Effectively what are the police going to do? Issue an ASBO? On the spot fine? If there's an issue they can already deal with it.If you are the victim of discrimination there is legal redress available to you. For example if you are fired due to your gender or age and you can prove it you will receive appropriate compensation. Discrimination is illegal.The question is do we need additional laws to address what is already dealt with under the law? If some guy is being a vile cretin and harassing every woman in sight the police can already deal with him. Ask the police, do they need these laws to do their job? For some reasons, the government wants to control social behaviour. Freedom vs social control has become something normal. Probably the government just wants to control the people, particularly males. But what if a woman doesn't like another woman or fight each other? Maybe British culture is kind of extreme and the government wants to change that. How about religions or cultures that are generally against women? Do they get a pass?	Woman	Gender - General	2/71	2.817
