We all know she's a robot, it's no secret here that MI6 has replaced her with a cyborg puppet of herself. She's probably already dead. Just think about it. The British government is already in chaos over the Brexit dilemma and the people now are starting to question the legitimacy of said government. If the Queen were to "die" tomorrow, there would be total anarchy and society would spill over the pot so to speak. This can NEVER be allowed to happen and Parliament knows it, so they've quietly retired the Queen and replaced her with what appears to be Elizabeth, when in reality she is nothing more than circuit boards and soundbite recordings of every conceivable word she would ever speak. A lot of bullshit here, you can not include the cost of changing the currency, as we would continue to use the old , until it is retired from circulation, the coinage would go on for years, just as did when her father the King passed, unfortunately I was around when this happened, I say this only because I wish I were younger. Takefive 123 The big deal is that they are spending millions (modest estimate) just sustaining the lifestyle of a few that have, as you said, no real power (which I actually said in my original comment; no, that's not the issue). They are descendants of murderers and worse, and still get their blood stained funds and worthless respect and nonexistent power. The monarchy should not exist anymore, nor the lineage. They are just normal people who get millions of tax payers' money just by being children born in "royalty." They served their function, now they have a prime minister and serve none. Why should they keep their lifestyle? Why should they be celebrated when according even to you, they do nothing to deserve it? I say give that influence back to the person people chose to rule them, because it really is ridiculous that they are celebrated still.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/148	0.676

I really don't get it. The royal family's ancestors have been responsible for rampant colonialism/imperialism and dismantling of entire economies. In some instances their conquests have led to genocides. Why on earth is the royal family still in power (symbolic or otherwise)? Matthew Wilkes You are mostly right. In fact most of the currency remained in circulation after decimalisation. For example, a shilling coin which had been worth 12 old pence was now worth 5 new pence, still 20 of them to make a pound. New minted coins were the same size with new writing on until the 5p was replaced with a much smaller coin.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/64	1.562

This cost analysis is crap.1) European (British) currency is redesigned every couple of years anyway. That cost is already built in, so use the old banknotes until the scheduled date of the next design change.2) Coins for George VI weren't withdrawn when he died. They wouldn't need to be for Elizabeth II either. They just change the die cast for newly minted coins going forward to show the face of the new king: Charles III	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/77	1.299
Tech Heck Well, first of all, the century isn't over yet, so it's arrogant to assume for the future. Besides, the queen's death is rather predictable and the UK is no longer the empire it once was, so I doubt anyone outside UK will give a rat's ass about her death, especially with the isolationist, nationalist and xenophobic policy UK has adopted in recent years. I would imagine the World Trade Center terrorist attack carried more weight for the world in this century than the anticipated death of an inconsequential monarch... And I'm not even American... why dont you brexit the country	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	1/6	16.667
Noontide And as someone pointed out, many of the countries that she is queen of have currencies that are not pounds anyway. Actually the UK is the only nation out of the 16 Commonwealth Realms (countries where QEII is head of state) that has a currency called the pound, most of the other ones have dollars (Australian Dollar, New Zealand Dollar, Jamaican Dollar, East Caribbean Dollar, etc). At least one has a currency with a completely different name (Papua New Guinean kina). So in most of those countries, the cost will be counted in dollars.	Nation	Nationality - General	1/95	1.053
Francisco Manuel Sánchez Rubio Not to mention the simple fact that currencies can be converted, and it makes little sense for an American presenter, on an American Youtube channel, with most likely predominantly non-UK audience to speak of expenses in pounds when the the majority of the audience will be more familiar with, and have a better grasp of, the value of the American dollar. Similarly, in recent news reports, an associate of El Chapo claimed that President Peña Nieto was bribed 100 million dollars, as reporting that he had been bribed 1.9 billion pesos would not have been very helpful to the intended audience in conveying the scale of the bribe. I suppose if this had been a Mexican channel, it would have made perfect sense to report that her death is going to cost tens of billons of pesos. And obviously it is a misleading figure anyway, as the old currency will not be taken out of circulation, and will merely be replaced as it gets worn out, incurring an expense that would have happened anyway, only with the new currency continuing to bear Queen Elizabeth's II likeness.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/190	0.526
Fernando Dember Laguna It will costs minimal amounts more though, its likely a portrait of charles has already been prepared and the design has been created. Sanguine Spirit That's what happened last time, the old notes and coins stayed in circulation and I was commonly encountering coins with George VI on them in the mid-late 1980s, (mostly pennies by that point, sometimes nickels but the latter tended to quickly have someone say 'can I have that?'). Well... at least she pays the taxes although she does actually not have to do so. Yes her whole family lives off from the taxes paid by the British people. But the family pays most of it back to the state which keeps the Pound as strong as it is (although Brexit still ruins it). If it were Obama/Trump/etc., the money would be spent on anything but the state's necessities.Her role in government is actually similar to the Head of State-only Presidents (South Korea, Singapore, Italy, France, etc.).-She has no direct control of the government as it is Prime Ministers' role.-However she can dissolve the cabinet if the cabinet fails to do its duty (highly unlikely to happen today though).-She can call for a snap election if that happens or she can also takes over the whole authority if she wants to.-She is the last person to sign the bill/law that is not completely a member of parliament (more representing the people in my opinion).-She only has significant power in military, but that still requires the parliament's consent to make use of it legally. Ah, yes. Of course, the US. Here's the thing:The US is certainly the mightiest nation. I myself am completely in support of it and possess very friendly feelings towards its place as the current hegemony and in general have nothing but kind things to say about its commitment to its ideals. And its among good company. The Roman Republic, for example was very similar in terms of might and foreign policy in some respects—being The Big Boy of the Mediterranean world. Being much stronger than the kingdoms that surrounded and preceded it. There's nothing that says that a Republic can't be great and powerful—in fact, republic institutions tend to do wonders for the productivity and economy of a nation. But, as with a lot of things, there's a breaking point. A period when everything falls apart. All governments? Monarchies, Aristocracies, and yes, Democracies? Eventually atrophy. They decay. As a simple effect of time, everything gets corrupted and muddled and in-need of a good fix. Governments are tools. Tools get worn-out. How did the Roman Republic fall and transition into the Roman Empire? Why was it necessary? Because the Republic and its institutions, as honorable as its ideals were, eventually broke down and proved itself vulnerable to the wills of ambitious men and their support bases. Even before Caesar, it was already up a point where hardly any progressive legislation could be passed without currying favor from the right people in the right factions. In this environment? It's understandable there would be public dissatisfaction and disenchantment. Nothing was being done. People were going hungry. Traffic was getting worse, the local officials were getting more and more shameless, and taxes still had to be paid. Is it really any wonder that the people would end up falling for personalities instead of ideals? Tying their own successes to successes of a particular individual regardless of what ideals they represent? How's it doing now in America? Political deadlock. Nothing gets done. Nothing important anyway. Bureaucrats and Party Goons have gamed the system. People hate their elected officials—and yet they keep getting reelected anyway. Any progress made by one party gets undone with the election of someone from a rival one. And its understandable. After all, the last thing you want is to weaken you and your parties chances at reelection by keeping a policy from your enemy people actually like. If you can't steal it? Get rid of it. And this will keep happening. Ad nauseam. In perpetuity. America will take one step forward? Two steps back. Then 3 steps forward? Then one step back. Incrementally getting better? And incremental getting worse. And pissing people off more and more—because no one cares about them or their problems. The solutions people want? Are different from the solutions their leaders in the system want. People are coming from different value sets? And everyone's getting desperate for a change. For a savior. Because people know that sometimes it doesn't take a committee to solve a problem—but a decisive decision-maker. And that's when your populists come in. As a matter of simple consequence. There comes a time in every Republic's life when the power struggle becomes defined and streamlined. It stops being a fight between ideals and policies and more of a simple power struggle between coalitions and their united	Nation, Nothing, Transition	Age - Youngsters, Nationality - General, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	9/1157	0.778

Xeno Idaltu I would say most of us are patriots, granted, but not cult members. I respect a centuries old institution, which has built an empire, seen off two world wars, and still makes parliament money every year. And we can argue about the morals and ethics till we're blue in the face. But these are people who could stay locked up in their palace, all year, doing nothing . But instead, we have a Queen who wakes up early every morning to attend to domestic and international matters. And I think she does it much better than some elected sop could.	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	2/101	1.98
Xeno Idaltu Americans pledge their allegiance to an inanimate object in schools and still name a lot of things after their presidents. And since, during the age of monarchy, monarchs were revered. It makes sense to name stuff after them. At least Queen Victoria's head isn't carved into Ben Nevis.	Age	Age - General	1/50	2.0
Another Monarchist I'm a Secular Humanist. That means Scientific Method over superstition. 1) The pledge of allegiance should remove "god" like it was before.2) The pledge of allegiance serves to unite people from different ethnic backgrounds, economic status, etc to not kill each other and remind themselves of the phrase: "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness"3) Scientists should take a look at your brain and DNA. Maybe there is the "peasant" gene that we don't know of. 4) Monarchies are nothing without brainwashing sheep like you, who would literally eat the "queen's" excrement. Another Monarchist I'm glad England Republic with a Green, White, and Red colored flag will soon come into existence.The more England isolates itself because of Brexit , the more Scotland and Northern Ireland will fight for Independence and Irish Unification.Monarchies are obsolete and will lose influence as "average" citizens become more intellectual in Science and less on superstition. Another Monarchist Your queen is not a god. What society needs is more scientists and engineers . Without Science we wouldn't have internet, cars, smartphones, and the water we drink.Even though we have semi-wars, and small terrorist organizations around the globe. Left Wing politics, Science, and Secularism have made us live in the most peaceful era in human history.Back then we lived in constant warfare because of egocentric monarchs who would send people to die because the other monarchy made fun of their hairstyle or just to prove that they can be more vicious than their past generations. Constant warfare that sent poor/working people to die in the name of the "monarchy" while they sat around talking about how much land had been claimed in their name by "peasants"The monarchy mentality was all about pride and conquer. That's why I'm glad that the United Nations and the European Union exist. Scotland, Northern Ireland, Catalunya, Kurdistan, etc will soon have their own independence. You are obsolete and will die soon..BTW France no longer has a monarchy and they still make millions of dollars from tourists who visit historical places. Being a monarchy cult follower is the same as celebrity culture zombie.	Engineers, Terrorist	Nationality - General, Religious Identity - Muslim	2/203	0.985

Xeno Idaltu At no point have I, or any ruler of England, claimed to be a god. Not in the least part because that would be heretical in the extreme. All of what you have said seems to ignore the very real fact of evolution. That ancient monarchs may very well have behaved in the ways you describe, but as time has passed they've become much less extreme. Like how the Queen can't just declare war willy nilly. And she can't just raise taxes, modern monarchs aren't autocrats and have realistic bounds on their power. And since you used the past tense 'was' I assume you understand that attitude no longer permeates monarchy. And, though I've also mentioned Scottish independence, don't see it's relevance to this conversation. Because no nation would realistically want independence because they had a monarch. Especially since we have the colonies independence and many of them chose to keep the Queen To finish, the Queen is a healthy old lady, I am a healthy young man. Neither of us is obsolete and, hopefully, neither of us will die soon.	Nation, Old	Age - Over 65s, Nationality - General	2/183	1.093
Another Monarchist "Modern monarchies" know their boundaries because they are afraid of ending up like the Russians and French "monarchies".Once the old lady dies who will be next? Not many people like that "royal" guy. As time passes by the more people realize monarchies are obsolete. Democracy, Science, and Secularism are the driven forces of our modern civilization.Monarchies, superstition, and theocracies will soon die. I really hope so.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/70	1.429
Xeno Idaltu Yes, modern monarchies realise their boundaries and operate in an inoffensive manner to keep bad things from happening. Just as an elected leader has to. There is little difference.When Her Majesty dies HRH the Prince of Wales will succeed the throne. And, while public opinion of him isn't as high as it is for the Queen, it isn't so low that people will just get rid of him. You continue on with this 'obsolescence' argument, but since obsolete means out of fashion or no longer in use, I would say that monarchy is in no way obsolete. I would suggest you watch King Charles III, an excellent movie which perfectly showcases the power of the monarchy and it's precarious balance with Parliament.I agree with you on scientists, doctors, secularism etcetera. But I don't see it's relevance to this argument. Though Lords Spiritual do occupy part of the House of Lords, there is a clear divide between church and state here in the UK. Unlike somewhere like Saudi Arabia. If by 'superstition' you mean practices like zodiac, I agree. If you mean religion, I disagree. Freedom of religion is a fundamental human right, regardless of your secular ideals. Personally I like having a few constitutional monarchies dotted around the world, because it would be a bit boring if we were all democratic republics, wouldn't it?	doctors	Nationality - General	1/228	0.439

At this point the argument is relatively pointless, since we are talking about a hypothetical situation which we know virtually nothing about. So we will have to agree to disagree.I too desire a future where people think critically. But I don't see how I'm a sheep for being fine with calling the Queen 'Her Majesty' and members of the royal family 'His/Her Royal Highness'. Whilst on the other hand republics are societies of saints and it's perfectly alright to refer to the President as 'His Excellency'.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/87	1.149
Another Monarchist Wrong.Technocracy starts with Free Scientific Education to make citizens rational, logical, and human. You should watch the documentary: The Venus Project.Monarchy leaders are nothing but average people who appoint people they "think" are suitable. Scientists/Engineers appoint leaders based on how much they know and personal experience. You are extremely regressive, it's hard to think people like you still exist.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/63	1.587
Xeno Idaltu If you could point me to the documentary on the Venus project I'm meant to watch, I will. It's a bit hard when the Venus project's a channel to know what I should watch.In the meantime, technocracy (as described on Wikipedia) is 'a system of governance where decision-makers are selected on the basis of their expertise in their areas of responsibility'. It sounds great on the surface, but there are issues that can be raised. Who will appoint them? Clearly not the people, since they don't have the objective skills and knowledge to do so. An easy fix would be to have previous leaders appoint them, but this would hamper a budding technocracy since the people would object to someone with a political alignment that isn't in line with theirs appointing a leader without any oversight. And of course, the public gets no choice over what issues they tackle since they've been appointed to lead the country. There is one example I can think of where a technocratic leader had succeeded. When George VI appointed Winston Churchill as PM after Neville Chamberlain's withdrawal. And since that turned out great, it puts a few holes in your argument about appointing 'average' people.As such Technocracy is untried and untested and unless you can find a large population of willing Guinea pigs , it won't be tested.I don't see how I'm regressive, that would imply that I want to reverse societal and scientific advancement. But I can't be regressive if what I stand for still widely exists and is accepted by the modern people.	Guinea, PIGS	Nationality - Italian, Nationality - Southern European	2/265	0.755

Well, Universal Healthcare and Universal Education (excluding universities, which already give out large scholarships quite frequently) are both things which already exist in the UK. I've watched part of the linked documentary and read several summaries and, while it proposes interesting questions. Along with several valuable critiques of current culture. I think such a society would be difficult to implement worldwide. Not to mention that they don't even add anything about technocracy. However, the proposed society would be almost communist , which would place heavy expectations upon anyone in a position of power to be totally incorruptible. Which has been previously proven to be almost impossible.I think such a society based upon democracy could produce exactly what they want, but would be almost impossible to implement worldwide.	Communist	Ideological and Political Identity - General	1/127	0.787
Another Monarchist The reason systems failed is because herds of people depended heavily on a small group of people.If you have dictators, monarchies, popes, etc then that means those masses of people lack intellectualism and need people to tell them what to do.If I can produce my own food and entirely depend on an off grid high tech Earthship then I don't need anyone to tell me what to do.In short:1) Technocracy: Science to solve problems. Everyone thinks like a Scientist and therefore can't be manipulated by idiocy.2) Democracy: Vote people who think they can solve problems. If the majority of people are dumb then they will vote a dumb president.3) Monarchies: Dictators do what they think works. If the "queen" has a dream of killing 600 babies to stop a disease then she will do it.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/143	1.399

I wouldn't say it's one of the most ignorant comments I have seen from a US citizen, because unfortunately, there are a lot of people in US, who, just like you, think that 2 Dollars bills are not printed anymore. They are still printed and put into circulation. It's true that their production is not as common as other denominations. She's there for a heck of a lot more than "tradition".Legally, she must give her assent for a bill that has passed Parliament to become law.According to Bagehot, the monarch has three main rights: the right to be consulted (meaning the government isn't supposed to keep secrets from the king or queen), the right to encourage, and the right to warn. While the monarch can't order the government to do or not do something, they can certainly make their feelings known. And with the weekly meetings with the Prime Minister, the monarch can help ensure that the PM is actually staying on top of things. Both John Major and Tony Blair have commented that, on occasions when they weren't as prepared on some subject as they should have been, the Queen made it abundantly clear that at the next meeting, they had better be able to fully answer the questions she put to them.And while normally the leader of the party that gets the most seats in Parliament is asked to form a government, it is still the Queen's ultimate decision. In 1963, Harold Macmillan, citing illness, unexpectedly resigned as Prime Minister. Because the Tories had no formal process for picking a leader, Macmillan's deputy, Rab Butler didn't automatically become leader of the party-but a PM had to be selected. Stop modernizing the British monarchy. Look, so much, so much respect to the UK! I served with them in Basara and in Kabul. I have friends who are Brits. The US and the UK are friends and our cultures are intertwined. But, I say this with all respect! It's 2018. Why are world leaders still serving life terms. Thank the Lord the UK is a respectful and just nation , but when a leader has been in power their entire life, look at the possibility for disaster. Their nation has occupied a position as a world leader and I respect them. But I ask, why are we modernizing a monarchy? We're a democratic planet. Kings and Queens don't rule over us anymore. We are free to earn our place in the world, free from absolute rulers in any form. This is my only concern, overshadowed by respect and goodwill. I think that the main reason that most people (including me) love the Queen and the Monarchy in general, is because she is a figurehead. Let me explain. In modern republics, your head of state is chosen max every 5 years (I think). Thus it is quite hard to feel nationalism in that country, as the very person who should represent your national identity is someone who won't be there in 5 years time. In other words, Presidents etc are country leaders who represent the people but not the culture. This is why I think the republic is flawed in ONLY the fact that it ignores the centuries of monarchies which built said nation up, and whilst there may be a few bad apples in terms of kings or queens the majority is positive and has the thoughts of the nation at heart. That's why a constitutional monarchy like we have in the UK is in my opinion the best choice, because, not only does it keep the values, traditions, and even the family that have built it in the last hundreds of years, give you a figurehead that will be there for a long time to feel national pride towards, but also provides the liberty and democracy which I believe is a basic human right.Also...God save the Queen	Nation, Nationalism	Nationality - General	3/222	1.351

Twixieshores the Queen will never abdicate, to abdicate is seen as a non starter by her.It was the abdication of her uncle which threw her family in to the line of monarchy, and something that her mother never forgave the uncle for, because the Queen's father grew up believing he would never be king, even though he was the 'spare,' plus everyone knew he was not King material, never given the training as his brother had received throughout his life, a very nervous man, shy, with a stammer.A lot of officials were really concerned for him, and his mental health, but his wife was a paragon of support for him, and he became a very well respected and loved Monarch.It is because of this revulsion of abdication and a sense of duty why she will never do it, she may get incredibly old , reaching 3 figures, but it will never happen!!,Personally I believe this whole King, Queen thing is outdated and immoral, and should be sent in to history.Hopefully the last Monarch will be Charles, as William and Harry are reported to be very anti King, neither wanting the title also! Actually John, country debt means very little, and please stop trying to tell people they are idiots for pointing this out.Debt for a country is a little misleading. The majority of the debt that the US holds is to it's own citizens, in the form of bonds. Also countries don't really "Borrow" the same way(Well not usually anyway) you or I would.Instead a country will just offer more bonds for sale, which anyone including other countries can buy. This isn't always the case, but the majority of the time it is. Debt owed to places like China, Norway or any other country you can list is all "voluntary" and has economic returns for debt holders. The US still has to pay the interest regardless of any debt that anyone holds. So a country, or you yourself taking out a bond, you give X number of dollars, and the US promises to give you Y on specific intervals without fail. You know, sort of like a savings account where you would put in money you can't touch, but you get a return until you want to sell the debt. Which is also another thing, if China for example wanted to sell it's bonds, two things could and would occur. They would be put onto the open market for others to buy, other countries, individuals etc, and any unsold bonds would be either paid by the US, or put on a schedule to return.Also debt is a little misleading. Say I owe you 5,000$, and you owe me 4,000$. How much do I owe you? 1,000$ right?Wrong. I owe you 5,000$, and you owe me 4,000$, which while effectively I actually owe you 1,000$ this is not how countries treat debt. While China owns a lot of US Bonds and other types of debt, the US also owns a lot of Chinese bonds and other types of debt. The US Debt is 17 trillion without factoring in what other countries OWE the US. In the end all countries effectively have some sort of debt, and in a lot of cases the debt is a wash, in a lot of other cases it's imbalanced. The US is not nearly in balance for it's out and in.Regardless in the end what matters isn't debt, but GDP to debt ratio. As long as you can continue to pay interest, no one cares. Also no one country owns so much debt that it could cripple the US if they demanded it all back immediately. Other countries would absorb some debt, citizens would absorb it, and a certain portion in the worst case scenario would be either skipped to be paid at later date, or put into schedule.Of course that effects the credit rating, but in the end a countries debt isn't what you think it is.Also this was a brief overview, it goes insanely in depth and i'm barely scratching the surface. I'm also Canadian before you start the whole you must be from US or are biased spiel.	Cripple	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/510	0.196

Banana Bread RecipePrep time: 10 minutesCook time: 55 minutesYield: Makes one loafNo need for a mixer for this recipe! Clean-up is easy too, if you want, you can mix everything in one mixing bowl.The best bananas to use for banana bread are those that are over-ripe. The yellow peels should be at least half browned, and the bananas inside squishy and browning.INGREDIENTS2 to 3 very ripe bananas, peeled1/3 cup melted butter1 teaspoon baking sodaPinch of salt3/4 cup sugar (1/2 cup if you would like it less sweet, 1 cup if more sweet)1 large egg, beaten1 teaspoon vanilla extract1 1/2 cups of all-purpose flourMETHOD1 Preheat the oven to 350°F (175°C), and butter a 4x8-inch loaf pan.2 In a mixing bowl, mash the ripe bananas with a fork until completely smooth. Stir the melted butter into the mashed bananas.3 Mix in the baking soda and salt. Stir in the sugar, beaten egg, and vanilla extract. Mix in the flour.4 Pour the batter into your prepared loaf pan. Bake for 50 minutes to 1 hour at 350°F (175°C), or until a tester inserted into the center comes out clean.5 Remove from oven and let cool in the pan for a few minutes. Then remove the banana bread from the pan and let cool completely before serving. Slice and serve. ---	--------	---------------------	------	-------

By "Secret" they mean a plan they haven't told the public because it would cause distress. Few people, if anyone can give a first-hand account of a queen before the currently reigning one. As such simply stating "We have a plan in place for when she dies" would make some people upset because they don't want to think about such a long-lasting monarch passing on (Especially one whom people seem to like as much as her) It's like if the United States government were to just come out and say "This is our plan for world war 3" odds are there is already a plan in place to prevent all-out nuclear war from destroying the planet the second a large war starts, but nobody wants to be blatantly told that by Donald Trump (or anyone else for that matter.) So instead they keep it as a "Secret" protocol... It's something everyone knows is in place because it'd be fucking stupid to not have in place, but it'd be just as stupid to say it out loud because it could incite violence, panic, and chaos. It's the same reason government officials refuse to comment on Extra-Terrestrial life. We have scientists in the government who watch and test theories of unidentified flying objects, but they won't admit to it because the existence of other life or even the thought that we are trying to look for it could send some people into a crazed frenzy. On one hand you would have the "righteous" religious people who believe that we are the only intelligent species in the universe trying to attack the government for looking for extra-terrestrial life the same way they attack the government for protecting LGBT rights or moving the United States away from being a country with a benchmark religion. On the other hand you have people who may start rioting when they realize that possibly billions of U.S. Dollars (a.k.a. YOUR money through taxes) go towards funding secret projects that look for life that they themselves don't believe in. I can't talk to your beliefs personally since I don't know you, but assume you are someone adamantly against abortion and you find out that your tax-payer dollars are being used to scrape up a fetus. You wouldn't be too happy about that would you? Overall these protocols aren't "Secret" in the sense that they are never told to anyone and always kept under lock and key. But instead they are things that the world generally knows but don't want to acknowledge for the sake of making life easier. Nobody wants to sit around all day and read their mom's last will and testament over and over again waiting until the day that their mother dies. By the same note nobody wants to hear the plan for when the queen dies over and over because it's just not something you want to think of on a daily basis. It's something you want to keep out of your mind to keep yourself happy while also knowing there is a plan already in place so things won't immediately fall to chaos the second it happens.	LGBT, Nobody	Age - Youngsters, Sexual Identity - General, Sexual Identity - Male homosexuality, Sexual Identity - Transsexuality	6/523	1.147

Chinese Maoist It is not her own stash that only matter. The British public make their business around the Monarchy. Just search for it and observed. The Scottish referendum is already on the table/bag but on the last day/week the Queen attend the Church event and made a remark about the said referendum. The Day of voting, the possible votes for Scottish Independence sway and favor to remain on the Union. SNP were pissed but they cant do anything about it since the Queen were neutral/apolitical and cannot be blamed. The Brexit is another thing. The majority of OuT vote were nationalist and centralized the Identity of Britishness which is connected to the Monarchy. And the recent show of soft power of the Queen made it possible for Prince Charles to be elected as the Head of the Commonwealth of 53 nation . Which is Important now for trade block for the Upcoming Brexit Deal.	Brexit, Nation	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans, Nationality - General	3/154	1.948

"As an american" we can assume that you are of American decent, being African American or Caucasian, meaning that at some point, England owned your race , or at least part of it. If you are saying "As an american" because you live in the U.S, Canada, or somewhere in South America, then you would be better off saying "As a westerner." Lolwutman6 so all americans are black or white huh? As a "westerner" we dont use the term "westerner". Only people with an "american" decent are native americans my dear.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/29	3.448
They came from africa, to other countries as slaves, and amongst themselves as slaves. The african american peoples were kinda enslaved a lot. Also, by "american" I mean the modern americans who consider themselves americans; 90 of people (and thats lenient) who aren't from the United States will consider themselves a part of their country, not their continent. I didn't plan on listing out every single country in north america and south america. I never said you had to say you were a westerner either, I just said you would be better off. Native Americans are also very iffy; Natives have been conquered by the US when they were colonies and as a country, by Spaniards, and other groups. Since the US conquered some native tribes as a colony, technically England still owned them at some point as well. Also, I never brought up hating the throne, I was just calling bullshit on you saying that england never owned you, when you identify as an american.	African	Ethnicity - Black	1/166	0.602
U Lolwutman wtf noone refers to "American" and means someone other than from the USA dummy. Wow youre dense. And "american" means youre an american citizen. Period. Everyone except the native americans are from other countries. Yet we are american. Unless you yourself have come from another country, you are american. So im not sure wtf you mean we all refer to our origin countries. American is not a race . Its not like chinese, japanese, german. Those can all be referred to as country of citizenship or race . A.Gaming oh so you encourage forcing healthy Americans who don't want health insurance to pay over 2500$ yearly for insurance they don't want that doesn't help in everyday medical expenses. Obama set it up so that if you don't get health insurance, you are heavily fined from your tax return that we need to pay bills etc. I didn't want Insurance. But I and to get it. It's 2,700 $ a year. That's a 10th of my salary. I don't see a cent of help from the insurance unless I rack up medical bills over $5,000. After that they pay a small percentage until I spent 6500$ total. THEN they pay 90 of the rest of the bill. I have to pay full price for office visits, medication, etc. So literally unless I'm in a catastrophic accident I am flushing my money down the toilet. I could've saved that money back and pay for all my medical bills with a shitload left over. Plus after Obama he had driven the races even further apart. He has given the terrorists millions of dollars for literally nothing. In my opinion he had been the WORST president for us. And you only have an outsiders opinion. Your opinion is shit because you don't live here. You're not being called a racist bigot for merely being born white. The racism has grown exponentially in this country. Blacks were convinced that whites are the issue- and whites are pissed off that blacks are blaming them for everything which fuels their racism too. We are in the verge of a civil war. And do you know whose presidency this all happened in? Obama. He was rewardinf the lazy and the sluts with 12 baby daddies. Raised benefits to able bodied people whi didnt want to work. Im all for supporting the elderly and disabled. Im not talking about those. There is a high entitlment mentality going on here. Peooke expect to pop out kids left and right and have someone else pay instead of the father. This si also taking away money from the elderly and disabled. And all the money im putting into social security for MY retirement is being given away so quickly that more than likely I will never see a dime back from it becaise the system will collapse at this rate. We had obama who refused to vet the people coming in from countried that are known to be terrorist ridden. Isis has told us tdirextly that this is hiw theyll get them into our cou try through refugee groups yet he refused to even acknowledge it and ferried them all in. Now we have muslims terrorists bombing people and starting to try to force cities into Shariah law which directly contradicts our constitutional rights. But liberals are too pussy to refise them cause theyre scared to be called racist. Trump is slowly trying to turn things arounds. And hes doing a great job! Many many many issues that he supports have been supported vy so many presidents bfore him but only he is veing yelled at for itm did you know obama himself supported building a type of wall? Well noone cared cause he was black and blacks "cant be racist" in this country. All trump haters can spew is "he has small hands and a small dick" or "hes politically incorrect" or "he said he could grab a woman by the pussy 30 years ago to a friend in private" because they have no real opinion other than they merely hate him for some unknown reason. So unless you live here and deal with this shit daily you have NO opinion that means anything to us.

So. Fuck. Off.

Jimmy McMuffins but it's not "just the presidents will" the people elected the president because of what he (or she whenever that happens) said they will do once elected. So its really the peoples will. If the president didn't have any real power, there's zero point in having one. We tend to WANT change. And having 2 pplitical parties that never agree on anything this is a major thing to elect a president. Evllif we dont like how the coutrys being ran we have a chance every 4 year to change it. This is why promoting change is good because not everyone can agree on the same things here. Its fair. We have many many nationalities, views, and personalities in this countrym we are a hodge podge of different cultures and beliefs so we will never agree. This so why having an elected representative is So important and that's why they campaign. And not gonna lie, many Americans are dumb as hell. If we solely depended on electing every member of congress all the time like we do a president, it would be chaos. The mass of the people vote for president only. Not Congress because the president picks people he thinks will follow him while maintaining a balance of parties. Picking a bunch of people each time gets confusing and we'll end up with a bunch of different views. Seeing how the majority of Congress has to vote in agreeance to pass something, nothing would ever be passed. We need a single voice to guide it all along. But Presidents can be "overthrown" through impeachment. So they're not just going to do whatever they want willy nilly. Plus they'll want to be reelected so it not wise to piss off the people. technically The president CAN just pass something on his own without vote BUT he can easily be impeached if we find it wrong so there's not just no consequences for their actions. And whatever law or decree they pass can be revoked. This prevents a dictatorship.	Dumb, Nothing, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/340	0.882

Monarchies are certainly not the best form of government, a parliamentary government, in my opinion, is the best, as it allows the executive to be held accountable by parliament, there is residual power lost from devolution (in Britain), but for the most part, our parliament holds a substantial amount of power as parliament is sovereign. Monarchies aren't elected, which gives them no mandate from the public, which is relatively similar to a communist dictatorship, especially when you apply the horseshoe theory to it. Now I can't tell if you actually meant a monarchist government or that you've worded it wrong and you mean that you support the monarchy and the current political system that we have in the UK. that's the way every nation did before or would do in case of money update, i don't think they're gonna change the money on the market. that's impossible to control tho. it's a process which takes time, old money will go to government's case to be destroyed or to be used at something except using for purchase/sale, step by step, and new money gonna replace the old one in time. shortly only extra cost of this will be sources for new prints and printing which is a non stop process, but if they want to complete this process in short time they should print much more than they usually do. since they're gonna withdraw the old ones there is no inflation risk at all. maybe there is idk, old money's way to government case might be tough or delayed but i'm sure of one thing: even an 4th world country not stupid as that to withdraw the market at once, at the same time. The idea of having a monarchs head on the money is effectively saying that, the monarch themselves are providing the guarantee of it's value. If the monarch is dead that guarantee is worth a lot less. Continuing to use old currency would also be seen as a sign of economic weakness to other countries, and a SIGN of economic weakness usually turns into actual economic weakness as corporations get worried about investing money in projects based in that country	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/79	1.266

There are 3 ways of switching out old banknotes. You can keep the old ones in circulation and print new ones to replace what needs replacing (same as happens all the time as they stay the same). Or you can keep the old ones valid but collect and replace them every time they get back to the central bank (this is usually done when the design changes). Or you can declare the old ones invalid and/or only valid to be be exchanged for new ones (done when completely switching currencies). Common expectation would be that method 2 will be used in this case.	Common, Old	Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	5/103	4.854

If you were to become a republic and replace the Queen with a President, you'd have to pay tax money to maintain the institution of a Presidency. The American presidency costs more to run PER YEAR than the British monarchy for the last 100 years (literally, it costs $1bn each year for the president, the monarchy can fund itself for 25 years on that amount) Why the heck wouldn't you choose to keep a monarch? You get the tourism, the tradition, the pageantry AND a government surplus of 85 of the Crown Lands profits per year (which were £160m in 2016) A republic for the UK makes zero sense financially, politically. There's thousands of people without homes and living in poverty in the UK. And yet millions of tax payers money goes towards the Royal family, when it could be used to help those in need, sort out the NHS, improve education, etc. This past Christmas there were approximately 20,000 young people sleeping rough over the festive period, going unnoticed and uncared for by the government. Just walk through the high street in Manchester and you'll see rough sleepers down every street. To all Americans who think the UK is all tea and crumpets... IT'S FAR FROM IT. Yes we have many lovely places (including Manchester btw) but I can't help but see how stupid it is that we can invest so much money, time and care into something so immoral and pointless and a family who contribute so little to the country (and I think anyone would give to charity if they were given as much free cash as the Windsors). Take the £350million spent on sorting out Buckingham Palace's electrics. And so I'm sorry I won't lose any sleep over the death of a rich old lady whom I know on no personal level whatsoever. We need to wake up and see the strain that the Royal Family puts on the UK and re-evaluate who really needs the financial help of the state.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/224	0.446

The fact that the queen even has involvment in the government process just because of her birth is proof enough Britan is not a democratic society yet. You can be a republic and have a monarch though. You just have to give zero special tax money to the monarch, zero government involvment from birth, and let them just stay a monarch as a cultural thing with zero real power or laws favoring them over another citizen. I live in the UK and you lot have no fucking clue how the British government works. the UK is 99 democracy. the queen (apart from being a figure head) can only influence politics when the prime minister or any other ministers are acting in a corrupt manner. this system works better than your american system because the royals themselves cannot be corrupt or "evil" by nature because the survival of the modern monarchy depends on public opinion. and saying " nobody cares" about the house of windsor has no value because if nobody did care then the monarchy would simply not exist. the princes and princesses live for charity basically, and the princes have to serve in the armed forces (exceptions can be made though). contrary to popular belief the Queen has a tremendous amount of power in the governments of the commonwealth, especially the canadian, australian and new zealand governments. do research on the "dismissal dossier". basically the queen has the power to kick everyone out of government in those countries for almost no reason (in the dismissal dossier it wasnt the queens decision but the queen couldve easily made the decision). It's just simple continuity. You have to remember that the Queen is head of state, but we have an elected political leader (the prime minister) as well. Unlike the US which has a president that is both head of state and head of government. We do have the freedom to choose our political leader, but for ceremonial and traditional reasons we still have a Queen at the top. It's the Queens face that's on all of our currency and it's the Queen that we pledge the Oath of Allegiance to when we join the military or whatever. I quite like it to be honest. We've had 14 prime minsters in the last 60 years. But the same Queen throughout who has been a figurehead of the nation .	Nation	Nationality - General	1/127	0.787
The economic impact this video presented is great exaggerated and superficial. Direct funeral cost will go to the workers behind the scene. Which is an added income for families that will have positive impact on the economy in the long run. And governments around the world already replace old worn currencies periodically not to mention old bills and coins won't suddenly lose its legitimacy. There will be a long buffer period to phase out the old money so the impact will be negligible. The real cost to the economy will be from tourism. Dakota M the monarchy doesn't cost the taxpayer anything. The royal family give the lion share of their land income to parliament to cover the costs (basically they rent out farm land to tenants and the tenants pay the rent to the government). The Queen uses the remaining income to run the institution. The US president costs a billion dollars more than the monarchy because the taxpayer has to find everything. And the President also receives a salary. The royal family don't use tax money Money won't be immediately reprinted. New coins and notes with Charles' portrait will be minted, but they won't suddenly recall every single Lizzie note and replace it. She will be in circulation for decades to come; and in any case, money needs to be replaced and new coins are always being minted anyway—they'll just redesign them and start pumping the new ones into circulation to eventually replace the old as they would have done even if she hadn't died	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/164	0.61

The Divine Right of Kings was a doctrine used in most Catholic monarchies. But the reason why all monarchs in Europe sit on their throne is NOT because they claim they were called by God. Every royal house in Europe is related to Charlemagne who was ELECTED as Holy Roman Emperor. His peers CHOSE him by popular vote to sit on Europe's thrones. He split up his various lands among his children and each kingdom went its separate way.The Divine Right of Kings was studied and developed by James I, but very few monarchs claim their right to rule because God wills it these days. The Divine right is a really piss weak argument – the Queen is the Queen because the masses respect her family and lineage and because her family is the most powerful in the Kingdom. Royal houses must be wealthier and more powerful than their subjects or they would be overtaken by rival Kingdoms. The Divine Right has nothing to do with monarchy these days, she is the head of the church in a ceremonial position and that's about it. If we didn't want the House of Windsor then we'd say so and push them off and elect another family line to the throne, but no such family is rivaling the Windsors so it doesn't matter. They have power because we want them to, and that's fine. Nothing to do with God	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/237	0.844

Jeff Vader it's the principle of it, her power is mostly ceremonial and I would know I had to swear an oath to her and I didn't mean a damn word of it, but I resent the fact that democratically elected governments have to ask for her permission to form and I resent that her (let's be honest limited and shallow) DNA somehow gives her stature above anyone else.They represent everything that is wrong with England, inherited wealth, privilege, snooty upperclass ceremony that costs a fortune and has no practical value and a deference to 'betters' who on closer inspection are just as morally bankrupt and unexceptional as the rest of us, if you ever want to know just how good our dear queen actually is have a look into how she's treated her mentally handicapped sister (the obvious conclusion of centuries of inbreeding by the way) or the fact that her husband is her cousin or the fact that her family financed both Oswald Mosley and the third reich, I could go on but quite frankly nationalism , patriotism and the monarchy are diseases that are offered to people as a way of making them compliant an adult version of school children thinking their dad is harder than anyone else's, cultural pride is the salve of the weak, seeking comfort in the achievements of others is pathetic and what's more all of it is dead men's baggage, one day we might actually has enough pride in ourselves to stop carrying it and achieve things of our own and forge futures not dependant on the past, where who owns what bit of dirt under which flag is considered irrelevant. They won't re-mint the coins/notes. They will be replaced as and when they get worn like they currently do. The only reason we don't have coins of old monarchs now is because decimalization happened when the Queen was on the throne and all coins and notes were re-minted then. My parents, for example, remember pre-decimalization when you would get coins with both Elizabeth II and Victoria on them at the same time.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/72	1.389

The state religion is the personality cult worship of the Queen (like for Kim Jong-un of North Korea). Somebody should not worship a person equal to themselves. Also with many things named after the Queen for doing almost nothing to deserve it. The Queen and members of the Royal family deserve no extra measure of respect because the only way they got their Royal title and position is through marriage 'or' it was passed down from mommy or daddy, >nobody is born great<, nobody is born better than other people, only qualification for the position was to be born into a family, inherits the throne by birth, never earned it, no decernable talent, not promoted, or not elected being un-democratic. AFTER THE QUEEN DIES WHO WILL BE THE NEXT FALSE GOD, HER SON CHARLES OR GRANDSON WILLIAM? If the Queen has special powers then why does she wear prescription eyeglasses.Royals are common and a MAJOR brainwashing farce for the people who falsely make the Royals out to be something that they are not. Somehow a superior human being which is humorous, worshipping an idol(idolatry) and worse, falsely believe they have some kind of special contact with God or having faith in them like a God, and even much worse, a mental illness as some people may actually believe that they really are a God, when honestly in true reality the Royals are ARE the exact same people just like everyone else. It is difficult for some people to accept that their Royal dream was in fact a false fantasy. I did hear former U.S. Vice President Joe Biden say, nobody is better than me and I am not better than anyone else. Royals are celebrities and nothing more. Also how can anyone say they love a member of the Royal family when they do not even know them and know very little about them. But why do they have to replace all the circulating currency? It's not like the old currency suddenly becomes invalid because it has the face of a dead monarch on it, right? They will still spend $1 billion on printing new money whether the queen lives or dies. Of course replacing the design will cost some money and maybe they'll print special edition notes to celebrate the reign of the new king, but that won't cost anywhere near $1 billion. It's very likely the Bank of England is already prepared for the event and they probably have machines ready to print King Charles' face at a moment's notice. Notes survive in circulation for about 12 months anyway and are not printed by mints but by specially chartered note printing companies the two most important being De La Rue and Note Printing Australia who between them cover most of the Commonwealth and regularly update the currencies anyway as new anti-counterfeiting technology comes available. Mints handle exclusively coins, and again regularly change the patterns and processes though not usually for any pragmatic reason. Special coins celebrating something are quite common , also the picture of the Queen used on the coins has been updated as she has aged. Most importantly notes and coins DO NOT suddenly cease being legal tender just because a new version comes out. Coins marked with Elizabeth's head will still be in circulation decades from now. New coins are produced at a steady rate, new notes are produced as they are needed, so the NET cost of changes to the currency from the death of Elizabeth is...Precisely zero . Not a single cent or pence more than we already pay for our high quality currencies.	Common, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	2/178	1.124

The re-minting cost calculation is a bit off. That is because notes and coins have to be remade anyway. It doesn't matter whose face is on it, if a banknote is torn apart, it needs to be remade. The old notes aren't just going to lose their value upon death.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/50	2.0

I don't understand about 'reminting'. When the monarch has changed in the past, the old coins and notes have remained in circulation. All that changes is that any new notes and coins made bear the image of the new monarch.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/40	2.5
Steph Burnett No, if it's done as it was when previous monarchs died, no extra currency will have to be produced and the only costs will be that the picture and name on any new ones will be changed. The old ones will still be used and they won't produce any greater number of new currency than they normally would. The only reason all the notes and coins currently in circulation have the present Queen on is that during her reign as it's been so long, all the old notes and coins have gradually been updated (like recently with the new pound coin) meaning none of the ones around before her time are legal tender any more. There was a time right up until the 1970s before the currency was decimalised that you still occasionally found very old coins with Queen Victoria on them in your change! My father used to collect them as a child. So we'll still be using lots of notes and coins with the Queen on for many years after she dies.	Old	Age - Over 65s	3/176	1.705
I live in the uk but I'm not well versed in this however when we swapped to new notes recently the country is given a cut off date, before that date all old notes are valid on that date they are no longer valid but can still be put into the bank for the equivalent amount of money as a new note, I don't know if this will be the case with the queen or if they wont have a cut off date but still retain any old notes while producing more. sorry if I'm stating the obvious	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/99	2.02

Is it unfair that some people are born in Norway while others are born in Syria? Everyone is born into a certain amount of privilege, some people have more and some have less. No one can help where or to whom they are born... Even some of my non native English speaking friends say I was born lucky to speak it as my first language. Is that 'not right' as well? The only difference between "luck of birth" for us and royalty is that they lucked out that bit more. Plenty of poverty stricken families in Indian slums could gawk at a person living paycheque to paycheque in a shitty flat with a 9-5 job. That would be the dream life to many people. All the money and privilege the royals have would need to go somewhere, even if we abolish it. I'd rather it go to a born and raised Queen than to a nutjob president who happened to appeal to the people's fears and politics at the time of his or her election. Sombre is the wrong word. They drop the heavy stuff and move to a heavily curated playlist. Bland is a better word. The whole nation will be in some form of shock and it's just easier this way. If you listen enough around major events you'll hear stations going into obit fairly frequently. If something happens local enough to affect the listeners they'll drop music, change the playlist and treat certain subjects very delicately. A more interesting thing is that most if not all stations will ditch all their planned content and links (the speaking between songs) will consist of time checks, news and very little else. She worked as a mechanic fixing ambulances and other emergency services to help British civilians. Prince Harry is a member of the Royal Air Force and served in the Afghanistan war. In fact, a lot of the royal family either serve in three military or are Olympians for Great Britain. Let's not even get started on the charities and organisations set up by the royals. Prince William (our future king) and Prince Harry have set up numerous groups and charities to help the less of able and those with mental illnesses in this country.On top of this, the monarchy earns us billions each year in tourism and are cheaper to uphold than a president or a republic. RajYou're mistaken, I don't mean they own loads and loads of land, I meant they own the royal estates, some land in the UK. They didn't always just take it, they bought it. They own it the same way a home owner owns the land his house is on. Yes, people do 'own' things. Including land. Are you telling me that if you built a house it wasn't yours? It's the same premise. They built a kingdom, that's why they're royals. You act like the royal family is greedy and evil, but yeah no they're not. If you want someone to be angry at, be angry at the rich companies and banks who own looooooads of land and swathes of homes to rent to people, and take it from them the second they don't pay.Also again, we get money FROM the royal family BECAUSE they rent the land to us. It would be WORSE if they didn't rent it us. Colonisation was one of the things the United Nations aimed to deconstruct, which is why many countries no longer have their overseas colonies now. You have to realise that ethics and human rights are relatively recent things in human history right? It's not as simple as, "Oh, why did they do slavery, they should've been good people." Back then they didn't even see the slaves as on their level, as human. We have come VERY far.Why should the royal families be stripped of their status? It's part of the culture and they don't RULE anymore. So it makes no sense. Why do you think they do nothing but sit on their ass all day using their wealth? You know that CEOs and greedy company owners are the main ones that do that right? Them and corrupt politicians? The Queen has done a LOT for the UK. She fought in WW2, can you say you've done that? She makes money for the UK, that's how she works. You're just making up shit because you think that royal = power hungry evil. They have NO power. We pay them money because they rent us land, that's it. That's how it works. If we don't, we'll end up paying MORE money. Most of the entire world are democracies! To join certain international treaties, alliances and organisations you have to BE a democracy. If you have an issue with that go look at the warlords in central Africa!We are speeding towards the most peaceful era of human history and you're still hung up on what has past. [LINK] If colonisation never happened, then we would never of have equality. It was through good people seeing the evils of colonisation that we strive today for a more equal world. No, I just fucking said, the money comes from the Royal Estates. When you hear in the news that "£2,000,000 of taxpayers money" is being used to repair Buckingham Palace, ALL of that money comes from ONE taxpayer, HM The Queen, who pays more tax as a percentage than anyone else in the country. The tax she pays per year is far, far more than is used for the upkeep of the Royal Family - and she is the only one who legally doesn't have to pay tax. She CHOSE to do it to support her people.The Royal Estates actually legally belong to HM The Queen as an individual, if you removed the monarchy and the Queen became an ordinary citizen she would keep her estates and only need to pay a fraction of the amount of tax on them, like any other business in the country. We, as a nation , would make a net loss of approximately £300 Million in taxes each year if we abolished the Monarchy. If that happened, HM the Queen, and her family could live a FAR more opulent lifestyle than they do now, and do so in relative peace, without needing to work 350+ days a year well into their 90's. (HM The Queen attended that many Royal Engagements last year, don't you think she would rather a private life where she could've retired 30 years ago and spent it with her family? Her sense of duty and honour surpasses any other world leader, she is an inspiration to everyone who knows of her, and only bigots and fools decry her for being 'too rich'.People who hate the Monarchy have no financial reason to do so, they just hate people who they see as 'richer' than them, and ignore the countless benefits, financial, social and diplomatic that they bring to this country.And the money we make from the Royal Estates PALES in comparison to the unquantifiable billions that the Monarchy has brought to this country in the form of tourism. David SiitherismNo she can't. She can't dissolve parliament. [LINK] The Act thus removes the traditional royal prerogative to dissolve Parliament, and repeals the Septennial Act 1715 as well as references in other Acts to the royal prerogative. The royal prerogative to prorogue parliament is not affected by the Act. The most she can do is discontinue a session.She technically commands the military but they don't answer to the monarch, they answer to the government, and if she tried to exercise control it would be a negative outcome for everyone, including her. Yeah, she can ignore laws, as they don't pertain to her. But the only thing she can do otherwise is give a royal pardon to a citizen.This is true about the Australian Constitutional Crisis, but she can no longer do this due to the act I mentioned above.Also I highly highly doubt those countries would become republics. You fail to realise that those countries WANT to have her as head of state, and be part of the commonwealth and allied with the UK. New Zealand had a referendum to change the flag from the union jack to something more unique and fitting for their culture and history, but most people in the country voted to keep the old flag. It's a sense of pride or something. Canadians too are similar, just because the queen dies doesn't mean they'll leave the realm. They will still be democracies under a constitutional monarchy, because they don't lose anything by being this way. Everyone assumes that they're part of the realm unwillingly but it's the opposite. It helps relations with the UK and there's no downside. It's also a cultural and historical link.The UK is already the same as Japan and the Netherlands.Japan is a Unitary parliamentary constitutional monarchy. The exact same as the UK. The Netherlands is also, a Unitary parliamentary constitutional monarchy. The same as the UK. The only difference is the Queen and Prince Charles are part of the most well known royal family the world over, whether they're the head of state of many countries or not. Yes! It does matter! That was 40 years ago! She doesn't have the power to override or overthrow governments you fool! That happened in 1975! The cold war was still going on! Do you know what else happened in 1975? 3 terrorist attacks in the form of bombs put the UK populace in a state of panic! It wasn't even her that dissolved the parliament! It was Governor General Sir John Kerr!My point here is, you're acting like that one event completely justifies the total fear of the queens power, when in reality she has very little. On the other hand, those you SHOULD be concerned about, corrupt politicians, greedy bankers and company owners, are less of an issue to you! Who's fault was the 2008 depression, the housing crisis? The queens? No! It was greedy bankers looking to make money by selling homes to risky individuals who would end up defaulting a lot on their mortgages, driving the price of houses around them down into the ground, and causing stable home owners to stop paying their mortgage! That was THEIR fault! And things like this STILL happen! It is they who have the power and they who are the danger!Here you are arguing the toss trying to say the queen has loads of absolute power that she can use whenever when she never really has! And yet if you look over the Atlantic, you have the top 1 of america holding 20 of its wealth. THEY are the worry. Not the queen. Because they have the money to affect politics. Fuck, just look at the whole net neutrality debacle, something that was supposed to be settled but now is trying to get forcibly undone by ISP companies with money through the FCC because they want to profit more? How is that NOT power?The last time a law was refused assent by the monarch was in 1707! By Queen Anne who blocked a bill settling militia in Scotland! Are you really gonna argue that the Queen, who is staunchly non-political, is gonna start refusing laws into assent, something that hasn't happened for 310 years?I'm going to reiterate here for your clarification, No, the queen cannot dissolve elected parliaments. Nor can ANYONE ELSE.No! She can't overthrow governments! That is the same as dissolving parliament! Which she can't do!No! She cannot override any laws! Simply laws do not apply to her! She can't just stop a law from functioning!Yes! She can technically refuse to sign a bill into law! Will she? No! Because that would hurt her interests, as well as the country!Yes! She can technically declare war! But doing so would spark a riot/revolt! So no, she really can't!She has no huge amount of power she can exercise. All of her powers are in theory, and are kept in check by the fact that she has to keep neutral for fear of angering the populace.	Terrorist	Religious Identity - Muslim	1/493	0.203

Cool video, but you misinterpret the real costs of the Queen's death a bit. The exchange of the money for example, isn't something that would create additional costs, because they can simply replace the old notes by only giving out new ones with the new monarch printed on the front. Money gets replaced everyday by the national banks, hence this process won't cost Britain more than the price for a new design.National holidays also reduce the amount of money transferred that day, but it's not like those billions are burned. They're just not spent. So, in fact, Britain would pay the funeral and lose some export revenues, but that's it.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/111	0.901

lmao it wasn't a gift though. Ranjit Singh, the Sikh ruler of Punjab, had the diamond in his possession after India fought to get it back. After his death and a tumultuous period of changing rulers, the Punjabi throne was given to Duleep Singh and his mother, Rani Jindan. Jindan was imprisoned by the British, who then proceeded to force Duleep to sign a legal document that amended the Treaty of Lahore which required him to give away the Koh-i-noor and all claim to sovereignty. Duleep was only 10. Additionally, the difference between the British being looted and raided and India being looted and raided is that Britain isn't experiencing any long term residual consequence from said loots and raids. Britain literally had control over India less than 100 years ago, caused famines that could have been prevented, created deindustrialization and economic stagnation, massacred Indians, and instituted racist and derogatory laws towards Indians within India. Honestly I'm Indian , and I don't understand the obsession over a single diamond. According to the Antiquities and Art Treasure Act, 1972, the government can only ask for the retrieval of items that have been illegally exported post-independence. The Kohinoor was prior independence and certainly not illegally taken, thus the law does not allow the country to have retrieval rights. Besides, India has a rich history and cultural heritage spanning over 5,000 years. The scripts from the Indus Valley Civilization remain undeciphered to this day, and most of you don't even have a fraction of knowledge of the history and culture of your North Eastern and Southern states. So how about we treasure the long history we have and dedicate time to understanding it rather than obsessing over a dead-end issue.	Indian	Ethnicity - Native-American	1/131	0.763

Seeing all these comments from US (mostly) or otherwise non-British citizens about how there shouldn't be a monarchy, a queen or so much money spent on the funeral of the queen is simultaneously highly amusing and irritating. The lack of logical thinking isn't surprising but the ignorance of some is disappointing. The queen of England has devoted her life to serving the country and upholding British heritage. She is also responsible for a lot of money flowing through the economy as a result of tourists coming to see Buckingham palace and the queen herself. The queen appears at charity events and travels internationally as a representative of the United Kingdom, both of which contribute to making the world a better place. And yet some people who know next to nothing about the queen of England still choose to make comments about how it would be a waste to spend so much time and money on paying our respects to the queen and showing our recognition of the queen's work for which she has dedicated her life. +Laughing 'laughingkoala' Koala The UK's Royal Family are somewhat of figureheads, but they also do a similar job to the President or Prime Minister of any other democracy by signing bills passed by Parliament into law for an example not listed earlier in the comments. Also, i am an American, but i respect the UK for keeping the tradition of the monarchy going to this day, it may not be the most efficient way to govern a nation , but it is a big part of their national identity. Without a Queen or King, the UK would be just another European democracy, with a monarch, they are part of a select few European countries which all still have a monarchy of some sort (including Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and i think the Netherlands also has a monarchy.) It's the idea of owing your allegiance to no person. I personally think as long as the queen doesn't have full power over any given nation it is not a problem. The problem starts when proceeding kings, princes, queens, or anyone in power really, start to meaningfully take power. The reason United States citizens don't agree with a monarchy is because we're very patriotic and nationalistic, so we usually stick to what our fathers and their forefathers had so desperately fought to have, our independence.To note, I'm not saying the queen takes that away now but people dislike the idea of there being a queen for the very same reason people do like the queen. It's the history, the culture, and the heritage.	Nation	Nationality - General	1/124	0.806

Kåre Hansen You must very honestly be politically blind. What you are saying is completely opposite as to what is true. A monarch will always become corrupt, in some way shape or form. They aren't going to stop it because they are the ones creating it. The way the United States government is set up is to completely make corruption impossible. The people vote for the president, and the people can take him out of office. Same goes for anyone in any political seat. The people control the government because the people are the government. It's not an anarchy but it's still powered by the people.	Blind	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/106	0.943
Kevin Cruz Actually the majority of US citizens don't appreciate leaders like that because we're well educated enough in our history to understand the problems that arise, and why we dealt with them the way we did. We aren't "Dumb", we just don't work well with the way monarchy works. If you were proud to call yourself a US citizen then you'd at least accept that fact. If not then I'm afraid not many people would agree with statements made by you regarding nationalism.	Dumb, Nationalism	Nationality - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/84	2.381
That's what I'll never understand though. How can the Brits be so happy being ruled by elitist royals? How can they tolerate possession of a monarchy, despite being one of the longest lasting democracies in the world? It's contradictory on principle and baffles the mind. But oh well, I'm sure its just a matter of time by now before the citizens of the UK wake up. They've already started to with Brexit after all...	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	1/74	1.351
They pretty much have no say in what laws are passed even if they are the ones who sign them off. Much like how the President works in my native country, once parliament passes a law, you can pretty much guarantee that it will be signed off by the Queen without any sort of hesitation. Monarchies are out-dated and archaic serving no real purpose in modern politics. Yet the Royal Family still reside in Buckingham Palace, eating up a portion of their peoples' tax money while providing little to no service back to those very people. The Royal Family is also a sickening reminder, to many of the 'Great' British Empire of old which has undoubtedly caused the most grief and hardship to other nations of any empire in human history.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/131	0.763

Who mentioned 1/3 because I didn't. I specifically said she could claim the land that was hers, did you even read it? And those important decisions for the UK? The Scottish would not have had a referendum if the Queen had not allowed it. Likewise, with Brexit , she would have had a say on whether a vote could take place or not. The only difference between Monarchies like Saudi Arabia and ours is our monarch. If the Queen wanted to, she could be just as ruthless, she doesn't hold "soft power" she just uses her power softly. She could disband the government tomorrow and start beheading folks if she wanted to, and there would be literally nobody to stop her. She's the utmost authority, but she allows for the will of the people to have a say in our democracy. A civil war? Lmaoo considering she's liked more than the government, I doubt it, but even if it did, she has an army, which are all extremely loyal to her, they would crowd control far better than other dictatorships can, because almost all of them are extreme royalists and patriots. What the people choose isn't really a factor in this, in fact, look at the previously mentioned countries with way crazier monarchs, they're doing just fine. I'm not kissing ass, but I do like the royal family, as they benefit us more than they harm us, unlike most things. But your opinion is just straight up wrong, she has a huge amount of power, she's instrumental in our economy and our legal justice system, and the amount we will spend on her funeral alone would be astronomically outweighed by the tourism generated by people travelling to pay respects so your take on this is just fuckin dumb from literally every angle lol. There is no way we would re mint the whole currency LOL. We're currently in the transition faze of new plastic notes and new one pound coins and that itself is a years long process. New coins and notes would just have the next monarchs head on. The only reason we dont have coins with old monarchs heads on is because we changed the whole system up during the Queens reign. Before that coins would have dozens of past monarchs on them.	Old, Transition	Age - Over 65s, Sexual Identity - Transexuality	2/82	2.439

I said it's likely, calm down. Look, an average woman in the UK has a life expectancy of 83.1 years, the Queen has surpassed that age and thus the chance of her death is much more likely. I'm being logical here, you don't have to throw names around	Age, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	2/48	4.167

Glitchy Pix you arent being that logical since you arent taking into account that she lives in a very good environment which lessens the chance of foreign bodies getting into her. she is also as you know the queen so she will be top priority if she becomes ill. one more thing to consider is that life extension is a few years away so she can get that and become young again (if the life extension works by making cells younger which it probably will at least it will slow down age related problems) so in short her death isnt 'much more likely' its only a little more likely with that probability going up a lot as she ages more	Age	Age - General	1/120	0.833

"costs you nothing "Not true. Bandwidth costs money. And that is one of my biggest issues with ads. When browsing the web, you should get to use your bandwidth on what YOU, the user, want to see. Because YOU pay for it. Being served ads without consent is a violation of this principle.The other big issue is privacy, which ad networks don't respect at all.That said, the first issue isn't an issue with this, since you're choosing to see ads. However, I would advise the makers of that extension to do some research on the networks they're using. Because if it's a bidding network, then you could be served an exploit kit by a malicious party, or, even if it's a curated network, could have a malicious ad that harvests whatever information it can get out of your browser environment. So the question really comes down to this: How much is your privacy, security, and bandwidth worth to you?	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/161	0.621

Good, fuck her, can't wait for her to die. monarchs and royal families have been responsible for human oppression since humans have existed, they should dismantle this this hierarchy. Who cares if its their "culture", its an old and antiquated culture based on the days of humankind where you needed a strong central source of power to control people and resources which inevitably leads to corruption and oppression. This is basically a system of superiors and inferiors, the royal family being the superior human beings and the common folk being the inferiors. And its sad because there are people who will be legitimately sad and heartbroken over this, this outdated and antiquated person who represents a dark and impoverished way of life for humans over thousands of years. Fucks all kings and queens and royalty of any nation , out with them all, we are all humans and need to respect each other as much, our lives are all of equal importance in the precept of nature, for it does not care wether we exist or not. I love how most people are questioning or saying the British are stupid for having a monarchy. Sure, reminting everything is gonna be great (not, but it'll be done over a long period of time) and they probably have money held back for that. However, the British have a monarchy because it is normal in our culture and history as well as being a tourist attraction kinda. Tourists wanna see the palace, or know about our royal family because not many countries today have proper royals. I spotted a comment about ethical diversity, Something about American being the most ethically diversed country, when really in the entire world, they are ranked 85, with UK being 109 and Canada being ranked 60... And Papa New Guinea Being first. So... Sure. Totally. But still. England have a Monarchy. I think it's cultural improvement. It will be a sad day when the Queen passes on. However, why re-mint all of the UK's money? It isn't like the Queen grabbed men by the dick left and right or colluded with Russia to rig the country's election (unlike another country's leader whom shall remain nameless), she hasn't embarrassed the UK in any manner (her son Chuckie on the other hand although he may not have directly embarrassed the country much his ex-wife sure as hell did and he picked her). Just print new money with King William's face on it (it is my understanding that Prince Chuckie had to agree not to become King upon his mother's death in exchange for being allowed to divorce Diana and that was reiterated when he married Camilla – I don't know if that is written into law or just an agreement to immediately abdicate upon his mother's passing), have both be legal tender and as the old money with Queen Elizabeth on it wears out destroy it. If the money looks exactly the same other than the picture of the Monarch on it (is a King considered a Monarch – I don't know the proper term for a King but Monarch will do here) I don't see the problem. As for the colonies, I don't see Canada re-minting all of their currency considering they just spend billions to re-mint their bill currency with plastic instead of cloth paper like other countries use and Canada had used since 1867. Pedro II, perhaps one of the best leaders to ever exist lost his throne to fucking stupid democrats. Brazil was the 4th biggest economy in the world and biggest military power in His reign, he spoke more than 30 languages, dragged Brazil out of misery and made it a superpower.. and today we are ruled by corrupt fuckers who can't even speak the native language, a shit vampire who didn't even get elected to be ruling and by a red dinosaur that got killed in 2016 before she made brazil communist .. and it is getting worse. don't believe me? from 4th spot in biggest economy, we went to 10th. from biggest military power, we are around the 30th' or something nowadays. there is no money to invest in security, there is no money to pay public workers, there is no money to invest in public health.. we were once one of the most developed countries in the whole planet, but it just kept going downhill shit after. You step outside? you get stabbed/shot by a robber cause there is no safety. You get stabbed or shot by a bandit? guess what. YOU'RE FUCKED because there are barely any hospitals that can help you. and as if it wasn't enough, you can't manage to pay a private hospital, probably because you don't have money for it in the first place; because you paid your abusive taxes, to receive this shit treatment by the government. you guys should be happy to be born in britain, one of the most developed and historically best provided countries in the world.. the monarchy isn't an outdated way of government. a monarch is the representation of the people's will, and if he doesn't have public support, he falls. that is why there is no space for corruption when you are a monarch...that is just MY opinion, the opinion of a humble brazilian that wishes to see the old Brazilian Empire restored. thanks for reading, don't take any of this serious as this is just my opinion, and i'm sorry if i offended you.. It's Niveus Got to agree with you there, the death of your grandmother means nothing whatsoever. I mean, she's a loved family member, but what did she ever do to earn that love?We're not in love with Mussolini, but we're not going to commit mass suicide out of depression when the queen dies. It's solely respect, something the US seems severely lacking in (at least in this thread). The royal family are born into it, and that's part of what makes them so great. Chances are, a democratic leader only gives a shit about themselves unless you get lucky. For God's sake, trump didn't even know what the job description was! But the royal family have nothing to lose, and, as their people, the only thing they could do wrong is not care about us. As the longest ruling monarch, she deserves at least a bit of respect. If the queen deserves such a grandiose funeral is to be questioned, however the mourning will be very real and the economic impact negligible.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/173	1.156
Monty Walker gotta disagree, we Americans have respect but we believe it is earned, not given. I have nothing against the queen or the ceremonies for a death (although I do think parts of it is a little outlandish) but the thing is she didn't work to become queen she was given that title. Now I don't know much about her life and if she has advocated or worked for anything worth noting but I do know that there are people who've worked, fought, bled, and sweat for what they believed in, people who have to work day and night to feed their family, people who've dedicated there lives to helping others and the list can go on. true. a monarch spends 15 years studying to become a skilled politician. a fine example is D. Pedro II (Last emperor of Brazil)he spoke around 27 languages, ruled for FIFTY EIGHT YEARS (He became a king when his father, D. Pedro I abdicated from the throne after portuguese royal pressure) and he assumed the throne when he was 5 years old . He studied his whole life, dragged the country out of misery, DECLARED INDEPENDENCE! and made it the 4th biggest economy in the world AND biggest military superpower in the globe.Sadly, after so many communist and democratic plots (probably arranged by the US..) he lost his claim to power and died 2 years later.. Today, we are a 2nd world country, underdeveloped. Sadly, that is the price you pay for removing such a great monarch from power. Today we are ruled by a vampire (Michel Temer), who didn't get elected in the first place. He played a plot against Dilma Rousseff(ancient red dinossaur that used to rule the country) and assumed her spot in the presidency. Both of those know only how to speak portuguese, didn't make any kinds of great feats to earn their spots.Now you ask me: how did those dumb fucks get elected in the first place?It's very simple: When you have people so dumb , but SO dumb , that took a great monarch out of his throne to put IDIOTS and STUPID FUCKERS like those in the country's palace, WHO THE FUCK do you think they are going to elect? Someone who represents them(A very dumb person) or someone qualified? They're always going to choose who represents them.Thats a rant from a brazilian who wants the empire back. Lenin's state sure as fuck survived longer than Robespierre's Republic. Chinese People's Republic, like American Revolutionary, still stands to this very day, making our very own electronic devices we're using here. Republic Cromwell quote was just to spite monarchists. Bullshit, these are lies from Goebbels and CIA cold war propaganda. The civilians killed in World War II CAUSED BY THE NAZIS alone would already dismiss that. Stalin's soviet industrialization and economic growth, the fastest ever experienced in human history would never be possible if it was killing people in the rate you imperialist propaganda claims. Stalin consolidated the revolution, saved the world from Nazi bondage and secured the lifting of 30 million soviet people out of misery. No wonder Russians consider him the greatest Russian of all times even though he was Georgian. I myself see him more like Napoleon, regardless, comparing him with Hitler is pure Cold War capitalist propaganda. Do you know who was actually a racist responsible for more deaths than Hitler? She's been appearing in public a lot lately. I see her as still very healthy and well. She's got a good 8 years or more left, I could see her living to 101, as her mother did. I can't say the same for her husband, Prince Phillip though. He is retiring and isn't going to events on his own anymore(though he continues to appear with her on occasion). He's probably got 5 years max. Long live the queen. I see her role as vital to balance the power between men and women. As it was with Victoria. In times when men are prime and women's rights and safety are under threat, I see women in power like Victoria and Elizabeth II vital to giving some women the strength to stand up. Especially with the state of the U.S. Where the president and so many other in positions of power are accused and admitted to have abused women to their own sick, disgusting sexual desires. We wouldn't reprint or remint at all, before decimalisation it was common to see coins of various ages and monarchs in circulation. We would carry on using it as normal and all new notes being printed and coins being minted would be the ones that change, with the gradual filtration of old ones that are too worn being recycled.The profile of the portrait would change though, the Queen looks to the right on coins and her successor would look left.Banknotes would likely retain their current design with the alteration of the new monarch's portrait. Ashley McCallum Best known as ancient Rome's rival in the Punic Wars, Carthage was a North African commercial hub that flourished for over 500 years. The city-state began its life in the 8th or 9th century B.C. as a Phoenician settlement in what is now Tunisia, but it later grew into a sprawling seafaring empire that dominated trade in textiles, gold, silver and copper. At its peak, its capital city boasted nearly half a million inhabitants and included a protected harbor outfitted with docking bays for 220 ships.	African	Ethnicity - Black	1/88	1.136

Ifan lusnn Fuck off with that bullshit. America has rich history, we've had multiple tribal nations in the distant past with large wars that have left many artifacts. When the Europeans arrived they made many large structures, forth and colonial buildings that are still around today. America had had many different people affect it and has influenced the world in the many ways we've been involved in it. There all sorts of cultural sights and sources in America, As I said before there's tons of historical sights and buildings with museums covering all sorts of topics. You could go to a presidential library and see all the big events that happened in their presidency. You could look up the successes of the robber barons and how they created their monopolies and made many great structures and inventions. Also the only reason you say America doesn't have any culture is because it's so diverse and the majority of it is consumed by the rest of the world. Every famous company you've seen is most likely American, same with the most successful TV shows and movies. You've just seen them outside of America so much you forget they're American. As I said America is diverse and is really a large melting pot of European, African, and Asian cultures. Then after that you have the broader regional cultures. For example in the north east you have the majority historical sights and a lot of cultural centers, the food is largely influenced by Italians as there are multitudes of restaurants that server great pizza and subs. The personality of the people is that they are usually reserved and sometimes snarky. In the south you got battlegrounds galore and the food is delicious barbecue and lots of gravy dishes. The southerners also have their classic southern hospitality. In the miss west you have the rust belt where most of the old industry barons' factories are as well as many great dairy and fish products. Ye also have the Midwest kindness. Then in the west you have all sorts of sights related to the land and gold rushes with huge amounts of national parks and forests. Here you'll also find the most Native reservations which are great to visit. There are many great beaches as well as mix of American and Latin food. This is where you'll find the entertainment industry and all the actors as well as the hipster and valley girl types. So in short America has a huger array of history and culture just like any other wonderful nation.	African, Nation, Old	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - Black, Nationality - General	3/426	0.704

You hate the British empire? All it did was flourish in a world that was behind the times. Have you ever heard about not introducing animals into other habitats? There is such a thing as a red squeal, this little guy was found everywhere in Britain then the foreign brown squeal was accidentally introduced into Britain and the native red squeal is now almost extinct. The brown squeal was bigger and stronger and stole all the red squeal food. It's the same thing on a human scale, the superior British human was introduced to foreign lands with no natural predators and flourished and this is just a result of it. Your going to hate against an entire breed of people forever for something that's only natural? Evolutionary? If you hate this then don't hate the brown squeals nor the rabbits nor the humans, hate life as a hole.The queen and the British empire did what was right, they evolved and took their place in the natural course of life. The only reason they weren't taken over is becuase the US has been saving their ass since WW1. The US biggest mistake was allowing that dumb monarchy to remain in power, and allowing Britain to take control of former Ottoman Empire lands. Britain is responsible to the middle east problem of today becuase of how terrible they are at running and organizing governments. Britain also being the retards they are created instablization in Africa and the cycle of dictators oppressing the people who they raped all identity from. KomodoDojo give me a break, America is more of an evil empire then Britain ever was. First off the Americans didn't do shit in the Second World War! The Americans entered too late when the Germans was already seriously weakened by the Russians, the Russians would have taken then Germans out it may have taken longer but even Hitler's admitted that they would fall against the Russians. America just swooped in at the last second trying to take credit for everything when they did nothing. Number two, the American government is way more corrupt then the British monarchy! In some states people get 2-3 times the amount of voting power then other people in other states, if that's equality then I'd eat my own foot.in America the persistent holds all the power, in Britain we have the House of Commons and the House of Lords that debate everything before anything could be set in stone. Don't give me " your country is corrupt" shit for your county is way more backwards then the rest of the world. Even if there is a disagreement in Britain between political powers like a draw between two parties to become prime minister then the queen can step in and sort it out, what if this happens in America? Everyone bitches and argues like a little dweeb trying to claim the presidency. What about wars? Did you ever study how Americans raped and sacked innocent citizens in the Vietnam war? Oh yes! Americans captured then raped and tortures innocent villagers because Americans thought they where "terrorists". What about the slave trade? Britain's official ruling out of all slavery was in 1833! America? They went to war with themselves in America went to war with themselves in 1861 because they wanted to keep other humans as slaves, Americans are so animalistic that they had to fight each other over slaves. What about gun laws? Americans have guns everywhere and often go into schools and do a mass shooting. In Britain? Guns are hard to get your hands on and America has ruffly 160 times as meany gun homicides then Britain. The Middle East? America's fault actually trying to implant fake borders and fake "diplomatic governments" to selfishly appease their own ideology of power. Seriously have you ever studied what started the wars in the Middle East? I live in a monarchy too and our next monarch seems really nice and I fear nothing but I think that the best time to replace the head of state with an elected president should be when a monarch dies instead of waiting for a crazy monarch to be overthrown and have it abolished in a huge dumpster fire. There's alot of people who want the monarch to be abolished after she dies, and alot of people on the other side of things, holding the royal family in very high regard. I'm totally indifferent to both sides. On the one I don't think it should be abolished because it doesn't affect me in anyway, on the other hand royalists are usually ukip right wingers that have alot anamosity towards immigrants, LGBT communities, and and usually love caravaning. To everyone commenting on the currency changes: 1) don't say it is stupid or pointless or whatever if you are not from the UK. The British are definitely not insulting the US for having a bunch of dead old men, or the Canadians for having plastic money, or the Zimbabweans for having so many 0's on their notes, so don't criticize a system that has no effect on you. Yes, you may find it weird and comment about it, but don't argue with other people about such a trivial thing (especially with people it will actually affect)2) To those asking why it will happen, I'd like to take you back to Imperial Rome. During this period, coins served as one of the tools used by the new emperor to both differentiate himself to the population from his predecessor, and to secure his (and not another's) rule, especially to the provinces further away from Rome. Since coins serve as the fastest way to propagate about your rule to your empire (since currency as we all know travels very fast), every emperor had themselves minted on new coins and had their predecessors removed from circulation as soon as possible. (this was obviously done with much more urgency in the cases where a new emperor had a terrible predecessor like Caligula, Nero, etc, and you wanted the population to not associate your rule with theirs)This process was picked up by monarchs throughout the European sphere, with each new monarch replacing the deceased, deposed or abdicated monarch on the currency. It may seem illogical and strange to us in this globalized society, but this has been going on since antiquity, and will continue with all forms of monarchies (yes, regarding this the Vatican counts as a very unique form of non-hierarchical monarchy) for as long as printed and minted money still gets used.	Old, Weird	Age - Over 65s, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/311	0.643

I don't know how it works, but it can be successful, especially in a moderately small country like England. Here in Thailand, about six years ago we changed our 50 notes and it took about half a year for them to be gone. Now we have the 100, 500, and 20 notes changed. The problem with "reprinting currency" cost is that currency is replaced frequently as it is - they won't literally withdraw all currency and crash-print-and-circulate new currency within 24 hours. They'll just start printing new currency (I imagine at least UK, Canada, and Australia already have replacement currency designed,) instead; and as old bills are withdrawn, the new ones will enter circulation. According to the Royal Mint, banknotes last only about a year for lower-denomination, up to 10 years for higher-denomination (therefore less-traded) notes.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/83	1.205

Doesn't it just mean to mint new currency with the new monarch? Especially for coins which show a date, I don't think this would be a problem: Just roll out the new batch and start taking the older currency out of circulation. This is normal and not an additional costs to commonwealth States who show the Queen on their money. For instance, New Zealand and Australia have various coins in circulation from different times and the Queen is shown at different ages: there are still coins that show a younger Queen Elizabeth on them. I think NZ updates her portrait every 15-20 years. NZ and Canada have recently launched new banknote designs anyway, these are to increase measures against new technologies in counterfeit money and this expense would have nothing to do with the Queen.The real cost, these former colonies would have to consider is whether it is worth becoming independent republics: replacing flags, currency and changing their system of government to avoid paying for the continued upkeep of the royal family and expensive events such as the funeral. Loyalty to the British crown is waning around the world and many countries have avoided the debate out of respect for Queen Elizabeth II but would consider it far more seriously should a less popular successor be appointed. If this were to occur, there's no reason not to have a transition period to reduce costs by updating currency and flags as they need to be replaced. We wouldn't need to replace our banknotes. This is actually a big piece of misinformation that is very common because we've only had one monarch since decimalisation - the Queen. When we had "old money" it wasn't unknown to see coins and notes of the last two Kings. They would slowly replace coins and notes with the Queens face with that of her son but it wouldn't happen all at once. In the UK we actually fairly regularly remove old coins and produce new designs. These new coins would have his face on them.	Common, Old	Age - Over 65s, Social Class - Working class	3/94	3.191
I think you're overstating the cultural impact. Yes, there are prescribed by law changes and events that will cost a stupidly high price, but news that a very old woman with no real power died is not going to come as a shock outside of the UK. We did the same with brexit , doesn't work that way unfortunately. The mismanagement of the tax is why our school and social services (especially the NHS) are terrible, and I highly doubt that deducting the royal families income would make much of an impact (probably go towards a second house for a few MP's). I mean, personally, I dislike the royal family.Now now, listen. I love the Queen and all. She is an absolutely amazing person.But monarchies aren't a thing in the 21st century. Replace the royal family with straight up democracy.Again, I have nothing personal against the family. They are pretty chill people. But having a Queen is not something I would want. I'm not sure how people feel in the UK, but even here, in the US, the President has too much power. Give more power to the people, and less to the bloodline of a random family. It shouldn't be in there. Yes it will add cost to change the profile. There will be retooling costs and such, but for every previous monarch the old coins and currency continued to circulate at face value. It would likely be a year or so before the new monarchs face is on the currency. Generally they don't start until after the coronation, which might not be for months after her death. Currency is always changing and evolving. It's not like the old coins and notes are going to be cut out of circulation, they will still hold the same value.In Canada we just made a new $10 bill, but there are still plenty of the old ones going around. I see about 80 old $10 bills and 20 of the new ones. Eventually the old ones will be phased out.	Old	Age - Over 65s	4/70	5.714
CANADAWOOOOOOOOO yes that is the same system with the new £5, £10 notes and £1 coin. The old five pound note was legal for quite a while but the ten pound and one pound have been given a shorter turn around time so they are getting into circulation very quickly.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/50	2.0
What if you done the same to a normal, unimportant family? Your Government would be seen by the rest of the world as incredibly authoritarian to just steal someones home. Just because you want to do it to an incredibly wealthy family doesnt make it anymore legal and and less wrong you idiot. You know there are people in the uk who own more land and have more money then the royal family. Do you want theres to be stolen as well? The queen hasn't stolen anyone's land. You can make the argument that her ancestors did but that doesnt mean anything. So what if they did? That doesnt give the GOVERNMENT the right to steal it back hundreads of years later. If she was removed from head of state then she'd just become a private citizen like me and you. Thats means she has the same rights as me and you. Including the right to not have your home and property stolen by the state.Sounds to me like your either a commie or a fascist. Both equally horrible.	Commie	Ideological and Political Identity - General	1/180	0.556
It certainly does give them the right, what right does anyone have to that much amount of wealth? What's legal or illegal is defined by the government itself. The monarchy is an institution of privilege that has stolen wealth from around the world, not a struggling family that has worked hard to get what they want, if you count working hard as stealing, killing, and slave labouring.The point is not how much it's worth, the point is that they have no rightful ownership. The land is held by "the crown" and thus it doesn't matter who is king or queen, they are still holding stolen assets. If you think the government taking ownership is a purely communist thing you should familiarize yourself with Eminent domain or compulsory purchase, the rules are bent to whomever is in charge, and if the queen is a private citizen, who is going to stop the government? The Bank of England will not take out of circulation every note with the queens face and reprint new ones. That is both silly and logistically impossible. What will happen is that they will start issuing the new notes as the monetary base keeps growing, just as they do right now but with the new notes. The cost of 0.05 per note is real, but is not really an extra cost associated with new notes, just the ordinary printing cost they have for every note entering in the economy. The notes with the queens face will continue to be used as legal tender just as the old 100 dollar notes continue to be used in the US. That is assuming the BoE will not choose to destroy and replace currency as it goes through the banking system, which seems to me an unnecessary cost.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/144	0.694

Why not just replace old notes with newly printed ones over time, in the standard way? The offspring of a deceased heir to the throne doesn't lose his/her right to inherit—he/she just moves up on the list. The deceased heir remains on the list as if alive. So after death, why not consider that the notes are valid tender even though the pictured monarch is deceased? The new monarch can save a lot of trouble and expense by declaring that the old currency remains valid. This could be seen as an act of respect and love, especially in honor of Elizabeth and her record-breaking reign.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/106	1.887

Why would we have to bother re-issuing all currency? In Canada, we don't even have the Queen on most of our bank notes and the old notes would continue to be legal tender regardless, even if they were pulled from circulation. Indeed, if anything, I would expect a commemorative issue of the one note that does have the Queen's portrait on it. Then whatever new series of bank notes is in the works would probably be changed to have a different portrait on that one note (probably the new monarch). Regardless, I highly doubt we'll bother with pulling old notes with the Queen's portrait from circulation. It just doesn't make any sense.If the UK is smart, they'll follow a similar path. Leave the old bank notes in circulation and just have the new ones issued with the new monarch's portrait. Then regular attrition will remove the old notes from circulation. Just like with coins. After the death of previous UK monarchs there was a rush to replace all the currency? Do you have a source for this? I really don't know, but using the analogous continental European monarchies in the euro, they haven't bothered recalling all coins with a dead/retired monarch's face in them. Tom thank you for clarifying. How long does the law give for currency to be introduced, and do you know if there is a permissive period where banks and retailers can give both old and new bills as change? Is there an eventual requirement for retailers to deposit all old notes, and for banks to send old notes for destruction? (It's gotta make it difficult for the retailers and banks.)	Old	Age - Over 65s	3/70	4.286

Well, the UK has recently started to change a lot of the money we use. We have now got new 5 and 10 pound notes which are made with plastic and are more secure from forgery etc. When these were introduced, the old currency is still usable but is slowly replaced with the new notes. After about 1 year of the new 5 pound note, I haven't seen a single old one in ages. Also, I believe there is a date when they become invalid to spend after a while but even then, if you have old money you can go to the bank of England and change it there. Whenever you go to a shop in the UK, the shops legally have to give you new currency which means people end up getting it quicker. :)	Old	Age - Over 65s	3/137	2.19

Domen-Ian Morovič British people are definitely fed that, yes. There's like a minority of people who are republican but that's a pretty niche point of view to hold. Most people inexplicably love the royal family, which is why you get comments like the one above stating that a rich old woman is a unifying force in the country, and people acting like everyone would stop visiting London if a person they didn't get to even see wasn't bequeathed with national status inside a fancy building. Krombopulos Michael You admit the british people like her and that being a republican is something not very common , yet you deny that she is a unifying force in the country. It's quite funny how you can think that a head of state who is overwhelmingly popular can somehow not be a unifying force, despite Brits, for generations, enjoying their monarchy. The monarchy represents the stability of Britain and it's democracy. Many other nations lost their monarchies due to coups, soviet invasion, or being annexed and their monarchy exiled. Very few willingly and popularly abolished their monarchies, and even less survived afterwards. It had almost always led to the rise of dictatorships. If it isn't Napoleon, then it's Franco, Stalin, Hitler, Mao, or, funnily enough, Cromwell. Brits have a reason to like their monarchy, and people have a reason to not like it. Both are acceptable and there is no reason to talk down on the people who do. You're not any less "fed bullshit" just because the majority disagrees with you, you've reached your own conclusion, you haven't escaped the brain washing ceremony. Lord Dim 1 correct, we only have pictures of the current queen on our coins because she's the only monarch we've had since decimalisation. As an American I will never for the life of me understand the reverence that the British have for their monarchy. Is there any greater symbol of systemic classism ? Could you imagine being born in a country in which somebody has official state status as being better than you through an accident of birth? How can one be aspirational in a nation in which it's codified into law that one can only reach a certain level because the family they're born in? It just seems so obviously wrong to me. The UK is a parliamentary monarchy. queen Elizabeth II is the head of state. But she is not aloud to be involved with day to day politics.She does how ever have to sigh every and all laws that parlement has voted on. Even if that law would be her own abdication if that is what parlement has chosen.she can how ever send parlement home. Its her job to give advice to the prime minister and can help with diplomatic questions.she is the highest diplomat the UK has to offer. there aren't a lot of doors that will keep shut if people hear that the queen has arrived.she is the head of all armed forces with in all the countries she is queen.she is the head of the Church of Englandshe has to be queen 24/7 its not that she really is free ever. Blaze, that's a really poor example. ISIS is still in the process of committing their acts of genocide, where as the previous comments were referring to historical events."Get over genocide" is probably a poor choice of words, but still, in this context the comparison is a poor one.I think what they mean to get across is that every nation at some point has benefited from acts that most of us might deem to be immoral or unjust, so to use an event in history to attack a nation like this is somewhat hypocritical. Wait so how long would it be before the old currency with the queen's image on it is phased out? How long would it continue to be legal tender?	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/29	3.448
Actually I think it's 6 months, the UK is actually updating some of its currency, a new £5 note can out about a year ago (the one shown in the video is the old one) and the old ones were no longer legal tender 6 months later(though you could still trade it in for the new one at banks.) there was a new £1 coin that come out about 7 months ago and is no longer legal tender since last month. Finally there is currently a new £10 note being printed. It started being given out in September and will no longer be legal tender in march.Although there won't be new currency straight away since the mints will want to probably create a stockpile of notes and coins before giving them out. Also they may switch them out one coin and note at a time to reduce the amount of pressure on the mints. I mean trying to make 8 new coins and 4 new notes (though nobody uses the £50 note so that wouldn't make a difference) all at once probably won't be possible. LostInPie219, democracy? DEMOCRACY??!! Hahaha just as I suspected. Democracy doesn't exist and I don't know if it ever did, don't you get it? People, the peasants never got to control the lands,wealth or anything. Just as always, the masses work to sustain their nations from taxes while the "leaders" get to "distribute" that income. It's all an Oligarchy and plutocracy. Wake up, it's the wealthy, the elite, the CAPITALISM that drives and controls the world. Democracy,the people's elections,equality,freedom hahaha sure, if that's what you wanna call it. I know and myself mentioned what you say, that she doesn't have power more. I am conscious about that, I SAID IT TOO, she is more like a symbol than authority. That's the thing about English, formal English in particular.Due the fact that the real London Bridge is such an integral part of the city, the context that would allow someone official to use that phrase isn't ever going to come up. Saying something is down is a generic term so the chance of being used in connection to such an important thing is practical zero .If the London bridge went down due to structural failure, you're most likely to say "collapsed". If it goes down due to enemy activities then "destroyed". If a ship crashes into it then "struck". So on and so forth.	Zero	Age - Youngsters	1/105	0.952

I know ABC and CNN have some pre-filmed video announcing the death of major celebs (in the case of Frank Sinatra CNN had several hours of pre-filmed memorial content), all living US Presidents/Vice Presidents and well known countries Monarchs or Prime Ministers such as the UK's . These rules were written in the 1950's, Andrew. They may be re-thought and updated to modern convention if they haven't already been updated. That part of the video may have been using newspaper articles written when the Queen's father passed on in (IIRC) 1952. I certainly don't think the BBC is keeping black ties around for the occasion – anchors wear black ties often enough that the symbolism no longer exists considering a standard men's suit is worn with a black or blue tie. Also, what if a woman is on duty to take the anchor chair in an emergency when the Queen passes on (which wouldn't have happened in 1952)? She would look pretty weird and funny in a black men's tie – making a mockery of what is supposed to be a formal and mournful occasion. The royal family are essentially highly trained diplomats, you have a reasonable sized pool to pick from in case one isn't very good at it. It also allows the head of state to be non-political so the figurehead of the country isn't trying to push an agenda to the citizens or foreign dignitaries.
