Stupid little posh bitch.There is no HARD/SOFT Brexit , there is just Brexit .All the debates talked about the Single Market - it was clear we were leaving both the Single Market & the Customs Union.How can you be a proper country if you don't control your borders?That's why most folk voted Leave, not because they are racists, but because they object (quite rightly), to the prospect of UNCONTROLLED immigration.THAT'S NOT RASCISM, IT JUST FUCKING LOGICAL.Fuck the left, fuck the SJW's & fuck you too! Most people aged 18-25 didn't even bother to vote in the Brexit referendum. This whole thing of young generations being proEU is just more fake news and a narrative created by some media outlets in order to further their own choices. If it had been the other way round and young people had voted for Brexit , they would be saying that it is just the decision of naive and deluded people. Thank God the British people was wise enough to see through all that crap. Greetings from Portugal and thank you for your choice. Love Europe, fuck the EU. Exactly The Bankers rule over us by division, young vs old , black vs white, heterosexual vs homosexual , female vs male, They effectively and ludicrously want us to believe young black homosexual females are on one side and old white heterosexual males are on the other and get us to fight each other on those terms while they rob us all blind of our property and our liberty. They use the media to push this stereotyping nonsense when nothing could be further from the truth. Greetings from the UK Love Europe, fuck the EU ! you cannot argue with the fact that young people do not usually have money in the bank, the project of raising kids done or almost done and a house paid off. Or that older people do not usually want to study abroad, travel the world and may have a lifestyle where you can afford a few years of crisis. the old peoples good old days of rotary phones, navy blue passports and endless war stories are not the good old days of the young. their good old days will be the years before brexit	Brexit, Old	Age - Over 65s, Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	5/94	5.319

I'm 27, I voted to leave the EU as I didn't want this country to turn into a vassal and over my dead body this country will turn into a Socialist shithole like Venezuela, stupidity is not exclusive to certain age groups otherwise Jeremy Corbyn and Bernie Sanderrs wouldn't be Socialists. By the way, I have no problem placing the blame of students believing the shit they do squarely on public education, it is largely thanks to Marxist professors that so many of them are blatantly anti-capitalist. I find it quite amazing that some young people can slag of the older generation as if they are incapable of rational thought. The young of the past were far more intelligent and resourceful than these Millennials. What have they done to earn their part in British society? At the age of 25 Guy Gibson led the raid on the dams in Germany during the Second World War. The oldest member of this crew was 29! They, and many many other young people fought and died to maintain the the independence and sovereignty of this country and it's people. And the youth of today think they, the past generation are worthless, that they 'haven't done much'! For Gods' sake what have you done to our education system Tony Blair! Unless you are a young historian, The only possible way you could have personal experience of seeing the trajectory of the EU dictatorship, since its inception, is to have lived through it. We older people saw what it started off as, a benign common trading market. But since 1992 it has become more and more dictatorial, issuing diktats from on high to nation states very often not what we would want. It's not democracy, we're not allowed to control our borders and we have to pay over a fortune for no good reason. But a young person will have been brainwashed by the educational establishment that the EU is something good that we should stay in. I recommend young people should watch Brexit the Movie for a better understanding. Once you've seen that you'll see why people voted to leave. It's basically turned into something that's no longer good for this country - that is, if it ever was. To the entitled little Snowflake who will have achieved the square root of fuck all in her short life all I will say is this:As a 70 year old it is people like me who YOU wish to ignore and disenfranchise, simply because we hold a different point of view, that built this country over (in my case) 52 years of hard graft. You demonstrate your ignorance and your weakness by thinking its perfectly OK to be intolerant of others and, when challenged, make a personal attack like 'you haven't done anything'. How do you know WHAT that man has or has not achieved. Whatever it is it is clearly far more than you have.YOU now wish to hand away what me and people like me built to an unelected bureaucracy. I will not stand by and do nothing. As I didn't when I served my country for 15 years and went to war. You are a perfect example of why the young need protecting from themselves sometimes. Because as this man courageously pointed out: We have the life experience and you do not.I voted for Ted Heath in '72 and voted Remain in '75 when it was the EEC and just about Trade with 8 other similar countries. FoM was no issue as it was about 30,000 a year. I worked in Germany and knew Germans who worked here. No problem. Where it has gone wrong is the Socialists created the 'EU' and a political project to become a United States of Europe, our Governments were conned or (in Labour's case) connived with it and we were never asked to join the EU. It was foisted on an objecting population. And then in 2004 Labour failed the country completely by opening the floodgates in uncontrolled mass migration from an EU of now 27 other countries, 12 of whom were utterly poor ex communist countries, 7 years earlier than anyone else to simply 'rub the Right's nose in diversity'! Bastards! And then invented 'Tax Credits' so that large companies could employ these thousands of migrants on low wages to increase profits! And we, our schools, our NHS and our housing have suffered the consequences ever since.Young lady. When you have earned a few T Shirts, been around a few blocks and maybe got your soft hands dirty with hard graft then get back to us. I don't disagree with a potential disaster. It's what the global elite want. Their maxim is order out of chaos. UN AGENDA 21 and 2030. They are creating the chaos and will then come in with an iron fisted dictatorship. The 'young' girl who criticises 'old' people for their reason or even right to vote leave, doesn't have the slightest idea what she is talking about. I am much older than she. I am also much more worldly and much more informed and better educated than she is. I can also fathom out for myself that denying someone the right to a vote because a; they are not informed enough (although judging by her standards, I cannot imagine what level she would set this at), or b; they do not have enough time to live. This is one of the most singularly vile and disgusting concepts that I have heard. Maybe she really does want to live in a totalitarian state. If people were to be disenfranchised, one of the first criteria for realignment would be the age of the voter. 18 is way too young; however, we have to start somewhere. It is interesting that the areas where a strong majority of the electorate vote Labour is amongst; those in full time education (students and full time further education drones) and the permanently unemployed. Both categories should have the right to vote removed from them.	Age	Age - General	1/195	0.513

The millenials think that the older generations have all maliciously and deliberately added debt to the national economy that they have to pay for. The baby boomers did benefit at a time in the past in a manner people today can not, and it is true that in many ways this has disenfranchised certain aspects of the youth population, but the unexperienced, mal-educated (indoctrinated) uni kids of today have gone one step further and assumed that the generations before them have political apathy and aren't worth listening to, nor are they deserved of their lawful right of a political voice.This is a shame, because experience defeats "education" everyday. There used to be a time where the majority of your teachers had previous work experience in their field, so you were at least getting second-hand experiences. Today, most teachers are "career" teachers; just as bad as politicians and touting their own brand of ideological waffle.This scenario also has the added consequence that the millenials typically express bigotry towards anybody with more life experience: easily identifiable in a person on account of age ie. you can tell by looking at them they've been around longer, therefore the chances are he/she has more relative experiences than you. This dismissal is inherently unnatural of human beings; in most cultures the older and wiser, the more revered you are.Interestingly, and paradoxically, it is this way of indoctrinating students to whine on in lack of experience that has caused the teacher to lose control in the classroom in 21st century UK. They do not respect their elders as a default position.	Age	Age - General	1/268	0.373

I would dearly love to know where this lame argument/propaganda used by the likes of Ross Stratford-Cavendish comes from? Certainly not from polling stations as no exit poll was carried out... Certainly not from the great predictors of voting who predicted a landslide remain vote.... So it must be from the remain side itself who's only form of attack seems to be a poor effort to shame voters into changing their minds...Sorry but you cannot shame people who hold no shame, but who voted with a clear conscience against the UK's membership of a corrupt , non democratic organisation. Even if the EU was democratic, many would have still voted to leave, can the remain side not see that as the EU gains more centralised decision making , each countries citizens influence becomes more diluted... Eventually the role of a member states government will have no more power at decision making than your local/parish council....But that aside I personally voted to leave to empower the UK, to enable the economy to grow , to enable the UK begin positive trading within expanding economies, to enable the UK to become the nation that set the standards in safety, build quality, building codes etc.. I realised that outside of the EU we are better able to react quickly to global changes rather than reaching half baked compromises due to the vestige interests of 27 other nations, a compromise that is only reached after endless months of inaction and pontificating. The economy was in trouble due to militant socialist workers who crippled major industries through strike action. It had nothing at all to do with "losing the Commonwealth" - that is still there and going strong. What changed was that we abandoned preferential treatment for Commonwealth products in favour of European ones. So we didn't join the EEC to recover from a deficit left by the Commonwealth, quite the opposite. Your points about the effects of strike action are valid, but we were already in the EEC by then. The EEC/EU has done nothing for British Industry, We have traded at a deficit, which gets worse every year, with the EEC/EU nations since we joined. We are currently running a £120 billion deficit with the EU nations - that is manufacturing activity that could be sourced at home but is sourced on the continent instead.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/145	1.379
+stoufer2000 The reason why Britain was in a bad way was because of the all powerful closed shop unions. The unions brought down three governments. That was until Margerat Thatcher came along. Over on the continent Germany re industrialised with an American bailout. They did it very quickly, within 5 years after the war while Britain was still on rationing and austerity because of Ww2 debts. We had to go to the commonwealth because of labour shortages. ironcally it was the unions who objected to the immigrants. They marched on parliament citing their jobs were at risk. It was the conservative government ironically who brought the first postwar caribbean immigrants to man the public sector jobs. France banned coloured immigration right up until the 1970s until there was labour shortages also. My how times have changed.	coloured	Ethnicity - Black	1/136	0.735

We were on a hiding to nothing following the war. early 50's great, Clement Attlee really kicked things off well with a bit of Keynesian investment. UK industry had had a kick in the teeth trying to compete with the Marshall plan funded Germany and Japan tho as they rebuilt. We had the engineering skill and could have developed it but we were living in cloud cuckoo land if we thought we could still keep exporting pre rusted badly designed and built shit to the old empire when they could get a cheap, reliable and by now better Honda or Datsun or VW to do the job. Plenty of Tory gov's post Attlee had the chance to both sort out the unions a little, and try and capitalise on our skill by investing properly in industry, but they didn't. By the time of the Wilson and Heath gov's, it was already too late, and the union stranglehold was an extreme reaction to the predicament we were in. (erm just like we are seeing now, but to the populist right). Political extremes not usually good either way...When we did join the EEC and favoured european products, look what happened.. 5th largest economy! Ob a lot of this of this wasn't to do with the EU and was mostly your mates the Tories selling off everything that wasn't bolted down for a quick shekel, dubious city dealing and pushing consumer credit like it was going out of fashion.. Having said that, the EU has also been responsible for some of this turnaround. Hi tech European Companies that offer real skilled employment, an easy trading environment with mostly like minded partners, what's not to like? Thatcher turned us into a nation of capitalist shop keepers when in reality our most successful achievement, and what should have been fostered IMO, rather than sold on the stock exchange to the highest bidder, was our great engineering and development heritage.	Nation, Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Nationality - General	3/324	0.926

stoufer2000 Well no, the EEC was totally different to the EU and what the EU eventually morphed into- even though the EU's plans were always based on subterfuge.Jean Monett, the forefather of the European Union- his exact words: "The nations of Europe must be guided towards the superstate without their people understanding what is happening. This can be achieved by successive steps, each disguised as having an economic purpose, but will eventually and irreversibly lead to federation."I'm no fan of the Tories OR Labour, but how is unlimited immigration going to give us more housing? How is unlimited immigration ever going to improve the lives of the least well off in society? You don't need to read economics for dummies to realise that a surplus of workers combined with a dearth of jobs will ALWAYS keep wages down. The Black Death of the fourteenth century freed the serfs and increased wages- the opposite will obviously DO the opposite.The EU is not some benevolent organisation- it's ran by, and for the benefit of multinational businesses. It's an out of control propaganda machine, instilling in school children throughout Europe, some phoney Utopian vision- relying on the naive beliefs of a youth who never get to hear the other side of the argument. If the media had better converge of the leave side from both the left and the right, leave would have an even higher turnout for leave , this was done to fuel the media's pro eu agendaYou have to remember it was the left that wanted brexit in 1975 and I hate how the media has spun this into a totally right wing issue	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti- Europeans	1/138	0.725

Your last remark is idiotic. The Tory party has ripped up its manifesto in less than 30 days and you are attempting to argue a Labour party's position held 40 years ago (which, by the way, was a deeply divided decision then as it is with the current day parties). The fact is, the Tory party has been divided over this issue since 1992 and the Maastricht Treaty and Cameron used the Ref as a way of managing the party and miscalculated the snakes (Rees-Mogg, Cash, Duncan-Smith, Redwood) who are a bunch of egomaniacs and right-wing ideologists who have betrayed their country by putting their selves before the nation . Always nice to see a Scythian not wanting old Albany to become an EU vassal state.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/16	6.25
MacsenWledig. Nicely put, old thing.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/5	20.0
the shadow knows take if your a pro brexit leftist	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	1/10	10.0
Lee Thomson it is often said 'with age comes wisdom'	Age	Age - General	1/10	10.0

Lee Thomson Scottish here as well, pal. I'm 18 and most folk my age would have voted brexit in my area believe it or not(Dumfriesshire)	Age, Brexit	Age - General, Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	2/25	8.0
Lee Thomson completely agree I'm 18 also, and hated this rhetoric spouted by people my age , disgusting.	Age	Age - General	1/17	5.882
Speaking as someone who is a 23 year old , I can only assume this comes from the indoctrination of the left who to be fair to them are bloody good at attracting young people into voting for them and believing in this multicultural, diverse and mass immigration dream they have. The amount of people from our age group that believe everything the left tells them makes me sick and it is one of the reasons I can't stand the left anymore.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/81	2.469
Why did you vote Brexit ?	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	1/5	20.0
Coombsyboy good answer do you think we will get a brexit or do you believe the government will stuff us whilst telling us they have achieved brexit if so do you think we could do something about it?	Brexit	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	2/38	5.263
Ageism is the result of the elite employing young and inexperienced workers so that their errors and fraud will be less likely to be challenged by someone who knows what's going on. Also the youngsters are cheaper!	Ageism	Age - General	1/37	2.703
Michael Glynn The point is being missed..all we hear is the pessimistic remoaners about being left with disaster..they will all remain silenced when Brexit starts to kick in and gives them a better living. Hail to the 17.4 million British patriots.	Brexit, Remoaners	Nationality - European or anti-Europeans	2/41	4.878 stoufer2000 I will hold you to hat...i mean that! lol Do try and be more optimistic as historically we are a nation of traders..or shop keepers! There's too many reasons to list why the EU is bad for Britain and why we need to grow our economy..remaining in the single market won't allow us to better ourselves. The main issue was immigration and now the EU is acting not only because of Brexit but because Italy is in crisis and other countries are rebelling.
