I have taught fee paying students (who have high expectations) at five private language schools , taught state secondary school to get my full QTS and I have taught at a college and three universities (including 2 good universities) but I was reduced to the stereotype of a ghetto hood criminal. It is deeply hurtful when people believe such terrible lies. I am REALLY upset. I worked hard and behaved well to build a life out of hardship, a single parent’s kid and I did it to be reduced to THIS? EVERYBODY let it happen. I now have nightmares that racists will chemically dumb me down to the racist stereotype they want me to be and frame me for crimes I did not commit. My experience has proved to me that you can be angelic and live a perfect life but it won’t protect you from being dumbed down and framed as a disgusting racist stereotype if you are black . We are not safe. Equality is a LIE.	Black, Dumb, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	4/170	2.353
Show me one video of Whites, real Whites not those Black Hispanics who say they’re White like Rich Rojas, playing the knockout game on Black people. Show me ONE VIDEO of that!5:19,That must be why the parts of the country with slavery were backwards shitholes and why the Black countries that keep slavery are also backwards shitholes.5 Billion dollars is NOT much money for an economy—it’s about one four thousandth of our GDP!!! By comparison, if you add up all the damage the Black people do to Whites every year through all of the knockout games and vicious beatings, you’re looking at a minimum of 80 billion in total healthcare costs. That was just.....weird! Actually, slavery wasn't all that great of an investment, otherwise the slave deprived North wouldn't have been wealthier than the South, but it was. The North was much more industrialized etc at that time then the South. Shame on Rucker! Dragging slavery out and pretending it flavors attitudes and behaviors today is doubtless of benefit to some, but the superficiality of dragging a 150+ year moral deficiency and trying to make it stick when you throw it against the wall today is an appalling smoke and mirrors attempt to develop a false righteous indignation in his audience.Virtually his entire presentation is built on emotionalism, not fact. Police brutality against blacks is debunked by FBI crime statistics. The basis of capitalism is slavery? Canada, Chile, Germany, Britain, Japan, South Korea and Bangladesh enjoy capitalist economies...was slavery in US responsible for their success as well? Purported wealth contributed by slavery is doubtless inflated....could only have been some percentage of the $200m cotton sales in 1860. And it was conveniently left out that this was in the single digits of the nations GNP that year. Nothing like perspective to show who is manipulating statistics. Intentionally segregated schools, neighborhoods and workplace? So are the black colleges guilty of racism? Where are examples of "intentionally segregated" neighborhoods, schools and workplace of today? Its great to accuse...but much better to provide facts, which separate opinion from the truth of fact.	Black, Nothing, Racism	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	3/198	1.515

It can be explained by a very narrow perspective ; the perspectiv of the liberated slaves and their decendants in the southern states of America. All slave owners were whites so all whites were slave owners, a strange bias.Pan-Africanism a hate doctrine based on two startingpoints 1- white supremacy or whites are racists and oppressors . Racism will never go away if we continue to say the problem still exists. "Just accept it and be aware" is something I get told all the time about white privilege. But what does that accomplish? Privilege isn't something I do, and being aware of it doesn't allow me to change my actions so I don't "do" privilege anymore. I need to make three points. First, I've heard people say that black people can't be racist, because they're the minority or the victims, and that simply isn't correct. Anyone, anyone can behave in a racist manner. It is an act that requires two people only, and all it takes is for one of these people to treat the other differently because of their race to have behaved in a racist manner. Second. The term people of color is the concept of separate but equal in disguise. "As a person of color..." If you say this, why are you celebrated? Because you're a minority? Like the color of your skin gives you the right to have a more valuable opinion or insight? You might have experiences that others can't relate to, but so does a white person. No one deserves special treatment because of their race. If I said "as a white person..." and expected people to listen to me and respect me because of that, I'd be labeled racist. The term people of color creates a split of everyone in the world between "white people" and "the rest of the world". And it creates the idea that a person of color should be celebrated while a white person deserves no celebration. It is a direct mirror of early racism in the states. One "racial group" is better than another is what it says. Let's look at the above definition of racism. Wow, "POC" is racist! And something racist won't solve racism. Third, privilege itself has nothing to do with race. Privilege is the phenomenon that occurs in a society when one individual's way of life, i.e. their language, customs, etc. are close to the "standard" way of life in that society. The closer your life is to that standard, the more privilege you have. Standard ways of life are normal. These standards are what unify societies. Don't believe me? In an African village with a strong identity and culture, a member of that tribe who speaks the language is privileged. If I went there, I would not have privilege, because I do not speak the language and I do not understand the culture. I will face a natural struggle to fit in. So the question becomes, how do you tell if someone's life is close to the standard? In America, the country was founded by white people who had an established culture. This culture became the "American" culture historically, and its the culture America operates on still today, for reasons I will explain shortly. In the past, the easiest way to know was to look at the appearance of the person. Back then you could easily tell race and economic status based on appearance. This is how race became involved. Back then it wasn't easy to travel long distances, meaning if you didn't look white, you weren't a "local tribesman" of America, and so you had less privilege. Now back then people actively sought out less privileged individuals to take advantage of them. Everyone getting mad about white privilege today act like that's what white people still do, which also is incorrect. It's all subconscious now, and like I said simply calling it out won't change it. Here's what will. Privilege won't ever go away. It's a natural phenomenon. What you can do is change the variables. You can	African, Black, Gender, Nation, Nationalism, Nothing, Race, Racism, Racist	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Nationality - General	34/1118	3.041

The lack of comprehension on this topic by white people is amazing, and sad. Capitalism poisons everything. We cannot even begin to think about destroying racism & bigotry (especially in a place like the US (which is one of the world's major manufacturers of it) until we finally reject the system of capitalism in a global, unified way. Given the sheer momentum (and ferocious success) of the capitalist's propaganda apparatus today, we're looking at another 50 to 100 years, easy. Will racism & bigotry exist in the absence of failing profit-driven systems like capitalism? Of course. Racism will always exist in some form. However, the best way to crush racism down to microscopic levels is to abolish the CONDITIONS that allow it to germinate. And those conditions are furnished by capitalism. Why are they working part time at a warehouse? They all have different stories, but none of those stories are "the white man kept me down". They always take full responsibility. I hate that I even started a conversation here cause I love discussing the topic with others despite my lack of specific knowledge. But I'm interested in your reply too! Like you said your experiences are real as well. While the group of people you met while working within your career probably represent a small group as well, its always been a challenge for me to really recognize ALL the people that something like racism and other forms of discrimination could effect. Systematic racism has always seemed like a really big topic that encompassed a lot of random nuanced aspects that I, even as a black male, didn't always realize. And like the comment stated, people, have experiences where they feel like a system didn't affect them or they created their own path in life and where they are is the result of their hard work or lack of. I've just always wanted to understand even in my own way despite my race or experiences because what I learned and have accepted is its ok to hear and believe in others people experiences. So questions I had or would pose about this response is what claims have "they" made and why are or aren't viable? What are they asking for or to happen in regards to submitting to their request? And knowing the experiences of these men and considering them to be true, at what point or amount of people would any group need for their feelings or opinions to be seriously considered as valid in a social context? By that, I guess I mean for people to be like "oh yea there's definitely something to consider."	Black, Race, Racism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	4/277	1.444

It's great to learn about America's tragic history, and to be aware of the vestiges of it where they actually exist and to the degree they actually exist. However, we all know about slavery, thanks. We all know about lynching and the KKK. We all know it's bad, and have since before I was born. Just like we all know about the Holocaust. It is NOT alive and well today. We do NOT live in a white supremacist country, and there is no more "systemic" racism. There is no legal segregation (in fact there was mandatory integration in my public schools). You were never a slave. No living white person today has ever owned a slave or lynched anyone. Police kill twice as many whites as blacks. The most likely people to get shot by the police are people who commit crimes, especially violent crimes, and then resist arrest. Do we blame Germans born after the Holocaust for the extermination camps? No. Why not? Because we know they had nothing to do with it. Wouldn't it be ridiculous to blame some German child born yesterday for the Holocaust? Is there a statute of limitations on guilt at birth? So, again, great to learn about the past, but to pretend things haven't changed and to brand innocent white people with white supremacy and crimes they never committed in the slightest is shading into scapegoating and demonizing people based on race. Are you responsible for Hiroshima? You're American, aren't you. Are you responsible for the war on Iraq? Well, you're an American. Are you responsible for all the crimes men have committed against women, or adults have committed against children? Ridiculous, you say? It's just as ridiculous to blame average white people for slavery as for stealing Indian land or the Boston Tea Party. It's as accurate as blaming Jews or Romans today for crucifying Christ. I'd probably be more interested in your actual experience of racism in your life, as well as your experience of non-racism (including having an art career and your art shown in white-owned galleries and museums). I probably should've known better than to read comments, but I couldn't help it, and am incredibly disappointed. Many are completely ignoring the ideas put forth in this video and stating that the speaker did not 'explain' systemic racism . You realize that's part of the problem, right? That it's difficult to point it out? He emphasized how subtlety of systemic racism in America makes it such a difficult battle. It seems a handful of you chose to ignore that. I think a lot of people's misunderstanding of 'systemic racism ' comes from phraseology. When one refers to 'systemic racism ,' one isn't talking about explicit government-sanctioned discrimination or some obvious act like that. 'Systemic' refers more to how many aspects of our society have underlying elements governed by racism , especially our economy. I was really glad he emphasized how the American economic system was largely impacted by the practice of chattel slavery. Slavery was essentially one of the most formative aspects of the early United States, and everything from its practice to its abolition affected discrimination against blacks. Many are calling this 'race-baiting' but I see no semblance of that here to be perfectly honest. He is not attempting to stir up sentiment against others. Nowhere does he imply that one group of people are the problem and we need to be the solution. He is talking about symbols and systems, but many of you are treating it like he's attacking you directly, which is quite telling.	Racism	Ethnicity - General	4/245	1.633

Is This Rain? There have been many poor ethnic groups in western countries. In fact, the initial settlements by virtually every ethnic group tends to be dirt poor. A good example of this is Chinese immigration during the California gold rush; they were manual laborers who literally built railroads with hand tools. Yet violent crime is lower in Chinese communities compared to national averages wherever they go in the West, and there is no evidence of high rates of crime amongst poor east asian communities in the west. The same goes for Indian communities, but not for Pakistani communities. Wanna know why? Culture, not poverty. Indians and Pakistanis are ethnically similar, but culturally different, particularly with religion, and that makes all the difference.So to conclude, I agree that we need to tackle the problem at its source, but the source is not poverty. In fact, poverty is often another consequence of the source, which is culture. Once we figure out how to change the very ways that people fundamentally think, we can fix epidemic violent crime, so I'd say give it a few hundred more years and we're set... Mac Ton I completely agree with you. I can accept that Emmett Till, being in the part of the country that he was and the incident he was involved in, did get killed by two racists, and the killers were willfully acquitted by a jury that would rather see them go free, despite the evidence. In fact, the two men later admitted to doing it in a magazine interview, but could not stand double jeopardy. In my opinion that was a miscarriage of justice that did happen, but those are the cases that make national news because they are so extreme. I would not say that is how the American legal and court system works frequently and as a rule. To say racism and racial exclusivity is the prime guiding principle of America, as a nation and ideal, is false and disingenuous. Jarful of Love Psychological literature suggests a slight difference between male and female agressivity. At least in western societies. The magnitude of this effect is 60 40. Meaning if you were to see a man and a woman and were to guess at the man being more agresive you'd be right 60 of the time. Criminals however aren't the average person, they are the extremes at the agresive end of the distribution. And while both distributions are normally distributed, the mens one is a bit more to the right. The problem here is that a slight effect at the middle will make a huge effect at the ends of the distribution. The principle is called paredo principle. As for black people. Hmm, yes there might be some effect of racism. However, since there are no laws anymore that prefer white people over black people, i am not confident that's the only reason. Black people tend to come from a lower socioeconomic background, which, in western cultures of these times is associated with worse education, and a lack of belief in government. Therefore bam: perfect reason why black people, who are on average worse off than white people would appear to be more criminal than others. Mind you: white people of low SES should be just as criminal, as would latinos or asians. However, since asians and whites normally have a good SES, they tend to be less criminal.And that's without accusing youth culture of antieducation or gangsta culture. These might become relevant if my factors aren't enough. Mind you: i am from Essen in germany. The only thing that predicts crime and sucess is the area you live in. However your heritage or skincolor predicts where you are more likely to live, since especially immigrants like cheaper quarters. And in a bad area, only few people can thrive,no matter the color of their skin.	Black, Racism, Woman	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	6/315	1.905
School , workplaces, and everything else are systematically segregated to keep black people from having power. Systematically means planned. You won't have to look very hard to see it everywhere in our society.	Black, Racism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	2/50	4.0

Kacee Adams No, systemically means directly and enforced by the system. Look at the apartheid in southern Africa. That's systemic racism . However i concur that ghettoisation is an issue. If you were to distribute black people to more wealthy living areas and thus schools, i would argue the problem would solve itself. Btw: this is not unique to the black community, this is a pattern that happens, not only with black people but with groups in general: they migrate to cheap(bad) neighborhoods, often others like said group come after. All of these are influenced by the bad environment and mutually reinforce it. Thus a ghetto is created. Now the good thing is, the people seem to be doing just fine if they live somewhere outside of said ghetto. However living in a ghetto seems to be detrimental, no matter the color of your skin. Kacee Adams I am actually not particularly thinking of black people, perhaps because i am not from the US. I'm thinking of people living in bad areas in general. It's crazy just how much the area where you come from influences your school career and through that virtually everything else. And yes: other people from these areas have similar problems getting out. It's not just the black people, it's everyone. I wonder whether black people have special troubles finding jobs... i mean, even more so than other folks, who have to write like 30 applications only to be turned down on all of them. Kacee Adams if what you say is true, then it's the black people themselves that perpetuate the system by continuing to vote Democrat where the gettos exist.Think LBJ. Do you yourself now have a job that you are overqualified for? If so, know that black people are not the only people struggling like your post makes it sound.Times are tough, lots of people can't find good paying jobs or a job at all. Clinton, Bush and Obama took a wrecking ball to the economy it's going to take awhile for that to be undone if ever. IMO, we are ever so slightly moving in a better direction now. The numbers agree.Are you willing to discuss other statistical factors that present obstacles to black people? Single mothers (absent fathers) is a huge issue that is getting worse.Whites or anyone else, don't have secret meetings to suppress other people, there is no secret handshake, no unwritten rule or agreement. Do people do and say things they shouldn't? Yes. Is it systemic, as in system-wide? No. We can all give personal accounts that prove or disprove any few we may hold but statistically... Sven Brede racism is everywhere. I can agree that any race in The ghetto has trouble getting out but it would not be because of race it could be because they can't hold down a job. It can be especially hard for black people to get a job, work places usually have to specially hire a few people of color to avoid a law suit because so little people of color work there. If you want to talk about "systemic" racism then we have to look at both sides. The reason schools are "segregated" is because many areas have more blacks than whites and because most black people like to go to schools with other black people. Same can be said for white people. Thats just a basic aspect of humanity is that people like to be around other people that are like them. Also the reason many blacks are incarcerated is because they committed a crime. They aren't incarcerated for no reason its their fault. Maybe its because of the way the black culture has changed through the years. How you are raised has a lot to do with culture. If this guy can't see that its also many blacks fault as well he isn't even worth arguing with.	Black, Racism	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	4/137	2.92

And as shown in the video, post cards of disturbing lynchings were actually sent to people. All in all, history of slavery is indifferent to many people in the United States cause they don't even consider it as their own history. Being anti Multiculturalism is not being racist . Unless you want to equate a culture to a persons skin color. If that is the case then Racism would actually make sense as the Black culture is very different from white or Asian cultures ! Either way. multiculturalism as a social experiment has been shown and admitted to being a complete and utter failure in every case where it has been attempted on a grand scale such as Europe and The US. Acceptance of every other culture into mixed societies has failed at every level and as such, forced integration has been proven to not work. And the most incredible thing is that the failure has not come from the side of acceptance , but rather it has been strictly a failure on the part of the immigrant culture. A failure to adapt to their new surroundings. A failure to learn the native language. A failure to adapt to their politics, religions, music, clothing etc... It has led to simply creating more of a segregated society than existed before attempting to force Multiculturalism down everybody's throat. The fact is that there are huge differences between cultures and trying to force their integration has only led to further issues which too many of the supporters of multiculturalism's have now labeled as Racism . Idan Zamir, the problem with comment is that you think racism only includes slavery and that is it, well i am here to tell you racism is not only about slavery, it is about the institutions that helped racism take a hold in the US. Racism deals with years after reconstruction where laws were written to determine where a African American could live, what schools that African American will attend, how much funding and what will be taught in those schools. It deals with such laws as vagrancy, where a African American could be locked up on the suspicion he did not have a job. It deals with the establishment of Jim Crow laws, again governing where a African American could live, redlining, criminal justice. Less you forget (since you did say in your later comments), we are only maybe 48 years from the passage of the civil rights bill, and even then it was not fully implemented until maybe the mid 80s. So yeah, a lot of people's grandparents are alive and still benefited from racism. My mom is 68 years old, she was a teenager during the Civil Rights era and its turmoil, the US has a president whose farther actively participated in racism. So don't you dare say no one was alive when all this was going on. S E Except that's not the case anymore, because education is free for everyone, so no matter how poor you are you can get the education you need to rise out of poverty if you put in the work, it isn't just luck that allows people to obtain wealth. There are countless scholarships in the United States made available exclusively to racial minorities and first-generation college students, so there are also plenty of opportunities for poor students to obtain a college education if they put in the work. In fact, I would argue that it is easier for a poor black to get a college education than a poor white because of all the additional scholarships and other financial resources as well as affirmative action programs that are afforded to them solely on the basis of their race , which is the textbook definition of racism , but apparently it isn't considered racist if the discriminatory advantage is given to people who aren't white. S EMany issues in the US had little to do with race , and all to do with wealth. Even when "African-Americans" were trying to get equal treatment back in the day, they also fought for poor White Americans to be treated better too. In fact, some "Whites" were seen as inferior, and stupid, to other "Whites". This alone shows why it's entirely stupid to judge purely based on whether someone is "White" or not when a "White" person from X country saw a "White" from Z country as utterly inferior and not worth living.Also, may I ask why do Asians, a minority group that was historically treated poorly in the US and initially all worked jobs no one wanted, is currently dominating even White Americans for average income? Why did they go from working jobs no one wants, to being doctors , dentists, programmers, etc? They were not given the head starts, the financial assistance, or the free jobs/education while being under qualified like "African-Americans" were, but yet, they succeed. Why is that?Here's why. Asians have a completely different culture and mindset than every other group in the world. They have very high expectations from their peers and family, and on an individual level, they actually want to be independent and succeed. They are also very likely to mix with other "races" when it comes to friendships or relationships compared to "African-Americans".Just take one look at the "African-American" culture, look at how successful "African-Americans" are bullied simply for pointing out the issue is a cultural one. The white robes have power because they are a symbol of pervasive, secret racism (whether that actually exists to any great extent or not). I don't doubt that there is still a lot of racism in the country. But it's time to move on and leave these people behind. I understand sometimes things need to be talked about. Thank you, for giving constructive criticism! I agree it's kinda weird . The problem with just letting things die is that sometimes they don't. IMO, it is far more effective to make the KKK a joke (which it is) and I think that's what he's trying to do with the robes (purposefully taking their stuff and making it ridiculous). If somebody says "I found this awesome thing and you should totally participate, it's called KKK" once the KKK is forgotten then there is a risk of it erupting again. The reason problems still exist today is... 1. It was the Democratic party created and supported slavery in America, Segregation, and the KKK. That's why they continue to push identity politics and modern segregation today, and even antifreedom of speech at colleges and more. 2. People also forget Africans, Natives, and so on also had slaves from their own race and others. They wanted people to forget that, so it makes it seem like whites were the only ones who did and were all powerful, when it's not true. Seriously look up Natives owning African Slaves, and Kidnapping European children. Look up African -American slave owners like Anthony Johnson and so on. 3. How do you stop it? Realize the complexity of human history, remember how every race is connected and it's only skin, and fight for people to be recognized for their character and not heritage or skin color. Apparently, the TED community is full of hateful people. Also, the share of racist hateful people is exaggerated by bots and people having alt-accounts to upvote and answer to their own comments. I'm almost sure this "Big Willie" guy is one of those. His comments get lots of upvotes suspiciously fast and the first few answers are always very similar and only a few minutes apart. That's tricking the YouTube algorithm basics. His views also seem to always align with the opposite of what the speaker says. (I also noticed the same accounts replying to each other over and over again on every video.)I don't want to put it all on trolls and some criticism is very correct about TED, although IMO they have become better again but still, the proportion of hateful comments and dislikes is suspicious. There are probably also a lot of people that truly believe in what they write but in my experience, many simply jump on the bandwagon and if you ask them a concrete question, they can't answer. TED is an easy target nowadays but going back to science only is also no solution. The fact that this hate-machinery exists is the reason TED can't stop making these videos, we need the discourse even if it is disrupted regularly, without it there will be no progress. Another trend is the awful reductionism that seems to spread. Whenever anyone makes a point, people on the internet assume that this is everything that this person is and that the person claims that their problem is the only one worth working on. But that's not true (most of the time). Life is complex, there is a seemingly infinite multitude of problems and just because somebody says that one problem is worth working on, doesn't mean they claim that all other problems are not. It is the same as the SpaceX argument: "Why do you waste all that money and work on space exploration when there are so much more pressing issues on earth." I think the response was something like this: "There are so many companies focusing on earth-problems, what's wrong when one company works on space-problems?" And that is exactly the point. Multiple things can be important at the same time and have to be worked on at the same time. Reductionism makes me sick. Just look at this argument a few comments up: "The Democrats founded the KKK" (which had nothing to do with the actual argument of the comment, which was that people mostly segregate themselves)- "Yes but since then there has been a major shift in the parties politics" "There has been no party shift because Hillary Clinton called somebody her "friend and mentor" that was a KKK member." Am I insane or is this not even an argument? People denying complexity are horrible to discuss with... He was the segregationist that cheered 'segregation now, segregation tommorow, segregation forever.'He did this all under the banner of 'States Rights'.Keep that in mind.Keep in mind that LBJ signed the civil rights act in 1964. Sure, LBJ had some old timey racism , but it was a good thing he signed this law.Wallace hated the civil rights act. He first ran for President in 1964 but lost the democratic primary but got an electoral vote if I recall correctly.In 1968 he ran as an independent and won 5 southern states.He ran again in 1972 and 1976, losing.Richard Nixon, president from 1969 to 1974, saw an oppourtinity. He saw the old 'Dixiecrats' were breaking away from the Democrats because of civil rights.He could harness white anger and get those Southern votes in what he called 'the southern strategy.' He harnessed racial animosity through coded language about drugs and 'law and order.' (We know this to be fact due to later interviews and the white house tapes.)When Ronald Reagan won the Republican nomination in 1980, it was the first time there was a presidential race without George Wallace since the civil rights act.Reagan had to secure those southern votes. What was the first place he went to campaign as the nominee?To a fair near Philadelphia Mississippi.This place was famous because 3 civil rights advocates, Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner were murdered in this county in 1964. The locals did a sham investigation because the whole community was in on it.It took the FBI to come in amd bring justice.What was the first thing future president Ronald Reagan said, as the new nominee, in the county known for murdering civil rights advocates and covering it up?"I Believe in States Rights!"Sounds a lot like Wallace, doesnt it?Thats when all the old unrepentant Dixiexrats like Strom Thurmond, Jessie Helms, David Duke, ect ect switched parties.Thats why the Charlottesville 'unite the RIGHT' rally had both Nazis and KKK.Im not saying all Republicans are KKK, not at all. But the Republican Party deliberately courted the devil as the Democrats conducted an exorcism; now Republicans are dealing with the consequences. 20707523 Stand Your Ground laws are proven to disproportionatly discriminate against black people.Something like 15 of cases where a white shoots a black in a SYG state the white recieved indemnity. When a black shoots a white, the amount of times they recieve indemnity is statistically insignificant. (Stats are from a few years ago)This pattern fits historical racism in the United States, as the 2nd Amendment was always designed to allow whites to police white space. To oppress restive natives and uppity slaves.Just 2 centuries ago the Mississippi river was lined with severed black slave heads. Just last century a black men could be tortured to death by grievous matulation culminating in slowly burning to death feet first. Whites would not be punished.Today, white men are encouraged to shoot black men with indemnity thanks to SYG....Also, voter supression laws. Just google 'Republican admits voter supression racist' and you will get tons of hits from multiple states....And if we want to expand this, Arizona recently had their 'show me your paper laws,' which meant that hispanics would be pulled over more and the cops would demand their citizenship or immigration paperwork. Let me ask you, do you keep your SSN or birth certificate on you at all times? If youre hispanic and in Arizona, the answer better be yes or else....And lastly, it is legal to fire or evict someone simply for being LGBTQ in more than half of the US states. This is a clear example of systemic racism .I wanted to mention this law because of one of its authors, Chris Kobach, who is a known white nationalist who has used his position to design laws to further his white nationalist vision across the country. Kobach is the Sec of State from Kansas, briefly worked with the White House on a pet project, and is the current Republican Nominee for Gov. in Kansas.	Racism	Ethnicity - General	1/112	0.893
By God, do you know how to differentiate between a study of 204 cases and a discriminatory law? Do you understand or you do not understand what is systematic? Do you understand the difference between a racist police shooting a black man with a hood and a discriminatory law? It is obvious that no. You confuse that there are racist people with whom the system is racist , if there are judges applying the law partially it still does not show that there is systematic racism . Anyway, that law only shows how little a life is valued in the United States, a country where more people die because of gun attacks than in Afghanistan, a country at war. He speaks of 'dismantling the ugly legacy of slavery'. How exactly are we supposed to do that, with people like him who fosters, propagates and even RECREATES the worst phase of racial evolution this country? He wants to make sure nobody moves on and everyone knows more about it, than they ever would have, otherwise. That gives them new fuel to be bitter and angry and continue dividing us into more and more segmented groups, rather than just being AMERICANS! Gogeta... no, I did not say any of that. What I am saying is that too many people are focusing on the worst part of our history and trying to further divid is with that. I am saying the truth, that slavery in the America's started 200 years before there was ever a US. I am telling you the little known fact that 70 of the founders wanted to end slavery BEFORE they even signed the Declaration of Independence, and argued more over THAT, than any other thing. In the end, they realized that the colonies who wanted to keep it, were never going to change their minds. Realizing that, they decided to first gain independence from the throne of England, then abolish slaver later. We are the only nation on Earth to have fought a war WITH ITSELF, to end slavery. That is a historical fact and all I'm saying, is let's stop focusing on the mere fact that there WAS slavery (we already know that) and at give credit where credit is due... the US brought an end to an institution that it DID NOT itself, create. Dack a white person is safer in the Middle East than they are in black South Africa.Any black person who thought they had any rights to land in South Africa was either offered the land back or money, many farms are derelict now some took the money and brought cars, the average IQ of a black person in South Africa is in the 70's, working the land is hard work, you work all day and it requires a lot of knowledge, Russia is now offering to give 30,000 white South African farmers land to farm, each farm feeds up to 2 million people each year in South Africa, soon the blacks will go hungry and riot, serves them right, stupid people.Edit: Also the farms require complex irrigation which the white farmers brought to the land so it was possible to grow food, many of the farms were never taken from anyone. Really weird all these racists are commenting all facts. Must be all fake news they are watching. I only get my news from reputable sources like CNN and MSNBC.	Weird	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/29	3.448
In Richmond VA, I live within view of the former site of a slave prison*, a potters field for dead slaves, and the bridge they hung uppity slaves and restive natives from. I live in the neighborhood that was once one of the largest slave markets in America.I also live within view of where Abraham Lincoln with his son Tad entered the city just after its surrender, 2 weeks before his death.Some like to say the Union Army didnt liberate Richmond but conquered it. They forget that half of the city, almost all black , came out to cheer for Lincoln.Some people like to argue that slavery wasnt that bad, better than being free factory labor up north even.I invite them to come take the slave tour in Richmond. (*you think slavery is bad? You think prison is bad? Imagine combining them...lets just say you arent there to rehabilitate.)	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/152	0.658
Better than staying in Africa. Never forget that the Atlantic slave trade could of never been if African conquers hadn't provided the African slaves. Maybe their should be a museum for that eh?	African	Ethnicity - Black	2/33	6.061
They are all dense shadow racists that feel safe behind their keyboard. Just like dude said, racism acts in secrecy. Let them troll someone else homie.	Racism	Ethnicity - General	1/26	3.846
Morty Sanchez so are you gonna blame an entire race for the actions of a few? Cause if so the Egyptians kangz had slaves....white ones too.	Race	Ethnicity - General	1/26	3.846

BAnonymous The argument that Africans had slaves or other Africans sold slaves so therefor its OK that the west engaged in slavery is blaming a whole race . And I never blamed a whole race .The US government was wrong to allow slavery.The British government before that was wrong to allow slavery.Every person, regardless of race , that resisted slavery did the right thing.So let me ask you, what is the point of your argument? What is your end game here? What are you trying to change?	Race	Ethnicity - General	3/88	3.409
EWKification What a childish, babyish, ignorant, misguided argument. You contribute nothing to the conversation.Slavery is bad regardless of who does it.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/22	4.545

Ela Elaine Actually their policies remain because people blindly buy into them and the party that created them. 1. It was the Democratic party created and supported slavery in America, Segregation, and the KKK. That's why they continue to push identity politics and modern segregation today, and even antifreedom of speech at colleges and more. 2. People also forget Africans, Natives, and so on also had slaves from their own race and others. They wanted people to forget that, so it makes it seem like whites were the only ones who did and were all powerful, when it's not true. Seriously look up Natives owning African Slaves, and Kidnapping European children. Look up African -American slave owners like Anthony Johnson and so on. 3. How do you stop it? Realize the complexity of human history, remember how every race is connected and it's only skin, and fight for people to be recognized for their character and not heritage or skin color. VeeTeeF I don't like lies. There is no systemic racism against minorities.	Racism	Ethnicity - General	1/12	8.333
But the problem is that with human nature, we are all, both good and bad. MLK has monuments to the good things he did without focussing on the bad (womanizer and communist). That's fine. Some only want to focus on the bad aspects of what happened long ago before any of us were born. That's fine too but not all slaves were black , so a small acknowledgement of that fact would have been nice to see.
