel like we need to either re-classify or acknowledge some sort of transitional generation who experienced I guess the benefits of an age of social media and the tech revolution of the 2000's, while still retaining some experiences of the 90's household dynamic. I didn't wake up in 1998 to suddenly have a completely different life to my siblings born in 1994 and 1991; as far as we were all concerned, the family still used a dial-up PC until the mid-2000's, were slow to follow the pace of progress, particularly tech improvements, and yet in the 2000's my millennial brother and sister are just entranced with social media as I am, a Gen Z. There's nothing wrong with noting some distinctly different traits of the two generations and I'm not triggered by generalisations such as this, but I feel like it's important those individuals or even households born in this transitional phase aren't classified too closely with either generation because in my case, as a 20 year-old I'm neither close to a 13 year-old Logan Paul stan and merch supporter, nor a 35 year-old settled-down family man	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	2/188	1.064
I'm a '98 birthday as well. As someone has just mentioned these lines are essentially arbitrary, I wasn't allowed access to the PC that was in my attic until I was 6 years old , didn't get a smartphone until I was 15, and only began watching DVDs instead of VCRs when I was 7. Maybe this speaks to how slow my family were when it came to keeping up with technology, but I certainly don't feel like a Gen Z. For me, the cut offs would be 1945-1968 for Baby Boomers, 1969-1985 for Gen X, 1985-1999 for millennials, and 2000-2012 for Gen Z. As technological progress quickens I think Generational ranges should be reduced to compensate for the cultural change happening in so short a period of time.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/128	0.781
As a 15 year old who grew up with two siblings born in the 90s I agree that there should be a transitional generation.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/24	4.167
Generational science is NOT exact or final. There is a lot of transition time. If you look it up in 5 different places then you will get 5 different answers as to when gen z starts. However, most agree that it was between 1997 and 2000, in my experience. Generations are just another way of stratification in statistics.	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/58	1.724

Exactly! None of these dates and age ranges are even recognized officially by any governments with the exception of baby boomers, and even that is not exact and is only used to roughly group those people together because of the sheer number of them.	Age	Age - General	1/44	2.273

Toastee actually they're usually marked by a multitude of things. Namely, world changing disasters like wars or in this case, 9/11. The media is what now determines the generation gaps for marketing purposes, based on trends of different age groups. Also, the reason so many people claim to be millennials vs gen z is because they were raised by baby boomers who had older children, therefore influencing the choices of their younger siblings.	Age	Age - General	1/73	1.37

The way I see it, if you remember 9/11, weekday Toonami (not Saturday nights), Cartoon Network when it had the checkerboard logo, etc. and think post-2005 kids shows were shit or was too old for them, you're a Millennial. If you were too young to remember the things I mentioned in the first camp though, and were young enough to love post-2005 shows like Johnny Test for example, and considered them a fond childhood memory, you'd fit more into Gen Z.Late 90s babies started off Gen Z really, with Hannah Montana and High School musical and Fred and other shit like that. Late 90s babies are WAY different from early 90s babies.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/113	0.885
EVERY generation is like that. These generation lines are used by businesses to make broad generalizations about their customer base. Its not about you, its about people in that age range on average. Companies will use these generalizations to improve their manipulation methods in order to sell you stuff or hire you to make profits for them. In reality everyone is unique. People raised in different areas will be different, people raised in different family styles will be different, having younger or older siblings makes a difference. But one thing is constant. Businesses will try and create groups of people and try to manipulate the behavior and ideas of those people in order to profit off those people. Government leaders will try and manipulate the behavior and ideas of the people in order to retain their position of power. Generational statements are just a way to broadly categorize people in order to influence and ultimately control them.	Age	Age - General	1/157	0.637

I could identify as either.. I was born in 1997... but truly, I don't think labeling yourself as one generation should define you as a person... I'm an old soul... I feel out of place all of the time. I just don't like being referred to as a millineal because I'm just a 20 year old trying to be self sufficient.. I'm not into social media (other than youtube) and I don't buy into the modern day political agenda.. There is so much more to life than hating other humans who have different beliefs/opinions than you... I look around at our civilization now, and all I see is digression.. we may be progressing in technology and (maybe) efficiency.. but everything that matters.. chivalry, courtesy, respect, love, acceptance has all been demoralized and thrown out the window.. Not to mention the copious amount of irreversible damage we've done to our Earth.. the actual vessel that allows us to live.. we're killing it with no remorse.. I hope all of the new, younger souls will wake up from this state of mind where the only thing that matters is fame and fortune... Humanity needs some serious rebooting.. that is all. I think it is also very important to note that the terrorist attacks of September 11th, 2001 are also very important, which this video does not mention. "Generations" are not a real thing, but the way we have historically defined them have a lot to do with great memorable, often tragic, events. World War II, the Kennedy assassination, the Challenger explosion and 9/11. "Millennials" remember 9/11, Gen Z does not. Their tragedy will most likely be the Trump presidency. Millenials are crumbling because they grew up on a beautiful enviroment of development and dreams, as they get older, the economy starts to strike them with no mercy. Gen Z in general can notoce this from an outside perspective and thats why we are more concerned with pratical things like planning a career, learning how to be professional and not expecting to change the world by ourselves at a young age . Yes school is stressful, but our grounded focus on achievable things will help you to be sucessful in the working enviornment. Don't worry too much about school. I would also recommend you to not even worrying being top of the class, but idk where are you from and what you can get from it. I literally just missed classes to watch anime with friends during all of my last high school year and im fine and doing my major alongside the stressed out overworked teens i knew from my high school years. I'll let you on to a little secret, millennials and gen z are just words at the end of the day, the human condition remains the same and is pretty much timeless. Anxious at 14? Not surprising that the age your forced to make decisions about the rest of your life in school at that age . But rest assured that you won't be the same person you are now, in 10 years time... life isn't certain, life is arbitrarily cruel at times, things change and you change. But if you as an individual take responsibility and push forward you can make it just about work for you.What you see happening to millennials, seeing it all come "crashing down" is an over exaggeration. Saying that no matter what we do, nothing will get better is more of a Boomer and Gen X thing. Boomers are sell outs who are invested in keeping things as shitty as they are and Gen Xers think nihilism and apathy makes them cool and edgy. Millennials are not pessimistic because we have given up on making things better, we simply have a firm grasp on just how bad things are and how much work it will take to make things better. Most of Gen Z are still at school and not in debt from uni nor working full time. Transport costs are at an all high, renting is at all high, mortgages are harder to get and zero hour jobs are on the rise making job security less of a thing. With everything increasing at a higher rate than living wages, Gen Y (millenials) are put in quite a difficult place. When Gen Z gets to where we are, I think things will be even worse for them.	Zero	Age - Youngsters	1/87	1.149
Dres2000 it's not even the debt that's too scary. What I think you should prepare for is the job you want. Job security and saving is more important than ever and I say this because automation is entering more job sectors. I think automation is the scariest aspect. I see it already. Automation is finding its way into many more more job sectors (transport, retail and even banking) and replacing more jobs. A random fact but it's estimated by 2030, 600, 000 construction workers will have their jobs taken due to automation in the UK . Gen Z will have a fiercer job competition market and also have their job market more automated by the time they get to my (Gen Y age). So I think it's important to have a backup plan and monitor how the job market is changing. Because alot has changed from Gen X to Gen Y.	Age	Age - General	1/152	0.658

I don't think the generational model really works, at least not for most people. Some families have completely different generational lengths, for one thing - my Grandmother is 70 years older than I am, while for some other people the age gap is only about 40 years, so we'd be 2-3 generations if we were the same age .A big influence on how one generation behaves is the culture that their parents grew up in, but my parents and grandparents grew up in a completely different culture to the parents of most other people my age . --	-----	----------------	------	-------

All generation have the good and the bad, but I think this man went a little to easy on GenZ... as each generation has its own egoistic people And as much I hate to admit Gen Z is full of them. :(Their form of thinking is rooted in individuality, and is not uncommon in a culture that bases itself on the ideal of rugged individualism. Each of us is, after all, unique and one of a kind. One who contemplates deeply on this uniqueness of the self, comes to realize that there is a world of difference between being unique and being individualistic. A unique person is truly one of a kind, whereas an individualistic person is quite common and ordinary. Individuality is the quality of ego, whereas uniqueness is an inherent quality of the soul-self, the pure consciousness. As we all know, Ego is the false identification of the conscious self with the mind and body. The soul-self, or pure consciousness, is consciousness devoid of ego expression. When we are really not in our ego, we experience directly the beauty of life, and that experience is always unique, it is always ever-new, and it is not possible to copy that experience in the memory or find a substitute for it. On the other hand, when we are in our ego we intuitively know that our experience is limited, and the mind and ego then react by attempting to cover up our lack. Ego reacts by asserting itself and claims dominion over the mind, which it uses to manufacture images to prop itself up.

Ego-individualistic-self-confidence is a very poor substitute for the soul confidence, (WHICH A LOT OF GEN Z SHOW ALL OVER SOCIAL MEDIA) In fact, it is no substitute at all, because there is no substitute for the state of imageless awareness. By its very nature, ego does not let us experience the universality of Truth, because to do so would negate the existence of ego. But of course, ego wants to believe it knows everything, so it creates its own Truth, because to know the Truth makes the ego feel important and powerful, even though the truth it knows is not the Truth at all but only its own images. This is why ego holds onto its images, including its images of universality. No one can really tell you the Truth unless you are ready to hear it, which means no one can teach you the Truth unless you are ready to learn it. Emotional maturity and the desire to learn are both prerequisites. We become emotionally mature when we begin to realize that the whole world does not revolve around us. The less self-involved we are, the more fit we become for self-realization. Every insight we have into the real nature of our being increases our desire to learn more. The time comes when our desire for Self Knowledge out weighs all other desires. It is not possible to see clearly if our perception is clouded by our misconceptions, images, and false knowledge. As long as we are holding onto our ego we will remain confused and unhappy. We need to drop our ego by letting go of our images and begin with a clean slate. We need to empty the picture filled with mud and water, so that the fresh water can be poured into it. We need to empty our mind of all our preconceived notions of Truth in order to learn the Truth from within. When we drop our ego and images we become simple, humble, human beings, who are eager and earnest to get to the bottom of the matter and experience the Truth directly. Can we say genz appeared bettween 1995-2005??I don't think so. As a 18 years old (born in 2000) i believe it's more like in 2005 as when I was younger, we weren't that much on internet and social network and know I see babies with phones etc.... there was no smartphone until i took 10 (my sisters vas BlackBerry Phone as thier first phone) I consider 2000 kids (and 2001) as the last generation before the change in the ways of life (i'm french sorry)	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/85	1.176
Why do they call 90s kids millennials? We weren't born on or after the actual new millennia so that's wrong. True 90s kids never had the chance to get addicted to technology at young ages, nor did we really have a chance to whore ourselves on social media since the only social media at the time was AOL messenger. Also, if anything, this next generation should be called generation copy cat, or poser. These dumb kids are trying to bring back 90s and 80s fads and trends like they were the ones who lived through them.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/96	1.042

I read a study that found Millenials have the least sex of all recent generations whereas Gen X were one of, if not the most decadent and hedonistic generation (just look at what was going on in Woodstock 1999 and pretty much any big festival between 1999-2008 or thereabouts).Gen X was all about chasing tail (but unlike Boomers, also use contraception), getting wasted, and chasing tail while wasted. Sure, it sometimes lead to trouble/danger but it was also very liberating when nobody cared if you were fucking some random in the middle of the crowd at a metal gig while others were crowd surfing or bashing into each other in the pit.Can't really do that anymore, not in most places anyway, but I guess that's the trade-off: either you have freedom or safety, you can't have both, and for better or worse, more modern generations favor safety over freedom while previously it was the other way around. Why the heck would it be something waaay before an waaay after? Heres one of my finding "It was discovered that millennials are less likely to strongly identify with the generational term when compared to Generation X or to the Baby Boomers, with only 40 of those born between1981 and 1997 identifying as part of the Millennial Generation." And another "Someone born in 1997 is born during the crossroads between the Millennial generation and Generation Z; this grey area is roughly 1995–2001. By some definitions, someone born in 1997 is a Millennial. By others, they are Generation Z." Even though as a ("fellow" I'm assuming) north dakotian I love your name, I have to disagree.What is discipline? My mother (in her fifties) is a school bus driver and every day I hear it from her about how the teachers and the school district do nothing when the kids act up and mouth off on the school bus.Do you know why? They are afraid that if they hurt the kid's feelings or so much as lay a hand on their head (my mother got in trouble for restraining a kid by crossing his arms over his chest) that they will be sued to hell and back and to hell again.I don't think this would be purely a gen y issue but also somewhat spurned by lax parenting on millennials part who were raised by their parents in a lap of luxury. They, as kids, never got disciplined, so now they as parents don't know how to discipline.And no, I didn't bring millennials into this just to harp on them for the sake of it, but from what I've witnessed in person and heard from my parent who is exposed to this daily, they are a pretty common denominator as parents to such unruly children.The older geneeration needs to take a stand and not be so much of a push-over and toughen up those emotions of theirs. I'm in Gen Z. Two weeks ago I turned 18. A week ago I obtained my Associates in Arts degree from my dual enrollment credits and last Thursday I graduated from high school. I'm already two years ahead of school. I felt like including this because over 80 of the people that I graduated high school with also got their college degree as well (some aren't even 18 yet). This is something no other generation - to my knowledge - has ever come close to achieving at such a young age . I really hope everyone reads this and understands that we aren't the 'tide pod' generation, but rather a generation of hope for our country. Atleast, I feel as if I give hope and inspiration to rising high schoolers.	Age	Age - General	1/129	0.775

No we're no child prodigies, but we are intelligent. We are a generation of hope, I believe that. That's the nice thing, we are optimistic. Other generations tend to talk down to others and I haven't seen ours do that yet. Kind of like we're the turning point. We'll have to wait and see how everything turns out though. John Kaiser the loud minority of Gen Z really speaks up for it. Majority of people in Gen Z are smart and are mature for their age (I'm close to 14 and I like to believe that I understand/comprehend some mature things, even though I may not have experienced them) Heck, most of my grade at my school have started YouTube channels, making music, programming, etc. The new things in technology give us the ability to start it early, which I am grateful for. Some of my friends have started free online courses as a head start and also doing it at the same time (one of my friends has plays, sports and family troubles at the same time) The are very few people I know that have done things that are stupid like the Tide Pods and dumb challenges. Generation Y are the ones who got shit poured onto them from the older generations, making many of them rather bitter or simply lost on what they're supposed to do. Generation Z are either their first children or younger siblings, who grew up seeing all that and want to avoid it. So yeah, people got more individualistic and more reluctant to rely on others. Sadly this makes generation Z probably the most divided, as some of us are just completely spoiled by the access to everything we have, while on the other hand it's also produced a large amount of self-sufficient highly intelligent people who can make the most of all the tools they have. Older generations tended to generally be competent at everything, but gen Z is really a "hit or miss" situation, where there really isn't much of an "average" or "middle ground". It's either people who passionately push forward and start accomplishing things from a young age or people who don't really do anything because they don't feel like it.	Age	Age - General	1/173	0.578

It was GenX that invented all the tech and media that GenY and GenZ wastes so much time on. GenX knows how to change a light bulb, GenX and GenZ has to find somebody from GenX who can do it for them.GenX wanted to build a better tomorrow. GenY (this is the generation that makes up the majority of ISIS terrorists, ANTIFA left wing fascists, Neo Nazis and looney left SJW's) are all about undermining and destroying civilisation.GenX is also more realistic. They've already lived through a lot of economic recessions, listened to a lot of clueless political BS and have seen it all, done it all and have the T-shirt as well. They've lived and suffered life and are bitter about how the big lies that their educators spun about qualifications turned out to be worthless when it comes to competing for jobs. GenY has just begun to wake up to this.GenX also has the highest male suicide rate in western countries. Britain competes with Sweden to the world's leader in suicides. Gen Z is a moronic name. Gen X is named for the roman numeral for 10 because they are the 10th generation (considering one every 20 years) after 1776. They were anywhere from birth to young adults somewhere near 1976. I was born in 1980, which is kind of the border between Gen X and Millenials.Gen Y never made sense and was eventually replaced with "millenial". If you were going to use the Gen X naming convention, it would have been Gen XI and the new generation would be Gen XII. But that's dumb .iGen isn't a bad name, but I think largely it makes the mistake that is often made when defining a new generation: taking the characteristics of youth and ascribing them to the generation. Rather, I would use something that really defines how the world has changed for them. They are growing up in a post-9/11 world filled with terrorism, both real and propped up as an excuse for war. They are witnessing the rise of dictators in many nations.I would call them something like "terror babies." What I have seen in working with them as an activist is incredible level headedness and determination in the face of enormous obstacles to do the hard work that Gen X largely ignored to make the world better. I see a lot of that from millenials too, but even more so in the new generation.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/237	0.422

Quite pointless. All those differences only point to age . Millenials were also described like the Gen Z when they were in their early 20s. The divide is only noticeable with the older Gen who did not experienced information technology in their teens. The divide is noticeable because companies embraced IT and the internet where the older Gen has to learn from scratch. I guess this divide is also the reason for the birth of this trend of generalizing the younger people.	Age	Age - General	1/81	1.235

I am one of those weird ones who is at either the tail end of Y and pretty much at the beginning of Z. 95 & 96 are the strange years when it comes to this generational mapping. I agree with most of this video, pretty accurate for my generation actually. Some of us went the college route though, as it is though, sometimes it worked for some, and meanwhile it didn't for others. College is a gamble, especially because it really depends where you live, and what the demand is for what ever degree you are trying to acquire. Alternative learning is the best thing about the internet, the problem is obtaining credentials for it I come to find. Employers I find look at experience opposed to just purely pieces of paper. Pieces of paper are important for setting out a pathway to give some legitimacy to know what the fuck you are talking about. Otherwise though, the vast majority of jobs available to us are predominately min wage cluster fucker jobs, which really do not need any type of actual "degree." I guess it is just look at the market around you and try to pander to the demands of your community, and if it doesn't coincide to those demands, then pretty much move. Guys my age are either grinding at work, or are studying to try to make themselves better. I am doing both because I am in my early 20's so it's all fine and well I guess. I am optimistic about the future, living in a world of doom and gloom isn't worth while. I love living in this time, unlimited quantity of information, and therefore unlimited potential. I feel like I'm very much "in the middle" of those groups. I was a '97 baby so I'm pretty much on that border between Gen Y and Z. During my primary school years I remembered going over to my friend's house each Friday to play the playstation, old school split-screen style. After that, everything moved online and by highschool I'd just end up talking and playing with my friends from home over the internet.Now I'm in a mechatronic engineering degree at uni. I think you do have a slight point. Generational "standards" are not the same everywhere. Take my country, Finland for example. In the 80s and 90s, everything came later. Whether it's music, movies, internet. Everything. So in that sense, Im might identify more with the 80s and 90s, even though my teenage years were in 2000-2010. Lot of stuff that were yeaterdays news in the US, were still active in Finland. Now it's a different story. I dont even know anymore that how many different social media platforms actually exist. You may hear that Finnish kids never get any homework (which is not true btw, they just get less compared to US) I got homework every fucking day. Now Im actually worried about people who are 10+ younger then me, only to be proven wrong when a kid who is 13, can calculate better math then I could at that age .When it comes at multitasking, that is just a trait in me, I dont think that any outer sources really had that much influence on that side, but kids that are younger then me, can actually do more stuff at the same time. Hi! I usually love your content, but I think the comparison made in this video is a bit of a nonsense. For most of the cases, you're not comparing a millenial to a Generation Z, you're making a comparison between a 25 and a 15 year old person, which can make results differ from reality. For example, older people tend to be more pessimistic on average, so maybe it's not a "millenial" trait. (Anyways, just hoping to help :)	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/79	1.266

The problem with defining "generations" is that it opens the gate to stereotyping. These stereotypes don't always mirror the truth.For instance my dad, which is from 2 generations back, has the same "if set brand fails me then I will move on" mentality. While a classmate of mine, who was born in 2000, shows brand loyalty to Apple . Both my parents are tech savvy dispite being born before 1980 and I've known people, who are technically millennials/gen Z, be completely tech illiterate. It depends how you're raised and what your interests are, not the loosely defined year range in which you were born.	Apple	Ethnicity - Native-American	1/104	0.962

Well, I'm not sure I can explain it clearly but I'll give it a try.First thing first, stereotyping doesn't apply to individuals. Each and every one that does use it like it was just fool oneself into some kind of confirmation bias.When you say generation "ILikePotatoes" (for instance) prefer to buy things, use it till it isn't only broken but become literally unusable, throw it off then buy again... It doesn't mean nobody from said generation will repair anything in their entire life.Stereotypes describe tendencies. An exception confirms the rule, it doesn't invalidate it.Just like any statistic, it isn't the truth but something, a tool, to multiply your chances of predicting things rightly.Reject stereotypes, and you're like a myopic rejecting glasses. So the user will suffer through the same problem that I am having, that there's not enough room to install anything else.Look, just bring up this issue with the school board. There are more reasons than cost that a parent wouldn't want their teen to own a smartphone, especially an impressionable 13 year old . It possess a security risk where the teen will have easier access to information they aren't ready for or the parent deems inappropriate, which is why many parents who can afford it choose to get their kids flip phones with no Wi-Fi and no data plans. Furthermore, many parents don't want their kids' eyes glued to a screen 24/7. Handing a smartphone to a kid who isn't even legally responsible for their own person is like handing a four year old a bag of chocolates and telling them they can eat only one a day.You're 18 now. I love how all this is determined based on US studies, in the US then pushed on the rest of the world as "fact". People not born and raised in first world countries differ VASTLY from these stereotypes. I deeply resent being piled in with Millennials, I am nothing like the stereotypes, I was never coddled or told I was good enough just the way I was. I never settled for just "participating" and I certainly never felt like the world owed me anything. I have worked my ass off to get to where I am today, I have been exploited, mistreated and overlooked and each time I have stood my ground, either by speaking up or changing my employment. I wish people would stop with the labels. Labels = fuel for unhealthy competition and hate. Racism , because of labels, classism ? Labels, Homophobia , same again. The US is obsessed with "us vs them" and throw labels on everything. Who cares what generation you were born in, seriously, the only thing anyone should be concerned about is how good you are at what you do. We are all just people, we all have our strengths and flaws. Statistics, labels, all these belong in a science lab, not on people. Be yourself and screw what the labels say. Who said anything about third wave feminism? I'm taking about the feminism that sold women the lie that they could both have a full time career and be a good parent at the same time. I'm not talking about people who had to do that out of necessity. Fact of the matter is, being a mother is a full time career choice. You can no more be a good engineer and doctor at the same time as being a mother and a lawyer at the same time. That is why we had marriage in the first place: To have one parent looking after the kids, and one bringing home the bacon. Now, I'm not saying the parent staying home needs to be the mother - but that seems to be the way nature works in most mammals, and I'm betting there is a reason for that. All feminism did now was to lower salaries so that a single parent can no longer provide for his family alone. You know, the old "supply and demand" thing playing out. So now, we're basically stuck in a world were it is difficult for a man to provide for his family on a single pay check - even if the wife prefers to stay at home. And it is the next generation paying the price.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/221	0.452

I was born in 1991, so I'm a Millennial. I grew up with my parents and the schools telling us if we just worked and studied hard then we'd get the jobs we wanted and everything would be great. The recession (Called the credit crunch here in the UK) happened around the time I was finishing school, businesses were closing down left, right and centre and I'd gone to look for work rather than go to college (I honestly was fed up of school and didn't want to be learning anything after. So our careers service was like "Lol go to college, you won't find work now, just stay there a few years and the jobs market'll recover."So went to college from 2007-2010, nothing really recovered much then, but there was this thing in the UK introduced a while before then, but had really taken off called "workfare", the basic gist of that was you were supposed to work for your benefits, okay fair enough really, but companies started sacking/firing their staff and hiring them back for basically free to work for a lot less than they were doing before. I'd worked a couple of months in 2010 until the company told me and the other guy in the IT department "Oh we can only afford to pay one of you, so we're going to have to let the other go." I felt as I'd only been there a few months and the other guy had a wife and a kid on the way I should take the bullet. He was grateful for it and I'd do it again, but thing was I'd ended up having to work for the same company in order to get welfare. Things I've noticed as being born in the late 90's: I've lived much of my (young) life with technology and the internet at my fingertips but I was born early enough just to experience the days where these technologies were only just beginning to be what they are today. Conflicts have defined most of what I see: 9/11 and other terrorist attacks, Afghanistan, Iraq, internal conflicts and rebellion in the Middle East and border wars (Gaza, Ukraine). The 2008 financial crisis was significant for my family, and the years of recovery from that. Because of this I'm very cautious with the money I earn, and when I do shop I do it online. My access to information and knowledge is instant and the way I was taught was much more different than how my older siblings or parents were. The rise of social media and online communications is unprecedented I've made 'friends' (though obviously not in the traditional sense) across the world. This has also led to some contradictions in the culture of youth, trends are certainly significant and widespread but I don't think there is one that has/will define this one. Rather, there will be many of these trends, if that makes sense... Politics. In terms of social views, much of the generation (though obviously not all) would likely be more liberal or at least centre left. In terms of economics, I find that there's a more even spread. In terms of interest in politics, because you're constantly exposed to political news and ideas, the youth of this generation is either incredibly engaged or completely apathetic and cynical of the government/politicians/bureaucracy. To say they "know nothing about the real world" is incredibly idiotic and fails to understand the meaning of the video. Kids have access to the internet, therefore letting them see the cruel bitterness of the world and all the shit it brings. You can argue that newspapers and TV did the same thing for other Gen's, but the difference is that the internet also shows the good in the world that the newer gen so desperately wants after seeing the harshness of their environment. And you may say that itself is stupid and overly optimistic but that's the point. Lord Inquisitor that's a sweeping generalization of two generations. The fact of the matter is that OP is correct to make a statement saying that the cost of living is outpacing salary. Which is why there was a gradual increase on higher education degrees. Business, accounting, nursing are still the most popular degrees meaning you can't make the argument that recent generations are studying bullshit or nothing applicable. Additionally, Since the housing crisis, costs of shelter is high while those who are trying to sell those homes have to sell them at a deficit, which leaves them at a financial loss.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/101	0.99

The Oily Boily Guy Well I can instantly destroy your argument. My uncle who is also a millennial joined the Army for 4 years. Then he got a college degree, now he is working for a major tech company with a nice house and used to live in a real expensive condo in Seattle. So in otherwords, he wasn't at a financial lost at all. Don't get your degree in something useless like gender studies.	Gender	Gender - General	1/75	1.333
Christian Murrell 1. Last time I checked a house was not a luxury, buying luxuries don't compare to buying a house since the average person (in any generation, given salary) would have to pay mortgages on a house since not many people can outright buy one. 2. The whole narrative that milienals are all taking gender studies, and sociology is a falsely pushed idea, since the same 10 most popular degrees have been the same for a decade (management, accounting, nursing, etc.). 3. STEM pushing (going to high schools and telling kids to be engineers) has been around for 20 years which has caused a rise in different engineering majors, who can't find a decent wage.	Engineers, Gender	Gender - General, Nationality - General	2/116	1.724
Gunmasterx7 Congratulations to your uncle, but you missed the point of my argument. A lot of houses in the US were overpriced and therefore no one would buy from the previous owners. Which gave them no choice but to sell the house at a lower value (assuming they don't do any serious renovations to up the value). So milienals can't buy the house since its too expensive, and previous generations can't sell their houses since no one will buy. Also as said previously, gender studies, sociology, and all those "liberal degrees" are not and have not been the most popular degrees. The whole useless degree idea is a false narrative. Christian Murrell wow that was a lot to take in. I'm from Generation Z and my brother and sister are in the oldest age for generation z, they're both doing really well (they're in college but I'm only in 7th). G. Gibson look you're doing exactly what Christian was doing which is stereotyping people based on what year they were born. Some people get handed stuff and others have to work for it, this has been a norm across generations not a "MILLENNIALS ARE SPOILED CHILDREN" or "GEN Z ARE HANDED EVERYTHING" I think if you all took a step back you'd realize that were pretty similar, the main thing that affects our perception of these arbitrary generations is our age relative to others. baby boomers generation X etc. Have all been looked down upon by their predecessors just like we are now they're the angry old people yelling at all these same kids to get off their lawn. This is just how it goes each generation believes is smarter than the one that came before and wiser than the ones that come after but I don't believe it's that simple, trends are useful for collecting data but not for judging individuals. I was born in 97 but still remember all the stuff from the 90s and early 2000s. It's crazy how parents are giving five year olds phones and tablets to entertain themselves when I was able to achieve that same thing with my dollhouse. Back in early 2000s we didn't really play games on phones, and tablets were non existent as far as I'm aware. This was back when landlines still existed, and the first cell phones were those flip phones. Anyone else remember those? You flip open the top and that was the screen and then there was the dialpad?Yeah. Didn't get my first one til I was 11, and I was excited to call and text people a lot because back then that's all you could do.So yeah even though I'm Gen Z not all of us grew up with so much technology. I'm at the tail end at Gen Z really.	Crazy	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/156	0.641

Oh, but I also owned a typewriter! I completely forgot I owned one! I didn't had a computer at the time, but my handwriting severely sucks so I decided to buy a second hand type writer to make sure I at least had readable homework! It still failed epically though, typing on those things are so hard. My real name is 'Chelsea' but I wrote 'Chewbaka', as for example I had accidentally pressed EW instead of simply E. I felt like sinking to the ground of accidentally spelling my name as a misspelling of a Star Wars character. Have you ever managed to type correctly on yours? I definitely prefer the keyboard of my laptop, and there are no ink blobs either. I couldn't count how many times the ink hadn't dried quickly enough yet and I got my fingers covered with ink when taking it out of the machine. I also owned lots of books, I still do. My favourite comics when I was a kid were the ElfQuest comics originating from 1978. I still like to read some occasionally, especially the side comic about Tyleet adopting this human kid. I personally mix everything from different generations to suit my needs. I had a bit of an old -fashioned upbringing. No kissing, make-up and heels until 16, for example. No game consoles, etc until I was in my teens. So I probably have less problems with having 'unpopular' vintage/retro things in my household since I have some old -fashioned qualities anyway. I'm equally interested in things like virtual reality games in an epic fantasy world setting as I am in villages with a more old fashioned way of living and who still do things like potbakery. I love ceramics.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/288	0.347

BonBon LovesSushi i did have a typewriter from parents. I bought another one though. Im pretty sure i was just being a hipster, but i realised i spent too much time on videogames as an early teen so got scared of using them. Plus analogue is just more organic i suppose. I was also being a pretentious twat as i attempted writing a novel and bought a typewriter for it. My dad and brother are computer scientists so i had a lot of access to computers but it was just a point of having some cultural nostalgia, like with anything from pre ww2 art movements and half a decade later when hipsters began tht kind of thing it didnt feel that great. Just the impression that millenial culture sucked. I also oil paint but have zero digital skills, i refuse to have internet outside my own home, and i hate computers for music production. Some of this will change with time. Especially that optimism. Gen-z are just getting out there in the world, they aren't old enough to remember how drastic the economic crash was, nor how life was before 9/11. When the next crash happens, because that shit is cyclical, I think they're gonna have a very hard time bouncing back. As "millennials" we were in a weird position. We grew up in both the 90's and 00's. Technology, independence, opportunity and hope seemed to be in abundance. But we constantly got blame for failures that was not our doing. And then there's Gen Z raised by us coming from parents (depending on the situation) who were more creative, tech savvy, and Dare I say it in the beginning more optimistic until we figured out that we were fucked. Gen Z is smarter and happier risk takers because they were and are raised by a new generation who were raised by another tech savvy (not as) creative and optimistic generation the Gen xers. Beelzebub Depends on if they are Gen Y or true Millennials. I was 21 (and in collage) in 2004 and I had a son (at the same age my parents did) who is now going on 14 years old (a Gen Z). Even if I had held off until I was 24 or 25 like a lot of people back then, he would be around 10 now. And for someone born even earlier than me, like 1980, their children would be older. I know this because most my friends are in their mid-late 30s and they all have kids who are either my sons age or (mostly) older. In MOST small towns in the US (especially in the south, rural areas, and appalachias) people get married and have kids in their early 20s (same goes for the inner cities too). Someone who was born in 1980, listened to Grunge in highshcool on cassette and was working a 9-to-5 in 2001 when a lot of these millennials where 6 years old are not the same. We need to accept that the world moves faster now, and technology rules - and it comes in cycles. We need to define our generations by every 10 years now (or the decade you where born in). The old 30 years to define a gen was at a time when over 30 years change was slow. These days change is year to year. It's a common thing for teens to be verbally abusive and not having strong morals and values. All generation teens share this, since it's part of growing up and maturing. It's all caused by the slow growth of the prefrontal cortex, the part of the brain that's basically behind your forehead. It's the last part of the brain that grows and in this part of the brain, skills like planning, taking responsibility and knowing what's good or bad are developed. That last part is what you're describing. It's not a generation thing but more of a teen thing.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/98	1.02

if youre gonna make a whole video why not get the fundamentals straight...80 to 83 arent millenials, theyre technically genX but also have their own niche designation as Xennial, these are all old marketing terms designed to pinpoint demographics for emerging teen markets, you had to have come of age during the appropriate decade (which is about 15 to 17 years old), Millenials came of age at the millennium and after, people born roughly 79-83 came of age mid-nineties so technically are not millenials...even when I was growing up everybody, and I mean everyone, media, teachers, parents referred to us as genX, its only fairly recent because of how trendy a buzzword and simplistic a blanket term it has become that "millennial" suddenly meant and included the last gasp of genX for some unclear reason	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	5/135	3.704

I'm Gen X. I spent my college years doing research on my phone while having my homework on one monitor and my e-book on another. That said, as somebody older with a bit of experience behind me... when people talk, it makes them feel important to you if you put down your phone, turn off all the tech and listen to them. Yes, it's old fashioned, but people appreciate your undivided attention, even if you don't think they will. Make some good friends... they get you through bad times. I've done most of my life on my own, and a good friend or two can make a big difference on how well you get through the hard stuff... thumbnail is wrong, you’re a millenial. Millenials are born between 1983 and 1998 if you ask me. So like 19 to 36. Kinda like how baby boomers are between their 50s and their 70s, i think its a bigger generation that its given credit for. i’m a month older than you and i wasn’t born into a world of tech - my family didn’t even own a computer till i was 10 and it had a dial up connection. the iphone was first available when i was 12. I remember and was affected, though significantly less than americans my age were, by 9/11. I saw the world change rapidly in the wake of the tech boom and the terrorism fear. That’s who the millenials are. I feel so disconnected from my little sibling’s generation because i was too old for their ”generation defining moments” to define me and i didnt grow up with LGBT rights as a given or grow up with technonology spoon fed to me, y’know? i saw that societal change. That’s why we inbetweeners tend to identify more as millenials - we’re nothing like kids that are just like 6 years younger than us at most but people in their 30s have stuff in common with us, they just seem so distant to us. Loganc6569 Since when do we name generations after the time when they end. Millennials are called millennials because the switch to the new millennium actively mad an impression on him. That means that someone born in 9, at the time of the millennium a baby with the age of one doesn't belong to the millennials anymore. Well here's the thing. There's a gap between the Millennial generation and Gen Z that's not big enough on a Standard time scale to be associated as it's own 'generation', but 90's kids, 90's babies and 00's babies all share common differences. For example I used a big blocky Dell, when I was 2, running Windows XP on AOL dialup, by the time my brother rolled around I was on Vista. I remember watching TV in music class with the tall twoshelved rack that looks like it could fall over any moment but I also remember smart board being integrated in day to day teaching. My entire childhood was in some way, shape, or form impacted by the rapid improvement of technology. because things are rarely as one dimensional as what you are saying. I mean just sheer speed yeah its night and day difference (i remember when the 56k was fresh and new). However back in the old days the internet was a much more free place than it is today. I mean look at how much censorship happens in the digital space now (granted almost entirely in social media). Also in the older days one had much more privacy than many have now. So if you just look at straight numbers of the internet yeah present beats past, but if you look at the cultural influence then it is very arguable that the past was better.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/116	0.862

I was born in 1997 in a town of 2,000 people. I don't feel like I belong to either, considering the speed of which technology has been evolving and changing the world, as well as global events changing people's perspectives. On one hand, I see where many millennials are coming from. Big corporations continue to gain more and more power in our country, influencing our politics adversely. And to an extent, PC culture can be a good thing. I was taught not to be a dick to people just because I don't understand who they are. However, PC culture can get out of hand, and I think a lot of people see only the most extreme perspectives. The reality is most people just want to be treated with respect and dignity, regardless of who people perceive them to be. I also tend to lean towards Gen Z in regards to attitude. I'm a very impatient person and would rather do things myself, and I'm less likely to let people's mistakes go unchecked. I believe that people should be held accountable for their mistakes or sleights against me, not ignored. I'm just old enough however that I was told to go to college at all costs and that getting a degree would automatically make me successful. If you're a young Gen Z reading this, be sure to do your research on degree plans and job opportunity for the career you want to go into. Getting yourself $20,000 into debt (that's a lowball estimate) isn't worth doing a job you'll make 35,000 a year with. You don't have to go to college to be successful, but make sure that you can be successful if you don't go to college.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/287	0.348

I'm not sure how I feel about some of the things said in here. Of course, all of these surveys are done on the majorities of each group, and not everyone is going to fit the mold, which is a good thing in most cases. As a part of Gen Z, I feel like these mass advancements in technology are never going to go away, and being the first generation immersed in it, we're likely not very polished.On top of that, we have some huge problems to start solving. We're running out of natural resources, we're quickly approaching the demographic transition , and rights of equality have clearly only formed tension among people who don't believe in them. The fact of the matter is that everyone has nuclear bombs, and it's crucial that we proceed with immense foresight to fix the economy and international relations that Baby Boomers bent out of shape while also avoiding World War III.Wish us luck. 0 o	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transsexuality	1/162	0.617

As part of Gen Z as well, I feel that you nailed most of the more important things that we'll be facing in the future. If I'm honest, I feel like in the next 10 years the world is going to hit a huge spike somewhere. I try to be as optimistic as possible, but I just don't know what direction this planet is headed in. As part of the new-thousands, I fear what lies ahead more so than anything else in life at the moment. I always talk with my parents and see how much stayed the same from when they were born, to when they birthed me. (They're born in the 70s) But with the way the world is becoming, change has become the norm because of how fast the modern age is moving. What you said about equality isn't really elaborated very well... unfortunately too many millennials and gen z's believe that in the USA not everyone has equal rights. They believe white males are privileged and imagine themselves as victims... a lot of them also are anti-American and believe Socialism and communism are good ideas. If you wanna talk about who is fucking up the world let's revisit the mass consumption and bad practices of disposal that baby boomers and post boomer gen xers are responsible for shall we? Newest gadgets do not come before practicality to most people I know and when they do get them it is through help or because they were fiscally responsible and saved up for such things which is good unless you are one of those people who think poor people dont deserve nice things. I also work 40-60hrs a week and having modest home is a fantasy and I know plenty of other people trying to balance two jobs and an education that are my age or younger. I literally obsess with current events and how things have played out in the past on both a personal and worldwide levels and most of my peers do the same. We try to learn and change what we see as broken in whatever systems we can because of those systems were working then we wouldn't be where we are with stagnating wages and a housing market that keeps rising. I was born in 1994, I think I belong to gen Y. I got my first computer at age 11, and had to use dial-up modem to connect to internet. I got my fist cellphone at age 12 and it was a Sony Erricsson that had blue screen. I listened to CDs on my discman and watched movies on VHS. I witnessed the birth of social media and Wi-Fi. That makes me a millenial. My friend who was born in 1995 also consideres herself a millenial.	Age	Age - General	2/86	2.326
NemoVanessah same thing here and I was born in 1998. My sister was born in 1989, so that might have affected too. I also live in the suburbs of my town and I didn't have access to WiFi, so I used a modem to get into internet for many years. It was really slow, and if I watched more than 2 or 3 videos on YouTube, I would waste all the GB. That was until I was 14 years old . (also got my first PC at age 10 or 11 in 94) but I grew up more like Gen X did as far as pop culture and the way I was raised which from what I remember the 80s and early 90s were much different than how most kids were raised that were born after 93-94. I remember when it was fine and common to leave kids home alone (latch key kids) didn't have to wear helmets to ride bikes, or wear seat belts in the car, and people could smoke in malls, hospitals and pretty much anywhere. .lol. I remember these things starting to change around the mid to late 90s. I personally think we mostly are all a combination of different generations though. So there's one thing that you guys need to remember in that the divide between Millennial and Z is HIGHLY debated. Generally speaking, anyone born during the 90s and the year 2000 can be a mix of Millennial and Z traits. Personally, I was born at the end of 1994, so, by many of your markers, I would be considered a gen Z; however, I myself consider myself a millennial as I fit more of the millennial ideals and thought process. My sister considers herself a millennial, being born at the end of the 90s, but she exhibits a mix of the traits described.Really, there is no true divide between the generations but more of a spectrum and transition period where we find a Gen Z-ennial group. I'm thinking if you born in mid 90s you are between milenials and gen z, you're in transition gen because you witness technology and internet developed but too young to understand until you're older so instead since childhood, you experience gen z since your teenagehood and live your childhood like milenials	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/51	1.961
ivalicetifalucis But that's the point, if you're born Mid-90s it's not until teenage years that you really embraced internet and such. That's what makes you a Millennial. That transition of a childhood where everything was cords, a teenage life where everything went wireless, and an adulthood where everything is "smart." Gen Z grew up in a world where that was all normal to them, Millenials watched it all change. That created 2 different perspectives. Just like how both Gen Z and Millenials grew up with TV being a normal thing. But previous generations had to adapt to it.	Transition	Sexual Identity - Transexuality	1/98	1.02

I really always take the generation stuff with a grain of salt. Remember all the crap about millennials being too entitled because of participation rewards, which is bs, because I don't remember anyone growing up who really valued those more than their worth. I'll try to help, but it's all more art than science:Don't focus on "cutoff" years ... there is a "core" birth year that is most typical for a generation, with fuzzy edges. Three or four years either side of that core year is solidly part of the demographic. Those halfway between the core years are hybrids.Generation V (1922): Children of the Depression, spirit of the war machine, rewarded with a roaring postwar economy.The Quiet Few (1936): US fertility dropped during the Great Depression; this is a small generation that was fully defined by the postwar economic boom.Baby Boomer (1950): The Civil Rights era was central to their emotional growth, and the US economy was still booming as they entered the workforce.Baby Buster (1960): They remember the Vietnam War from a child's perspective, and the economy they joined was all about oil shocks and stagflation and Reaganomics. This is a rump generation of my own creation composed of what are traditionally considered young Baby Boomers and old GenXers.GenX (1972): No memory of Vietnam, but they definitely remember the fall of the Berlin Wall.X-ennials (1979) Reagan isn't quite real to these hybrids.Millennial (1986) No real emotional connection to the Cold War, but the 90s was their playground.Z-llennials (1993) Clinton isn't quite real to these hybrids.GenZ (2000) The 20th Century is history; the youngest members of this generation are the same age as the iPhone.Zalphers (2007) Obama isn't quite real to these hybrids.Generation Alpha (2014) is on-deck ... the youngest members haven't been born yet. Honestly it doesn't even matter, don't look to other people to try and fit into a made-up group it's kind of like black and white, those as races aren't even a real biological or technical thing but it's something people like to try and force us to identify as. A lot of people fall into both and to be honest once anyone hits adulthood, which is not exactly a number so much as it is a mindset, we all just adapt to whatever Society is like around us, figure out what makes us happy and try to obtain it, or we do our best to try. The good news is, the "definitions" of each generation are, like the old adage of needing to use protection during sex , just guidelines that you don't actually have to take seriously.Especially when you are born on or near a dividing line, you can have qualities of both. People will just categorize you as one or the other because it's easier but the terms themselves don't define anything.	Old, Sex	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	2/68	2.941

This is deep occult info and yall who read should be glad you have. This is why, and you may never remember this unless you remember past lives, that the years 1 - 999 played out a microcosm of what will be year 1000 - 9999. Because every 100 years, a new generational outlook is introduced, so the 100s play out starting with 1, up until 199, and then 200-299 play out beings in similar fashion to 2000-2999, just the more numbers the more complexity of consciousness. And thus the first 999 years played out beings of 100-200-300 (trinity conscious, a being aware of itself more highly within a surroundings, as 3 comes back to 1, because 1 dad and 2 mom creates 3 child, but the child is itself a 1 individual combining and creating a totality. Which is why 3,6,and 9 create totalities. Is why 3 goes back to 1 and 6 goes back to 2 and 9 goes back to 3 the tri-trinity in which 9 is 3 totalities creating 1 larger totality, but this is off topic.)So 100-200....etc till 700-800-900. These beings are that new wave of conscious perceptions. Thus the world of a 198 year person is far lost by 240 year, because it's almost like a new species changing its perceptions of how to be and interact with others, itself, and the environment.This is what is happening now with 1900 perceptions beginning to clash at the new 2000 world.1 beings are different than 2. 1 is more selfish, thinks for itself and about self. Nothing wrong with it. 2 cares to relate with others and will care for the world. The issue is when those older generation have accrued such strength to keep the mind set of the older 1000-1999 alive that they'll take control of the minds of the 2000 generations with businesses of this world integrating into the virtual capacities of phones and computers. But eventually naturally that lingering will die off as 1990s people will be the last twilight zone between 2 worlds.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/345	0.29
The few that say you're something completely different are probably insane, because you could really only be one or the other. Like gender. You were only born at one singular point in time, and it can only be relative to either GenZ, or the gen before it.	Gender	Gender - General	1/64	1.562
The generational monickers were made to refer to people that came of age during a large war, were usually drafted, and often perished. Well I think that it's worth considering that millennials (in a general sense) are so pessimistic because they were caught off guard by the harsh nature of reality after years of being told that everything is fine by their much older parents. Conversely, Gen Z saw the Great Recession of 2008 at early ages and what's more, the fact that we've grown up surrounded by technology means that we have far more access to information from an early age than did the generations before us. So in a sense I don't think we're necessarily more "optimistic" but rather I think that we're just more aware and therefore accepting of how reality can be. Not to perpetuate the tired stereotype of millennials being whiny or deluded or anything like that, but speaking from what is a t least said in the video, I believe this to be the case. I was born early 80s, so it wasn't till 95 we had a very basic P.C with dial up modem using A.O.L free trials to help me & my sister with school home work. Even then it was so slow (kept getting booted off so mum cld make calls) & not much was on the internet so we had to go to the library to study from books. My first mobile was Nokia 3310 in 98 till 2004 then got iPhone 3G till the last 3yrs I've had a Samsung5. I'm sick of all the tech now days I'm going to get an old Nokia 3310 again. Smartphones & tablets go off during meal times & during movie night (Sundays), very hard to enforce but it does get done... eventually. I used to be very tolerant but it's pretty much non existent now. I don't like how tech is becoming so complicated so I've started to go backwards with some tech. I did worry a lot about the future but since my sister passed away very recently I don't care about much anymore. R.I.P Kim. X	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/186	0.538

Just because millenials complain more doesn't mean they have done anything to help, most issues like gender pay have been put into law since the 60s but they still go on about that. All I see now is a generation demonizing people over what they think is hate speech, thats not equality thats just PC culture. And the work part is bs, every generation has a group that try to make their hobbies into jobs, as they age they fail and join the rest of the population to get a real job. I think we need a bit more proof that Gen Z is more conservative than Gen Y, as many in Gen Z aren't of voting age yet, but if that indeed turns out to be true, it may not be too surprising. American political preferences are actually quite cyclical, and, while on the whole folks become more conservative as they age , it's not true that older folks on the whole are more conservative tohan younger folks. A prime example: people in their 60s are actually more liberal than people in their 40s. While the former grew up fighting, in their opinion, an unjust war (Vietnam) and thus grew up more liberal, the latter grew up with the father of modern conservatism in the highest office. While people don't agree on whether Reagan was actually a successful president, many who were just starting to form their political opinions (so of age 18 or so) liked him. Coupled with the fact that Carter was not as popular, and that generation was more in line with conservative thought. Meanwhile, millennials grew up with a booming economy under a Democrat (Clinton), and a faltering economy, not to mention another, in their opinion, unjust war, under a Republican. The relative popularity of Obama and the prior points make it so that millennials are liberal on the whole. Gen Z likely will be as well, though the extent to which that's true depends on how the world looks while they're coming of age . If Trump continues to oversee a successful economy, we may have a generation of conservatives (though I question whether social conservatism will thrive in what is the first majority minority generation). However, if the economy tanks, or we get into a war, have some fear that Gen Z will overtake Gen Y on the liberal politics spectrum.	Age	Age - General	4/304	1.316

I got to a high school in Liberal California and most kids don't like the hate speech agenda on the left. Most people here are very conservative, and hold strong conservative beliefs despite how left wing some teachers and the administration as a whole is. We're 'Liberal' in terms of gay rights, legalization and more issues but that has to do with younger people on the right adopting more libertarian views. But we're conservative in economic issues and some other social issues on top of that. Most people like Trump's ideas because Gen Z prefers Nationalism to Globalism for the economy. Obviously, your parents are liberals. Depending on how old you are your opinion can flip on a dime. My sister is 10 and she hated Trump but after literally 15-minute car ride she thought he was good. However, if you're older like teens and developing your own ideas I want you to please explain why he's racist and a misogynist. Prove to me any of his policies the past year has hurt black people and Hispanics who are citizens? Cause it looks like his new nationalist policies have actually helped poor blacks and Hispanics and whites keep and make jobs... Funny huh? Why would a racist do such a thing when Obama was going around shutting down jobs making people lose them...How about women? He has a lot in his top branch of business in his company and he stated his favorite person to work with was a woman... A sexist won't work with the other sex. Now if you pull his sexual assault claims, I am in the notion of "innocent until proven guilty" so take Bill Cosby: I didn't judge him or call him a rapist until last month when he was convicted as guilty. Trump's accusers have done nothing for years and years and let it drop for (potentially I don't know of course) fame and the spotlight. Why do you think his sexual accusers dropped dramatically after election night: Now yes he has one case in the courts right now and Stormy Daniels (which is consensual), well have to see what the courts state. Then school shooters... Oh boy, when you wake up and see "Hey it's the people that are the issue, not guns" we can move forward. But no, everyone in the Socialist Democrat camp is saying ban guns when that isn't the issue. Obviously, the rise of technology has contributed to the rise of school shootings and mental health. We should really look into that and educate parents to look after their kids and make them take breaks, go outside, and more. It's not gunning its people. Guns and the second amendment are put in place in case our government goes Russia 1918 or Chinese 1940s on our asses and we need to fight back. No to "protect us from robbers and hunt" that was on the side. The whole point is so if the US Government turns tyrannical that we can defend ourselves. Limiting guns of all sort won't stop the school shooters, they'll find knives, make pipe bombs, etc look at the UK murder rates... Sure gun violence is down but they are the knife capital of the world. Criminals and sick people will find whatever they can to kill. (Tbh guns kill quicker so in a way it's better then someone stabbing you to death or being next to a bomb and bleeding out. Cuts out the suffering part a lot...)I am not saying you're wrong in our opinions. Just make sure your arguments have weight and you know what you're saying is backed up by facts... Not feelings. That's my main issues with Millennials/Democrats. All about the feelings before facts. "Why should we legalize weed? Cause it feels good and it's not bad" is a horrible argument vs "We should legalize it because it has a low death count, most gangs and criminals are related to weed so we can cut down the prison system, and we have cases in Colorado where the economy boomed." Saying, Trump, is a racist when his actions speak otherwise doesn't hold merit. It's really telling when you see him being nominated for the Global Peace Prize over North Korea or he can offer to cover people under DACA for more border security. Just to make you think my fellow American. :)	Black, Mental, Misogynist, Nothing, Old, Racist, Sex, Sexual, Woman	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	12/630	1.905

Cause politics have a lot to do with generations. Both Gen Z and Millennials have been very political in a lot of ways. Millennials (on average) preach of "tolerance" and "diversity" and don't care if the job sucks or the movie (Star Wars: The Last Jedi) sucks as long as we represent everyone, SJW culture, think modern feminist are great, a huge push against hate speech like Count Dankula getting fined or censoring comedy to have Amy Schumer, and overall want everyone to get along with free education and healthcare and work together in a lovely little fantasy of globalism with rainbows and unicorns!Obviously, I am being dramatically unfunny, but someone will laugh. I wanted to make a point that is no surprise that Gen Z is growing up more conservative. They hate the SJW culture that their parents are leading and want to shut down borders to protect families because Europe is already fucked by Middle Eastern savages, edgier and getting in trouble for "hate speech" to prove how fucking stupid it is and treating Jordan Petterson like a fucking rock star. Gen Z is doing it because conservatism is the new counterculture. Why do you think Trump, someone who voted Democrat in the 1990s who (just like a fuck load of others, like Rosanna, Dave Rubin, and more) now voting Republican? The ideas of old conservative of being racist and sexist are dying but the sense of traditional values, a strong nationalistic identity, and overall not conforming to the nationalism narrative are still strong. Well... At least we can agree Gen Z and Millennials are the least racist /sexist generation of all time! Now we have a huge culture fight on where to go. Socialism/Communism or capitalism. Nationalism or globalism. Work or diversity quotas. Feminism or equality. Soy boys or men.	Nationalism, Old, Racist	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - General, Nationality - General	4/303	1.32

MODERN Republicans believe in gay rights, equal pay, etc... And you're right. Modern liberalism isn't the same as it was in just 1990's. The modern Democrats exhibit many policies that are very socialist... Modern conservatives/Republican party aren't "the party for the white man anymore" its a party for the traditionalist and nationalist. Why do you think more and more blacks and Hispanics are turning red ? The era of racism and sexism is ending and we're left with a generation of true tolerance... I wouldn't call it BS, but it is a crappy situation. Women in the 90s will Scream to the top of their lungs saying "Hey, What's Going On" while men of the era felt like raising their middle fingers in the air yelling "Fuck Tha World" like Tupac, but I could also talk about the fact Princess Diana was still amongst us and complain that Titanic was the greatest film of the 90's if it will make you feel better. lol..... I'm pretty sure they don't get that much, but hey. I kinda think the fact that you could go out and they'd be playing the decent music instead of the lowest common denominator music was a plus. Its good that you can youtube whatever you like... then local music scenes are getting smaller, clubs are getting shitter...and a 'music scene' nowadays probably equates to a series of blog posts on social media. There's also some surprisingly 'ahead of its time' stuff from the 60-70-80s, and might realise how things tend to be rehashes of previous genres today, because remember, they had an underground music scene too! Oversaturating with mediochre bands also makes it much harder to value anything, its like the process of entropy happening, its very hard to stand out.I really can't listen to modern pop music. But there are great bands like in post-rock, underground hiphop and IDM or whatever. Pop music hurts nowadays, its almost relief if something i thought was terrible before came on. IhaveaPlaystation4 No, if you were born in 1999, you are not a millenial! The terms millenial comes from the fact that millenials became teenagers during the dawn of the millenium, not because they were born during the millenium. Civilized Joke That's one of the more important points they kinda missed in this. They touched on it with the more conservative thing, because it tends to be linked, but gen Z is generally way more down to earth than the millenials. I think one of the keys is that being popular on social media was a HUGE 'coolness' factor for millenials but for gen Z it's kind of a mundane fact of life. As such there's a weird transition period where social media was still cool but not the be-all end-all, which straddles the late '90s births. 2000 is basically 100 gen Z, 1994 is like 0 gen Z, and things get messy in the middle. Hotdog Person The World Wide Web (which is what we call the internet now) was created in 1991. Before that, internet was local and did very little of one can do now. Specifically, instant communication outside of closed organisations was impossible, instant retrieval of information also did not exist, and nor did online shopping or social media. Basically, no matter what you call it, it is anything but the internet as we know it. Also, it took a while for the internet to get adopted on a global scale and become accessible, meaning the first time one could practically use the internet was around 1993 (though a stat says only 7 had access to the internet at that time). But then again, it was quite crude, and you couldn't really do much with it. Real internet, which even has a term dedicated to it (Internet 2.0) actually emerged around the year 2000. This means you could theoretically consider yourself a gen z if you were born after 1993 under very specific circumstances, but when we talk about gen z traits, really we mean the age of internet 2.0, which started around 2000. Millennials were born between 1980/81 to 1994. Millennials came of age by the time the new millennium, they remember 9/11, the Facebook, Myspace, & Twitter users, the MP3/iPod era, grew up without cell phones & advanced tech, they're the ones who voted Barack Obama into office for round 1, and they were greatly impacted by the Recession. That is the main indicator of distinguishing yourself as a millennials and gen Z. Gen Z grew up during the Recession, Millennials lives were affected by the Recession directly. The earliest of millennials were already in the work force at the time. The middle & latest were either in, entering, or getting ready for college. Gen Z wasn't directly impacted by the Recession. They were children still in elementary to early high school at that time. Gen Z became adults when the Recession was over and after Obama already won his 2nd term. So if you turned 18 after 2012, you're Gen Z.	Age	Age - General	1/160	0.625
X-90 that's way too broad. Millennials were born from 1981 to 1994. Gen Z lands between 1995 to the mid 00s. Gen Alpha is the late 00s to now. Millennials were the driving force behind the Obama elections, were directed affected by the Recession, and came of age when 9/11 happened. Gen Z became adults after Obama was already re elected in his second term and the Recession was over by that point. So if you couldn't vote when Obama was elected into office, you're not a millennial.	Age	Age - General	1/88	1.136

Morgan Bright its not JUST birth years a little bit of it is how u interact in the world. Especially if ur born on a cut off year. If u have more in common with millennials ur probably one. U might find this interesting. My grandma thought she was a baby boomer her whole life. NOW she is considered silent generation because the cut off years changs. In about 10 years theyll start saying anyone born before between 84 and 2000 is a millennial and it will probably stay there. So ur probably a millennial. There are cross over gens too. Like ppl born in the late 70s are called Xennials. Then there are silent boomers. Ppl in their late 60s NOW. I think ull probably die a millennial not a gen z. Another guy on ted x said he believes its based on major events too. He says if ur young and u processed 9 11 as a major tragedy u are a millennial where as if u dont remember it ur a gen z. MegaAirplanelover Well that really just depends on your economic situation. For example i was born in 2000 and i was adopted by people that are older than your average mom and dad (around 50 at the time) and i never used the internet until i was 11 years old (so about 5th grade) and my friend had a old windows XP computer and he let me watch video's on it, I also knew a time before smartphones. So by your definition i am a millennial, but if we go by the dates im a Gen z	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/96	2.083

Generation Z are.....Concervative: They are more Money oriented after witnessing their Parents live through the Great Recession. Are less likely to be late to class. Less likely to like Tattoos and Body piercings. Are less likely to try Alcohol . And almost half of them attend Church (probably due to their parents)...Liberal: Overwhelmingly support Gay Marriage and Ethnic Diversity. Are more likely to have a diverse social circle. Are even less tolerant towards Institutionalized discrimination. Are more concerned about the Environment. And are more likely to support Gun control. There's no such thing as a "concervative" - you mean conservative - and those are the Sharia law loving, gay-hating, women-controlling, religious crazy people who hate our country and want Biblical law/Sharia law in place of the constitution. I have read many comments but I believe I am right, yes it can be important that individuals follow a group instead of there own goals but today much of Millennial society groups are dominated by the few who tell the individual what to think, say and do, even if its against there will. Millennial society not all of them hate free speech, any thing they disagree with they call hate speech and try to shame the individual. Debate has always been important, its the best way people can solve society problems and sometimes its the least popular idea that's the best. Millennials just want to look good all the time and without any research they will follow what they believe will make them look good in society. This is destroying Western society, I feel sad for Generation Z because of Millennial self hate for there culture, history, nation state and freedoms, Generation Z will have to face a future less than our own, Globalization and Multiculturalism have failed, its not me who says this, its our leaders, Globalization has spread poverty and war, Multiculturalism has become a broken society. Sorry Generation Z but the future is less for you and more conflict.	Nation	Nationality - General	1/203	0.493

I guess I'm Gen Z, but I was born in 1999 and I feel like there should be a separate generation for people born between 1997 and 2000 because we have a different experience than both millenials and Gen Z. We remember a time before the internet, but we don't remember a time before 9/11 and the security hike that came with it. It sounds like you need to consider relocating, and coding is a great skill for the IT career field and is necessary for that but not much else. Coding is also just a piece to a myriad of different types of careers. Coding itself won't get you very far but you're actually interested in being IT then you'll need to branch out and find what exactly interests you, most companies have websites that need maintenance, you can use coding skills to do bounty work, and even branch into doing security for larger organizations. it's true people assumed coding would become a common skill nearly equal to reading and that is not nor do I imagine it ever will be true, but it is essential for those who are serious about IT. Gen z does have the benefit of being part of an international culture compared to prior generations. Millenials saw the rise of this culture and gen z will grow up in a world with knowing nothing else but this culture. Prism You are absolutely 100 wrong. Pornography is degrading, disgusting, and no amount of safe sex adverts or PSAs will change the inherently immoral nature of pornography and the consumption of pornography. Pornography changes the brain. Just like an addictive substance, consuming pornography causes a overwhelming release of dopamine (the 'feel-good' chemical) in the brain. Repeated use causes your brain's dopamine receptors to shut down, and fewer receptors cause a person to seek more exciting, violent, taboo, or hardcore forms of pornography. Over time it becomes more difficult to feel happy or good about anything except for when a person consumes pornography, and it actually shrinks your frontal lobe. By the way, serious substance abuse such as cocaine works the same exact way, because pornography is an addiction. In one of the most comprehensive studies on porn use ever conducted, researchers found that after being exposed to softcore sexual material, both men and women were significantly less happy with their partner's looks, willingness to try new sex acts, and sexual performance. Even being exposed to porn just once can make people feel less in love with their significant other. Your brain is always making pathways. Upon an experience which brings a blast of dopamine, your brain makes a neuro 'roadmap' to reach that same place. The complex reward system in your brain links the exciting, dramatized, new, strange, or even violent acts in pornography with 'feeling good.' Meanwhile your brain dissociates 'feeling good' with things like cuddling or intimacy because those things don't bring the same blast of dopamine. As a result, regular turn-ons like kissing and touching or human connection don't work, and you can only become aroused by the raw, loveless, and sometimes abusive actions in pornography. In fact, excessive consumption of pornography can lead to sexual dysfunction in men, including a decreased sex drive and erectile dysfunction, especially in young men. While men can experience chronic ED as a result of blocked blood vessels, heart disease, or diabetes, about 15-20 of ED problems in teens and young men can be attributed to porn consumption. Pornography falsely represents sex and women. The majority of women employed in the porn industry are paid based on their body and how they visually respond to what's being done to them. These women often get plastic surgery or are photoshopped into having a body deemed 'sexy.' Those exposed to pornography often hold an unrealistic expectation of sex and their partners, and they become unhappy with either their or their partner's bodies. Women have scars, stretch marks, signs of age, cellulite, fat, asymmetrical bodies, uneven breasts, body hair, wrinkles, bags under their eyes, chubby necks and thighs, thick ankles, ugly feet and hands, etc. People, especially teens exposed to porn associate women structured like Barbies with either all women or sexual pleasure itself, changing the brain's view of arousal and physical beauty. Porn also depicts women who always enjoy sexual acts, even the violent or abusive ones. A woman can be degraded horribly in disgusting, revolting, torturous, and painful ways, but they are taught to act sexually satisfied or simply accept what is happening. Teens learn from this that women should like everything that is done to	Age, Chubby, Common, Fat, Handicapped, Sex, Sexual, Woman, alcohol	Age - General, Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol, Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments, Physical Identity - Physical Features, Social Class - Working class	20/1278	1.565

If you are suggesting Teenage girls are sexually available to grown men, and need to sexualize themselves you are disguting and gross. LanceAllott The most successful Internet porn sites and films are those that discover new ways to humiliate and inflict cruelty on women. In the Web site Slut Bus, women are lured into a van, offered money for sex, filmed having sex, and then dumped on the side of the road. Money is held out toward the woman as the van pulls away. She is always left without payment. The message is clear. Chris Hedges, Empire of Illusion: The End of Literacy and the Triumph of Spectacle. While there are important questions to be asked about how this happens, there can be no doubt that pornography has effects in the world... Dines, G., Jensen, B. and Russo, A. 2013 'Consumption of Pornography and Harm', in Dines, G. (ed), Pornography the Production and Consumption of Inequality, Taylor and Francis, Hoboken p. 29In porn, the women's lack of human qualities often results in an inability to see just how violent the sex is. No matter how cruel the sex, the one question I can always count on hearing from a man after my presentation is, 'Women enjoy doing what they are doing, so why is porn a problem?' Of course, these men have no empirical evidence to support this, just their observations of the porn they masturbate to. When I ask them if they would like to see their wives, girlfriends, or sisters in their position — in an attempt to humanize the porn performers — they are quick to respond that their loved ones are different from the women in porn; their women would never 'choose' such a job. The image these men seem to have of women in porn is of a woman accidentally stumbling onto a porn set one day, and realizing that this is what she has been looking for all her life -Gail Dines, 'Pornland: How Porn Has Hijacked Our Sexuality,'	Sex, Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	7/333	2.102

LanceAllott 'There are very heart breaking and horrible things about the pornographic world. But, most of those things happened to actresses and actors long before they arrived in the pornography world. The pornography industry is just a place where a lot of victims relive their abuse, where they can continue to destroy themselves like their abusers destroyed them. That's what is the most disturbing to me. The incest, rapes, child abuse and neglect that become the springboard for a lot of participants to enter the industry. People in the industry will tell you this isn't true, but I learned everything to the contrary. This excuse makes it easier to go to work, that's all.' Interviewed by IFQ, Shick Garcia also said that, and 'I consider those scenes [of double and triple penetration] as real "hardcore' [...]. Other girls had to do worse. Starting with double vaginal penetration, double anal penetration, then both at the same time. Imagine four guys, North-South, East-West, and the girl on doggie-style, barely able to breathe, during a two-minute close-up, the minimal time required [...]. I've seen those girls [from Eastern Europe] suffering and crying [...]. Imagine a girl with no experience, not speaking the [same] language, far away from her home, sleeping at a hotel or on the set. She's got to do a double penetration, a vaginal fisting, along with an anal fisting, sometimes both at the same time, a hand up her ass, sometimes two. At the end, you've got a girl in tears who's pissing blood because of lesions, and who generally shits herself because noboby explained to her that she needed to have an enema.[...] After the scene which they are not allowed to interrupt, and anyway nobody listens to them, the girls get two hours to rest. They get back on the set [...]. Firstly, memory is a subjective criteria, I know someone born October 1998 who remembers it since she lived in Manhattan at the time, and at the same time I know plenty of 1996 borns who don't remember it at all. I also know a ton of 1996-1998 borns who remember the year 2001 itself, including the part of it before 9/11, but not 9/11 itself, since they were still at an age where they didn't truly understand the concept of death yet. Hell, even someone born in 1993 would've most likely been too young to understand the full impact of 9/11 when it happened, despite being able to remember the event like yesterday.Oh, and the social impact of 9/11 was a lot smaller in countries outside the US, especially in ones that have been dealing with terrorism many times before 9/11.	Age, Transition	Age - General, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	2/263	0.76

I have a large interest in aviation and aircraft carriers to go along side it, and am working on getting a pilot's license. I've gotten to fly inside of a B-17 from WW2, and have seen tens of hundreds of aircraft, tanks and other vehicles in museums. I lived in a secluded area for 8 years and explored the area's forests and lakes hauling around a bb gun for a reason I don't remember. Trust me when I say, you don't know anything about teens. Most dgaf about politics. Most don't pay any attention to Lil Tay, Lele Pons, or Jake Paul. I never even said our generation was the best, because I know we're not. Every generation thinks they're better than the previous one. Thomas Lusk - I'm merely stating facts - I'm not calling for banning or executing you Gen Z people the way many of your generation thinks and wants to act like when it comes to opposing views. I'm still allowed to say your generation's views are trash (and likewise, you're allowed to say that about mine) - that's not intolerance. Also, yes, most guys at my school also played sports, played video games (at the time it was Wow and Counter Strike probably), watched YouTube, talked to girls, and slept in class too...just like every generation of high school kids did...you're not a special snowflake because you did something that literally everyone else of every other generation did (minus of course, YouTube and playing video games since those weren't around for those other generations). Moreover, hundreds of thousands of Gen Z kids DID in fact go to anti-gun rallies and demonstrations - both during that March for Our Lives march, and at their schools, and then complained if their principals didn't want to allow such demonstrations to take place, for fear of inciting more shootings, since there would be kids outside of school, creating open targets for any other would-be school shooters...but of course, in true Gen Z fashion, your generation whined and went to social media (because of course you would) to demonize your principals and say "LALALALALA WE DON'T HEAR YOU" instead of actually LISTENING to the LEGITIMATE concerns the adults (Millennials and Gen X, along with some of the Forgotten Generation people) had. Because most protestors are typically in their middle 20s. Keep in mind that "hippy" has a negative connotation and comes from the baby boomers protesting the Vietnam war/Civil Rights for black people. The baby boomers were shamed from their previous generation for these protests. They were seen to not have jobs and do drugs.Lets see what what gen z starts protesting about. Gen Z point more to be self entrepreneur in the future (es photographer, youtuber,..., while millenials usually did a lot of small jobs (car wash,...). I think you missed this difference, because many Z like me are optimistic of future because of this characteristic.I've changed my jobs 6-7 times in 2 years, now I still do 3 of them, but that's the point. I don't care about my education, I care about what I create for myself and I don't see anymore the point of an old system like the classes of schools. We should change many classes with more that are suitable for the future, we study sex education, but what about "sources education" (I k, pretty bs this name)? We do a lot of researches online, because those are very easy, useful and interesting, but many will influence our future.Gen Z is pointing to a totally different future.Baby boomers where people that invented many things because were needed, gen X leaded into the internet growth and now is the gen Z that know everything about it.I'm sure the way of working of gen Z will soon be standard for every office before 2030	Old, Sex	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	2/199	1.005

Both millennials and Gen Z in western countries are just snowflakes.They easily can be manipulated as they think less and less (independent thoughts are dead) and all their information are injected by social media. They can't handle tough situations in life.They are mostly addicted to cigarette, alcohol , weed and etc.They have less healthy activities like sports, mountain climbing and etc that's why they are mostly weak and depressed.Their food consumption are disaster that's why just with a simple wind they become sick.And last but not the least... That's outdated.The 1997 cutoff for Millennials is based off of Pew's sources from 2015. They updated them in March 2018, and are now using 1996 as the cutoff. Plus, there's nothing cut off worthy about 1997, they didn't hit their first milestone age (5) until after 9/11, and they didn't even spend any of their teen years in the 00s, which were the Millennials decade. Most sources on Wikipedia use either 1996 or 2000 as the cutoff for Millennials. Earliest source uses 1992 (Statistics Canada), and latest uses 2004 (Strauss & Howe).This means 1993-2004 is the transition . Breaking it up, 1993-1996 would be Late Y, and 2001-2004 would be Early Z, leaving 1997-2000 as the Y/Z Cusps. Kevin Madzima lol of course you are - you don't know the alternative. Come back in 10 years once you've had a chance to be affected by government policies properly. Until you've voted against such policies only to have them brought in anyway.It has nothing to do with "thinking for yourself". That's such a naive mindset.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/57	1.754

Well, everyone's their own person and not all attributes of generations stick to the people grouped into them. For instance, I am technically Gen Z, and I find myself sometimes having a hard time talking to my peers as I am not into what they are into (i'm a nerd) and they tend to have some very short attention spans. Luckily, I am not the only one who does not "fit the mold", and there are a lot of people who I know and have longer attention spans, and some of which are more social than the "mold requests". So, in all your age doesn't matter, its your personality which does.	Age	Age - General	1/111	0.901

thanks jk that has nothing to do with it...	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/9	11.111
The issue is that when you narrow it down to such a specific date it doesn't account for people born near that. If someone was born 1999-early 2001 they wouldn't be old enough to remember 9/11 and they would go to high school with kids born after 9/11	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/48	2.083

Result analysis:

- Taking into account the words that were detected, we can reach the conclusion these comments are associated with : : Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments;Age - Over 65s;Age - General;Social Class - Working class;Age - Youngsters;Ethnicity - General;Religious Identity - Muslim; Ideological and Political Identity - General;Sexual Identity - General;Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality;Sexual Identity - Transexuality;Ethnicity - Native-American;Social Class - Destitute;Gender - Female age and physical appearance;Physical Identity - Physical Features;Ethnicity - Black;Nationality - General;Nationality - French;Gender - Female sexuality;Nationality - Chinese;Gender - General;Religious Identity - Jewish;Nationality - German;Nationality - European or anti-Europeans;Ethnicity - Asian (East- China, Japan, Korea, Philippines, Vietnam);Sexual Identity - Female homosexuality;Physical Identity - General;Ethnicity - Asian (South- India, Pakistan, Bangladesh);Gender - Female intelligence;Behavioural Addiction - Drugs;Ethnicity - Roma;Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol;Nationality - Italian;Nationality - Mexican;Religious Identity - Protestant;Ethnicity - White;Nationality - Southern European;Nationality - Japanese;Social Class - General;Nationality - American;
- The percentage of hate speech related words is 0.7657.
- Considering that the variable Age - Over 65s has the most occurrences in the post, we can interpret that this is the predominant hate speech.
- Overall there were 5534/29930 occurrences of hate speech related comments.
