Millennials show signs of mental retardation as a group. There is something wrong with them. Seriously. Something is not healthy about this group of people.	Mental	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/25	4.0
Statistically majority of millennials all over the world are leftist, liberalist, indoctrinated, commercialist, adulterous, globalist, racist , materialistic youth that had destroyed the moral fabric and naturalistic characteristic of a society. They are ignorant sheep, alcoholic and had more lust towards Beer, dance, social media, fashion, video games, celebrity shows, music, movies, adultery and porn. Infact they had raised those trends. They are the most arrogant, irresponsible generation who had raised the culture of self projection. Millennials are indoctrinated sheep who stress and live the culture of group think and collectivism. Millennials are ignorant, corporate mindset gen who never question the authority. The millennials literally always summons the Satan. Millennials market had been saturated and declined. Generation Z are more conservative, ideology, philosophers, individualist, intellectuals, creative thinkers and nationalist,. Mostly people in that Z generation will break the Chains of globilists, group enslavement, racism , zionisms, One World Orders, economic, political, social, moral and cultural crisis in this World. 1. Any proof, studies, substance? Nope. Just assumptions. Nice.2. You think millennials are entitled? Try working with baby boomers! They can't endure any change whatsoever and they only believe in themselves (generally.) They don't want to help millennials become better. How do I know?? I was raised by them and I work for them.3. I agree about the dopamine idea. It is hurting not just millennials, but everyone.4. How is sitting there and complaining about these things anything more than a long-winded comedy routine? This guy and all the old people that sit and complain about young people aren't accomplishing anything. Hard working people, young and old , helping eachother and working hard is what will make change.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/120	1.667

This is probably the best comment I've read. I'm a millennial and coworkers always want use my age as a parameter for their prejudices. And because of this my ideas are shot down. Wtf 1994 and after? Millennials were born in the early 80's through mid 90's. If you 35 your still a millennial. If your born in 1996 congratulations your on the very tip of the millennials. The guy is Gen X he's 43 he's not even 8 years older than the oldest millennial. Sure my spelling sucks. But at least i know what a Baby boomer, Gen X, and Millennial are. Baby Boomers are mid 1940's through early 1960's. Gen X is mid 1960's through early 1980's. Gen X stops at like 1980. Millennial start at about 1981-1996. There's a lot of people out there who don't even know what generation they are. Say "I'm a Gen X i was born in 1984". No dumbass your a early Millennial. Or say "I'm a Baby Boomer I was born in 1969". Nope your a early Gen X. This guy is full of shit. He knows absolutely NOTHING about Dopamine or basic human neurology.Dopamine is not just a "reward" chemical. It serves a MULTITUDE of purposes and without it in our brains, we'd become catatonic. It expands blood vessels, and it even assists in RESISTING impulsive behaviors. People with ADHD, unlike what this jackass is saying in some of his talks, are in part suffering from decreased dopamine activity, thus making it difficult to resist urges. It's got nothing to do with looking on your phone or being on social media, and saying it's a "misdiagnosis" is undermining the hundreds of thousands of professionals who've done more peer-reviewed research in one year of their lives than this asshole could even understand in a lifetime.You know how else dopamine works? In conjunction with a multitude of other neurochemicals. You don't just get a "dopamine rush" when having sex, drinking, or eating, you're also getting adrenaline, endorphin, opioids, and many others. Hell, even in a reward process, Dopamine isn't responsible for making you feel good, it's responsible for releasing the chemicals, like opioids, that make you feel good. In other words, Dopamine is not a simple scapegoat you can pin to the reason why the digital age has people looking at their cell phones and engaging more prevalent through social media than in real life. This is the argument of a pseudo-Luddite using pseudo-science and charm than actual information.This man is attempting broad stroke the greatest problem the Millenial generation is facing through talking down to them about how much time they're spending on the internet, and not the litany of other issues that are plaguing our society as a whole. Before that, we had parents saying that the damn death metal and satan was killing us all, and before that the damn hippies, and before that rock and roll. He's a fraud, a liar, and he's getting away with it every time someone believes his shit. Millenials know how to interact, and how to form deep, meaningful relationships. They know how to appreciate a hard day's work, and they aren't some mysterious creature that can be explained by a single neurochemical. They are people, they are individuals, and nothing more. Externalizing these behaviors on something like Dopamine is a useless oversimplification. Given that Simon is grouping this issue as a "Millenial" issue overlooks the fact that Millenial brains are largely unchanged from the generations before them, thus Dopamine works the exact same way as it would in a Baby Boomers brain than it would a Gen X brain, and all of them have been exposed to modern technology and communication, and therefore are not immune to the trappings he's merely making up. It's about the individual. There are reasons why someone attaches a value to a behavior like checking facebook every 2 minutes, and if it's truly a problem in their life that's keeping them from their own perceived success it needs to be examined on the individual level. Before the dopamine comes a thought and a behavior, and that is all dependent on the individual and their life and outlook on it.In short, this talk is all bullshit, and this man is shamelessly promoting himself using misinformation.	Age, Nothing, Sex	Age - General, Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	5/543	0.921

King yes, im well aware that there are people from my generation and even older generations that think that "Free" schooling is a good thing. But the majority of the people who think that way are millennials,. once again, nobody should be forced to use their own hard earned pay check to pay for other people's education. Its not my responsibility to fund other people's education. The only responsibility I have is helping my own kids. And even then, i've taught my kids to do for themselves and be independent. Bad parenting is one of the reasons millennials are coddled and feel entitled. You need to get this entitlement mentality out of your head. I assume that you're an adult? So you should know that part of being an ADULT is learning how to stand on your own two feet. Not having other people paying your way of life. This is a huge part of the problem of why millennials refuse to do for themselves. Because of people like you that coddle them and not allowing them to do for themselves. When you have a system that forces people to take care of these kids, you dont motivate the kids to be self sufficient. Once again, once a person reaches adulthood, they are responsible for themselves. Many of the youths of today want to play "adult" when it comes to partying, drinking and having sex with multiple people. But when it comes to the RESPONSIBILITY that comes after that, then they want help from others. These people cant be an adult for some things and expect help on other things. It doesnt work that way. If they want to play the grown folks game then they need to take the grown folks responsibility and consequences that comes along with it. Simple as that	Nobody, Sex	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/303	0.66

King Ohh..Are we a little butt hurt here??? The problem really is, people like YOU with this entitlement mentality. And anyone who disagrees with your views, you get triggered and offended. are you sure you're not a millennial yourself? If you think that paying for people's tuition is a good thing then perhaps you should use all your savings and pay for everyone elses tuition and to see if you can make the world a happy place. But dont expect MOST people to go along with you.. And the ones that do go along with you are entitled freeloaders with an entitlement complex."How is speaking on college expenses somehow relate to everything in life? "......Because as i mentioned before, one of the problems is that kids dont save for their schooling and splurge on other things. of course its none of my business what these young kids choose to spend their money on, but when they start expecting me to pay for their education, then it becomes my business. Stop acting like an entitlement brat and accept that not everyone will agree with you. OOPS i forgot, you're a lefty. So i guess being entitled comes with the package. Alex Rodriguez Yes, I responded to a post you made a year ago, but you still found a way to respond back to it even though it was a year old post. So that would mean that you are the one in fact that is hurt over a comment. People respond to year old posts all the time. It's the internet. When you put something out there it doesn't go away. I know that may be a little hard for you to comprehend given the fact that you were born in the '60s, but if you ask nicely, I won't have any problems holding your hand and explaining it to you. And you didn't have to respond to what I wrote. Yet you did and now here you are, projecting your insecurities and problems on to me because you can't accept who are. I would give you some numbers to people I know that are therapist and they would do it for free, but we know how you are about receiving hand outs. So I guess you should take your own advice and get off your ass and go pay for it yourself.And no, you can't do this forever. Just admit that you're a typical triggered millennial that got his feelings hurt because my opinion is different from yours." I'm almost certain you're about close to kicking the bucket here in a few years so I wouldn't waste the prescious time you have left on this Earth trying to "trigger" people over the internet."But the thing is YOU ARE wasting precious time responding because clearly, i got you mad and triggered. "Aye best of luck to and your job at trolling. Keep at it and maybe one day you'll actually upset someone over the internet. "Looks like i already did. Look how crazy i got you going. you're an entitled little boy who was obviously raised wrong and never had parents to teach you to do for yourself. in one of your first posts you claimed that you were older but as i read more of your posts, you clearly are hiding the fact that YOU ARE a millennial yourself. Alex Rodriguez No, I asked you a pretty simple question. That's all. You're the one who keeps crying about other things that have nothing to do with the topic at hand, but that's not completely your fault. You're at that age where your mind and memory starts to go against you. I really think you should take a break from this, I really don't think it's good for your health. I'm young so you don't need to worry about me "waisting time." You should take that concern and focus it on yourself. Maybe you wouldn't be such a bitter elderly individual if you had actually took the time to focus on your own health rather than trying to "trigger" people on the internet. Alex Rodriguez It's amazing how you still try and twist things to fit your narrative. You made a post, and I asked a question. That's it. There was no anger or bitterness on my part, but the moment I challenged your way of thinking, you immediately jumped into defense mode and started going on a rant. It's to be expected given the fact that you're elderly. And once again here you go bringing up other things that have nothing to do with the topic at hand. Honestly stop hurting yourself. This is not good or ok. I know your old and stubborn, but you have to listen. Stop this and check yourself into a nursing home because it's very clear that you're not married or have any kids. I can't imagine someone wanting to marry you and then have kids with you. So this is something you're going to have to do yourself. I know for you it's going to be hard to accept help from others, but it's ok. Mephisto Cat I agree with this. You can't even have a civil conversation with a millennial. They'll just barely look you in the eye and say two words. I rent out rooms in my home and was going to rent out to a millennial, and he arrived at my house, texted me that he was there and when I didn't answer his text, he left, assuming that I wasn't there. I park in the garage, so it's not like he assumed my car wasn't there, he saw there was a garage. He really thought the fact that I didn't answer his text meant I wasn't at the house. That's how much he relies on technology. When I asked him why he didn't ring the bell, he said 'Idk man, I'm not used to door bells lol' That's why I only rent out to older folks. His father got him into the top class where he was out of his depth. That was when I knew we had a problem. I am white. If I had been in the bottom 50, there would have been no chance of me being put in the top group. I knew full well that in the 1970's it would not have happened. According to me this generation is "retardly dumb ." Where everyone thinks what's actually bad is good, in today's generation word, it's "cool." Example: They like bad, fake things than actually good things, they think every bad thing is "cool" which is normal in adolescence age but is really a big problem and many more things. They are really not aware of reality and this fact will really affect the next generation and is always was and is the problem. And the biggest problem is they know every rights of themselves but don't give a fuck about others (Iam an individual bs). They think everything is right but again they don't know a single thing about life and how life works. They can't stand a single good or real person, athlete, musician,etc and think they are fake. Long before I saw this I had worked out that teens these days have an overwhelming sense of entitlement, want instant gratification and the consequences or punishments are unfair because it was never their fault to begin with! Now we have established the problem, HOW DO WE FIX IT!!!! As a solo mum of a teen I need to know how to deal with the 2 year old tantrums when they don't get what they want instantly! They want to be treated like a young adult but behaves like a spoilt kindy kid!!! Gets violent and destructive thinking this will get them what they want!!!! HELP!!!	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/106	0.943

Sadly, suicide is up across all ages group. Furthermore, the economy (while better) still sucks which has challenged all generations but especially Millennials. Not surprisingly Millenials feel left behind because they have been. Companies need to realize this group has the highest levels of college debt partly because their parents did not really sit down with them and explain how debt works. Now a bunch of money grubbing bank executives are living high on the hog while many young adults are just scrapping by. It is a shame and a sham. Education used to be a way out of economic despair...now it causes economic despair. That is the real difference between the generations old and new.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/116	0.862

Okay well, obvious trolling aside I'm going to address this "rebuttal" more to add to my original point;I'm not saying the points brought up in this video aren't worth discussion or consideration. On the contrary I wouldn't be surprised if this diatribe about the generation generally agreed to have been born between 1980 and 2000 (yes those are the years generally agreed upon for the millenials generation, look it up) contains more than a few pearls that might encourage introspection, deliberation, and even promote growth.The problem is most of the "proof" and "data" presented is easily debated to the opposite, anecdotal, or of even lower quality as far as evidence goes. It relies on cognitive bias and is presented less as; "everyone should give this some thought" and more as age old rhetoric of "kids these days". Every generation twists it's hands and frets over the next. Be it helicopter moms or that supervisor at your first job that wouldn't shut up about how lazy and self entitled this new generation is. And it has always been this way for time immemorial.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/184	1.087

Don't worry buddy. We live in a glorious new age where the definitions to words can be found very easily. [LINK] There. I even gave you a hand-dandy link. That is a great video. It says every thing that I try to say to my 13 year old . It is not easy but it can be done a real relationship must be formed and maintained. We must get the message across to them.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/44	2.273

There are some great points (and some harsh generalizations) in this video. As a late millennial myself I see that the cellphone and Facebook discussion is extremely pertinent. We grew up in a technology environment. The computer (AOL, chat rooms, email, etc) was a huge part of my upbringing. The cell phone wasn't readily available and widespread until I was a late teenager, but as an adult today, I carry a cell phone wherever I go (and use it as my alarm clock!). However, blaming things on corporations and that it is the corporation's responsibility to fix things is irrational. There is no way to change an entire society's perception of their self-worth through actions the leadership needs to do for its employees. Doing so sets up an incorrect precedence that individuals will then be able to find purpose in life (and overall increased satisfaction) through coming to work every day to put food on the table and if they don't feel like they are making an adequate impact through their actions it is the corporation's leadership's fault. It is just shifting the blame onto someone who has absolutely nothing to do with the original problem in the first place. Setting clear limits is something everyone should be doing (whether at work or in their personal lives) but this type of video makes it seem like all millennials are some sort of cry baby, irrational, unappreciative, underprepared, ungrateful generation- and that is just not the case. Millennials (especially younger ones) are a technology and instant gratification group of people- that I wholeheartedly agree with from the video. Except, I don't see it as all negative. Our society will never revert to non-use of technology. It has brought us medical and life-saving miracles, efficiency, widespread dissemination of information (both good and bad) by the click of a button, the ability to acquire needs/wants within hours to days, etc. Things in this world are changed forever, and if we think that putting cell phones away before and during a meeting will change the way people live (and have satisfaction in) their lives then we are living in a fantasy world. We must be innovators of how we can adapt the prior way of doing things to the ways of the future so that old, current, and future generations can be productive and fulfilled members of society. Times indeed are changing, and we must work together intergenerationally to plant seeds of prosperity and wellbeing for all instead of placing blame and shifting responsibility to areas that are inappropriate.	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	2/425	0.471

Dealt a bad hand?Let me tell you what a bad hand is, kids.FIRST our grandparents had to flee their homes in Western AND Eastern Europe because of World War I and starvation and no work.THEN our parents went through poverty, the depression, no food, no work, the Dust Bowl, etc.THEN World War II hit (FDR KNEW Japan was going to bomb Hawaii, but that’s another history fact lesson) and our fathers and uncles and sometimes mothers and aunts (in factories and as pilots!) left for the Pacific and Europe and had NO communication sometimes for months if EVER from their families and were slaughtered at ages 16 (many lied about their ages to serve to send money home to poverty-stricken families), 17, 18.... to save our entire planet from totalitarianism, communism, wipe out of our culture, freedom of religion, etc, and imprisonment. There is one reason why the world, and our nation, is in the complete melt-down it is in, and that is because God, Jesus Christ our Saviour has been taken out of our Judeo-Christian-founded culture and way of life. It started in the 60s, with those in power planting drugs into our culture, especially into the black neighborhoods to control them but it backfired, and through systematic, calculated worship of money and fame and ’talented entertainers, our generations have been ALLOWED to be raised to not believe in God, to be narcissistic and selfish, self-gratification presides over kindness to strangers and those in need. Our nation is free because of military men and women and God Almighty blessing us – not many join the military today and thanks to an anti-Christian muslim who has been ignorantly allowed to sit in our White House, our military has been decimated and turned into a satanic-profering club where ministers and clergy are not allowed to discuss God, have Bible studies, Bibles on their desks, share services, NOTHING. And this was all prophesied to happen.It’s all about feelings now, which are fleeting and subjective. It’s all about ”ME! ME!”My parents’ generation and not all of my generation did not turn our nation into what it has become today, a God-bashing, God-mocking, self-absorbed, entertain-me, what’s-in-it-for-me, selfish, slovenly, disgusting idolization of the world and its products. That came from satan being allowed in and Jesus Christ our Lord being thrown out. My generation had President Kennedy establishing the Peace Corps, of which hundreds of thousands of young people volunteered to go all over the world to help poverty-stricken people. The generation since the 80s at large has their heads bent over texting while driving or walking and ignoring reality and embracing danger – danger of losing their souls, their lives, many focused on simultaneous blaming older generations, God Almighty Himself and accumulating as much technology garbage as quickly as possible.The old saying, ”If you think education is expensive, try ignorance” is not only plausible, it is factual, it is a reality. Where and what are you learning, young people?Because this all will pass away, disappear. But Jesus’s Words will never disappear.And time is running out.Choose wisely. Choose Jesus Christ. Help others. Be kind. We pray for all of you.	Black, Nation, Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Nationality - General	6/535	1.121

Exactly. The earlier responses are confirmation of this. Any excuse not to follow Jesus... Such as look what religion did to people. The fact of the matter is, we became a Godless society just recently in all the history of the world and look what's happening. It's never been so psycho . Run by satanic elites who KNOW the spiritual realm is real and praise Satan while they deceive the entire world into thinking there is nothing more to us, no soul, no reason to be kind. GTFOH these kids have been hollowed out and their souls are as good as gone. You don't think the devil exists huh? Just wait until you meet him. You have no idea what you're up against. I agree with all but one thing this guy said: We millennials are not children. We are adults. In America, A child reaches adulthood at 18 (legally), but in many other cultures much sooner. Our society needs to stop elongating childhood and thinking of adults as children. A child is not at fault for being raised a certain way. However, at what age does a "child" actually become an "adult?" It is not so clear in our society. At what age does a child pass into adulthood and claim responsibility for themselves and the situations of their life? When is responsibility passed from the parents to the offspring? 18? 16? 13? 23? People would say different things I think, but doesn't everyone agree that the mark of an adult is that they take responsibility for the circumstances surrounding their own life, actions, happiness, job, etc? The truth is that in America, Millennials born before 1998 are ADULTS. College students are ADULTS. New graduates entering the job market are ADULTS. It is not social media that is the problem, and it is certainly not a company's responsibility to teach an adult about communication (though any smart company will make this valuable investment in it's employees). The truth is that each individual is responsible for themselves, for everything that they are, and for all of the circumstances that surround their lives. People love to displace the blame. They love to find reasons why an adult who is in a bad place in life is not responsible for themselves. People blame their parents, significant others, politicians, the government, religion, science, social media, cell phones, technology, alcohol, drugs, race, gender, socioeconomic status, the illuminati, television, video games, fast food, the education system, the economy, the internet, other countries, God, Satan, liberals, conservatives, their boss, big business,...pretty much you name it and people will blame that thing for their problems. The one thing that most adults won't admit is that their sucky life is their own goddamn fault. The truth is, it is not all of these exterior things that are at fault. It is just people. People are at fault. It is the responsibility of a person to find their own happiness and success. And until an individual person looks at themselves and takes full responsibility for themselves in every way, that person will NEVER find happiness or reach their full potential. Happiness can not be given to a person. A person must claim it for themselves. It must come from within.	Age, Gender, Race, alcohol	Age - General, Behavioural Addiction - Alcohol, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	5/418	1.196

Nobody wants to be accountable for themselves. It is the fault of the child. Everyone promotes "I'm an individual" and it's an "I come first" society. They blame everyone when they didn't get their way. We've seen this in the past election.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/42	2.381
illiterate thug. You millennials are worse than any other generation. You people are the CONFUSED generation. Boys looking like girly faggots and girls looking like manly dikes, whining about using same sex rest rooms, listening to garbage "music" that doesnt even sound like real music. Just a bunch of faggot kids copying off a computer yelling garbage and saying: ""NA NA NA"" like retards. Your generation is lazy and weak. Alex Rodriguez Really because this guy is Gen X and he doesn't even know that millennials start in the early 1980's some studies believe millennials start in 1980 others think it starts in 1981 and some think it's 1984. But no one ever said millennial started in the 90's. Even this guy should have common sense and know when a generation is. It's the world in general that's losing any common sense. Hard work or employees don't matter anymore, rather than numbers and some random employee getting a promotion. You could be the best worker in your company and some mediocre employee could get a promotion instead of you. Some aspects of society is changing for the worse, and Gen X and Millennial aren't doing thing about it. Baby Boomers mostly run the government and they pass any law that comes there way. Trans need there own bathroom fine ok. The army can't yell anymore it's fine ok. Ban the confederate flag government says ok. Baby Boomers Are mostly in charge of the government and they pass laws for any complaints. Then Gen X and Millennial are told they can constantly complain because it's perfectly fine. All three generations are at fault. Now there's Gen Z elementary though college who are completely involved in shitty social media. You know Facebook, YouTube, Twitch, Twitter, Instagram, kik, Snapchat. Everything that's making a person more of a shut in.	Common	Social Class - Working class	2/236	0.847
