JoeRieper For most of history people had a short lifespan, therefore they got married in their early to mid teens and if they were lucky, they would get to see their children become adults. In the US in 1900 the average expected lifespan was 40 years. So by 18 to 20 they got married and starting having kids. They had no choice back then, no one wants to have a kid and then orphan them at age 10. Now though that age has gone up to about 78-80, so now we have a choice.	Age	Age - General	2/94	2.128
David Marquardt I don't care about reasons at all why now people can have old parents, or about history, if the whole talk is based on this moment. I have old parents (both are born in early 1960s) and I hate that there's almost nothing we can do together. Also I don't want to lose my parents soon and with younger parents it has lower risk.	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	3/66	4.545

JoeRieper My parents were 37 when I was born, now in 1960 most families were done having kids by around 27, so back then that was considered old. I learned all about The Great Depression which they had grown up in, they were VERY frugal and self sufficient, which kept them from starving to death back then. We had an old house and one old car. They had a grim outlook on life because of what they endured growing up. If I had had younger parents they would have missed that dark period and had a brighter outlook on life. But then again maybe not. I don't blame my parents, they did the best they could.	Old	Age - Over 65s	3/116	2.586
These days, 25-35 is not considered old to have kids and that's the age range I think is ideal.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/19	10.526

I'm 44, with a 5 year old son. My wife and I have been married 23 years. Having a child late was not a choice, but years of trying.If we had him earlier, our lives would have been too chaotic for a child. But now I'm an Android developer with a 6 figure income, and my wife stays at home selling handmade soaps online. We have stability and time to spend with him. I wouldn't change a thing, even if I don't have as much energy as I did in my 20's.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/93	1.075
Sorry, old and young, parents get selfish and refuse to spend money on their kids. Age doesn't matter, not being a selfish asshole matters more.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	2/25	8.0
Ethiopian Sunz TV . I skimmed through it but reread it after you commented about it. Yet that still doesnt disregard the point that even if you do not go under their same error (as you were pointing out) you are still left with having to put up with defishant old age and error that come along by having old parents instead of young ones.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/65	4.615

A) Reason: It was how I grew up. My parents were 25 and 26 when I was born. I think the age of your parents makes a difference to how early you have children yourself. They're your main example of how parents are.	Age	Age - General	1/43	2.326

Younger. How useful can an 80 year old grandparent be? 1:30 while the woman's age is a factor, the man's age is as well. Specifically, the risk of having a child with achondroplasia—a type of dwarfism—spikes from 1 in 15,000 to 1 in 1,923 once men reach age 50. And the risk of schizophrenia more than quadrupled, from 1 in 100 within the general population to 1 in 22 with fathers over 50.What's more, autism rates rise from 1 in 1,000 to 1 in 174 for kids whose dads had them after age 40.Unfortunately, cancer rates among offspring also seem to rise too as their dads grow older, possibly because of some of the same DNA mutations that contribute to other conditions. For example, a woman's lifetime risk of breast cancer typically stands at 1 in 8, but rises to 1 in 5.3 if her dad was 40 or older when she was born, according to the same Baylor review.And childhood leukemia strikes 1 in 36,000 kids in the general population, but 1 in 21,302 of those with fathers age 40-plus. A)My parents were part of the B group and now they can't retire because all their money has gone towards raising me (I'm 20 now) and so I now get the pleasure of worrying about their health and jobs (because my dad is almost 65 and has issues with memory and articulating his thoughts, and that's not attractive to employers). My parents have no retirement fund even though my dad is of retiring age and my mom is approaching that age and they are developing issues that makes them working more difficult as well as my dad becoming an unsafe driver as he gets older.So although earlier in life it may be nice to have older parents, you get to start worrying about your parents and the issues associated with old people at an earlier point in life as well (I'm 20 and still in college and my dad can't work well enough to support himself, let alone try to support me).I also have no siblings because my parents didn't start trying to have children until my mom was over 35 (she had many miscarriages so it wasn't from a lack of trying). My parents weren't able to play soccer with me when I was 5 and I had no siblings or anyone else to play with.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/220	1.364

I have older parents and I love them so much. I am 12 and my parents are 61 and 50. They wanted kids so badly I have one younger sister. Yes sometimes I wish I wouldn't have to worry about them dying. We are a middle class family and we were pretty well earning until my dad recently lost his job. He is having trouble getting a job because he is close to retiring age . I have ADHD, OCD and Anxiety so I do have some behaviour problems. The ability to care love and take on the responsibility of being a parent is all that matters. My sister became a mother at the age of 17 she's a wonderful woman three children great mother. I became a father when I was 27 with my first got divorced had another child when I was 34 got a divorce. Now I'm now happily married after 4 years so far I'm a older man in my 60s ex Vietnam vet I have 4 grandkids and a lovely family and live.	Age, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	2/89	2.247
In this day and age 'just love' is simply too vague and impractical.Can you actually afford to have a child, financially? Id say having a kid after you reach 30 and atleast have some decent nest egg and financial cushion, you might be able to pull it off.Teen pregnancy or having a kid in your early 20s is a absolute no, in my opinion.You'll never be rich enough to afford retirement if that ever happens.	Age	Age - General	1/78	1.282

My mom had me when she was at her mid 30's. No, it wasn't a happy ending as the kid was living well off. I was the last child of her, out of three older sibilings. Growing up with older people well, it shaped me but for the better. I was not spoiled rotten, in fact i would always ask or work for something i want. We had our struggles as our dad has left but now in a spot i can cope with life and a decent living. I also do believe when you have been birthed by an older woman some chemicals are imbalanced and can be defective, but i guess we have to use this as an advantage.	Woman	Gender - General	1/121	0.826

I say as long as parents can provide for their children and do things with their children (take to zoos, museums, etc...just spending time with them in some way, even if it is just a family game or movie night) and love them, that is what is important and age doesn't matter as much. Many young parents are new parents and inexperienced so it is a learning process and not all older parents are less active (many can still play sports and not a lot of young parents even do that). Depends how well they cared for themselves in life, etc....each situation is going to vary for many different reasons.	Age	Age - General	1/110	0.909

I think it's not the age we should be questioning.. by the way the whole age thing for women is a myth (it's only true if you believe it.. Adam ruins everything also has this explained in one of his episodes) Being a capable parent requires a certain emotional/psychological/spiritual maturity.. which unfortunately a lot of parents do not have (irrelevant of age .. self growth happens in different paces to different people). Also, you can be 'elderly' and energetic & active.. this all depends on the lifestyle we pick for ourselves. There are always going to be circumstantial imperfections.. but at the end of the day it's not just the children learning from the parents, parents also learn a lot from their kids	Age	Age - General	3/122	2.459

My dad had my at 60 and my mom at 38. My dad is the best dad ever. he taught me so much and has so many crazy stories. He's also really chill, which is odd for parents his age . he's very liberal and progressive and is very relaxed on rules (aka he will drive an hour and a half to come get me from a party at 3 am). Only area where his age shows is technology, but he's slowly learning it. My mom is way more conservative than him which is so weird . both have pros and cons like everything else Old parentsPros: usually are more wise like not letting you jump on the bed, shaping you into a better personSometimes are nicer and know a lot more and have been through a lot more. Cons for old parents: They are older, meaning that they won't really be able to run around every where like in their prime. Young parents pros: They aren't as old so they can still run around every where like going outside longer, playing longer, mainly just a little more hyper than old peopleCons: Usually are less wise and not have been through much (though some are different) they might do thinks without thinking about the consequences much. (again some are different(	Old	Age - Over 65s	4/126	3.175
Another con regarding older parents: The kids will potentially be taking care of their parents much sooner than expected. They'll be spending their 20s stuck in the nest serving as caregivers for their parents rather than get out of the nest and get their own lives/careers going.That and them being too old to play with you are why I think it's a horrible idea to wait until your late 30s/early 40s to have kids.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/75	1.333

Moral of the story? Have children when it truly feels right for you and your partner. One person's "perfect at age 28" is another person's "perfect at 38". Age is just a number. People mature at different rates. Some may be financially stable at 26, others may not be until they're in their 40's. Everyone is different. Each age group is going to have their own advantages and disadvantages, a lot of times they're personal. Personally, I had older parents. Dad wasn't in the picture. I was raised by my mom who had me at 39 (and my sister at 43) and my grandmother. There was definitely an issue of generation gap in the household. Mom was so busy working all the time she didn't have a lot of energy for us when she was actually home. It all worked out the way it was supposed to though and I wouldn't change it. I love my mom	Age	Age - General	3/158	1.899

I think it can go either way. Young parents can be financially responsible and ready and some older parents can be the opposite. For example, I got married at age 21 because we wanted too and had been in a relationship for a long time. Our first child was born when I was almost 23. No drugs, no drinking, we had our finances mostly stable. We weren't extremely well off, but were both debt free and knew how to budget and maintain our household. A few years later we had our twins and were much more financially well off. Our kids are well adjusted and , so far, do well in school and don't have any behavioral issues or anything. But, there's a mom who has a child in my son's class and she had him at 43, unplanned, and has a history of drug and alcohol abuse. She still lives with her parents and can't maintain a job as well as relies on her mom to do most of the parenting for her. Her son is always in trouble, got kicked out of preschool. Has been reprimanded several times for bullying and even cursing at the teachers and had to be held back for the next school year because his classroom performance wasn't at a level that would make the next grade an easy adjustment for him. But, there are older parents that fit the mold you mentioned and young parents that do as well. There will always be exceptions, but generalizing may not be the best approach. I would say before the age of 30 so that you have plenty of time together while you are all grown-up enough to appreciate it. I think those women who try to have kids in their late 40's/50's through IVF are totally selfish and the practice should be outright banned, it must be awful for these kids to reach their late teens only for it to dawn on them that their parents will be dead soon. No-one wants their parents to die but it's much more natural and easier to prepare for if you are already in your 40's yourself when it happens.	Age	Age - General	1/103	0.971

My parents were 'young' when they gave birth to us and we all do well, academically for the two boys and I'm more artistic. My little who is 10 years younger than me was born when my parents were 'old'. Her vocabulary is terrible, and now both of our parent's health has deteriorated so she never got to go out and go for walks with daddy or visit family far away. Our family is now less active so she doesn't have any kind of experience with those things. She gets sad because she's feels left out (the age gap, she's now 7 and we are all above 13, me being 17) . She is not academically inclined and shows no signs yet of having any other little talent. Because of an accident my father couldn't work so income was mainly on my mother, who is now sick. Maybe I think it nay have to do with my parents too. My mother was the youngest of her siblings while my father was the eldest. She probably looked up to hers and she matured around their company. My father became independent and was the only one of 6 to move out. So I guess there was a balance coz he's 15 years older than mom. I am 16 years old . My father is 64 and my mother is 42. He is old enough to be my mom's father. In fact, my mom's dad is only two years older than my dad. My mother and father are divorced so I've experienced both of their parenting styles. The younger parent tends to understand their child more because they are closer in age and generations. My mom grew up in the eighties so she has a better understanding of my generation. My father on the other hand is a baby boomer. He has completely different judgement and knowledge of our world than my generation. Obviously people with higher education are more likely to become older parents, so their children are those of intelligent people. To a degree, that makes them intelligent, too. Don't tell me that the average 20 year old couple that has a baby is intelligent. Also, I am 27 and I honestly don't get teenage culture now so to that there's no hope. The only actual drawback of having older parents is the generation gap: I don't think I can say to my mom about my most recent fwb. As a child, it was also harder to convince them to go out and play unless it was our own street. That's pretty much it.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/113	0.885
Older parents is best ! Why? Because the 20s are the time when a person establishes themselves and looks for a proper partner. Having a child early and not with the right person leads to regrets. It's stressful, pricy but most of it will cost a lot of opportunities . With tons of regrets even a good person in general can turn into a bad parent. Not to mention that pregnancies are hard at any age . Do not make it sound like having a baby early will be easy. Not only the baby but the woman too can die at any age due to problems with the pregnancy. It's better when the parents are older, they'll have the money and maturity to take care of the child. While younger parents are less likely to be ready and fully aware of all the sacrifices they'll have to make.	Age, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	3/147	2.041

Grew up with a younger set of parents, and they did not have the financial abilities to get pregnant with a couple of kids in their teens. One of my parents had to work hardcore just to get our families head above water and i rarely got to see them, and the other parent doesn't know how to emotionally handle kids and is emotionally stuck at the age us kids came around. So much so the one parent became emotionally volitile and not able to care for me or my siblings-we ended up having to parent the one parent at times. Not saying all younger parents are destined to become this way, I live in a poor area so ofc I know many young parents and it's a mixed bag of some very bad parents and some amazing hardworking ones.But I always felt jealous over those with older parents, like all my friends have. They always complain that their parents don't understand them due to the generational gap (granted, my parents are considered millenials and I'm on the cusp of millenial and gen z generation, so there's not much generational misunderstanding-albeit theres no generation gap with others in my family since we're all poor and in the same boat. They understand hardships much better and can sympathize) but I still felt that the way their parents handled situations were more mature, and some of my friends are a little spoiled (doesnt make them bad people though <3). Sometimes when I watch their fights happen it's the friend and parent misinterpreting each other and the friend might be acting out of selfish though-or rather, not really thinking about what the parent is feeling, and vice versa. Also their fights are never life and death, while growing up with younger parents I've had one particular parent act in rage and threaten to kill or beat me. There's not a lot of benefits to be born with very young parents, and I personally never intend to become one myself. I hope that every person who becomes a parent-either by surprise or planned out-can watch helpful videos, read books, and receive education to help themselves grow into the best parent they can be. My dad had me 6 months shy of turning 60 and my mom was 35 at the time. While growing up I was always embarrassed to be the only one with an older dad (everyone thought he was my grandpa). He had a big car accident when I was 3 so I only remember him as being handicaped. I've never seen him run, play with us, do sports etc. We did have a lot more than others financially but he retired when I was 10 and it also sucked to always have my parents at home all the time. Growing up we always had to put up with his health issues. He became forgetful, incontinent etc. He passed away suddenly (stroke) at age 83 (I was a 24 year old student, doing my masters degree). When I was young I always swore that I'd be a young mother and that I'd have my kids by age 25. I'm now 36, married with two little kids that I had at age 32 and 35. I definitely don't see myself as an ' old mom' since all my friends have kids more or less the same age . Back when I was young mothers were younger but not anymore. I'm glad I lived my life before settling down. I'm definitely a better parent now than I would have been 10 years ago. That being said, it's all about your personality and your upbringing. When I was 20yrs old , I said to myself "I'm going to wait until I'm 30yrs old to have children." At age 30 I was single. When I turned 31yrs old , I got into a 3yrs relationship. I asked my partner "when are we getting married? I would like to have children." He said "Not now. We need to buy a house, buy a new car, save money..." In my country a house is very expensive. It can take up to 25yrs to own one. Then one day my partner started comparing my looks to those of 18yrs women. After a few months he says "I'm breaking up with you. I can get a better looking woman in her early 20's." I'm over 35yrs old now. I'm single with no children. This is not what I planned for. Hey, I really don't understand how you guys did the research for the health risks associated with pregnancy and age related to women, and somehow still chose to omit the fact the the health risks for both mother and child are significantly higher, in terms of both mortality and morbidity rates, when the mother is younger than 21. This is supported by both the CDC and the WHO who ran massive meta studies showing that it was biological immaturity rather than other factors which increased the risk.Having a child younger than 21 was shown to be far more risky than having one older than 35, and the increased risks associated with having a child with developmental disabilities also is largely dependent on the age of the man the woman is with. Men over the age of 31 have a notable decrease in sperm quality, and as women tend to partner with men in a 5 year window of of their own age (2 years younger, to 3 years older) their male partner's advanced age contributes to those issues.However, when speaking about developmental disabilities of children born to older mothers, people will often cite the fact that those risks double after the age of 35, but neglect to mention that that doubling is off of a risk factor of less than 1, and the doubled number is still under 1, meaning that the added benefits of waiting for the opportune time to have a child for some couples would still greatly outweigh the likelihood of such defects. It's around the same probability of dying while getting your wisdom teeth out, so people pushing that narrative so much seems far more about trying to dictate when couples (particularly women) should have kids, rather than being based on hard facts and logic.When it comes to women, the best time to have a child from a purely biological stand point, based on the best data we have that accounts for wealth, and environment, is 21-31, with a decline after 35. Men do not in fact "keep giving and giving", there is also a reduction in sperm quality following the same time frames.	Age, Woman	Age - General, Gender - General	7/361	1.939

The answer is simple. have them as young as you reasonably can. that way you're not old dealing with a teen or young adult. Who wants to be in their 50s dealing with a 16 year old ?? Not to mention the older you are, the younger your child will be when you die. And in some cases they may not be financially independent, still needing some help from you from time to time. I had my son at 21. At times it was hard, but now at 37 I feel it was the best time to do so. I have been able to fully enjoy and participate in activities on a regular basis. Not to mention, I can more relate to things he is going through because it wasn't that long ago for me as well. Often times my son is mistaken for my brother because I still look very young myself. Older parents dont understand tech (most of them), they are set in their ways, they aren't progressive and they're starting to develop health issues. Last thing you want to do is become a burden on your child especially a very young one.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/194	1.031

I have a close childhood friend whose parents had her late. They had already retired by the time she was entering her teenage years. They had a big house and plenty of money, but they were always home and she never had any privacy or freedom. She was stuck nonstop throughout her teenage years with old-fashioned, prudish, somewhat narrow-minded helicopter parents that had nothing better to do. She grew up feeling repressed and resentful. Rushing into having kids is never a good idea. When this happens, any marriage isn't set in stone yet, often parents get divorced early on and stress out the kid. Older parents how have already been married for over a decade have a much more solid, stable relationship, and also will have more established careers, so money won't be so much of an issue. If they've already finished college, then they can help their kids through the entire process. If they're retired, they can spend more time with their kids. My mom started having kids at 21, and had me at 28, got divorced when I was 6, had to work two jobs and send me to daycare, isn't financially stable everything is always paycheck by paycheck. I didn't get as much attention as I should have and ended up with a bunch of issue. My best friend who is nineteen, her parents are in her sixties, her dad has a great stay at home job, and her mom is retired, I was actually displaced because of sibling drama senior year and lived with them and it was so enlightening being able to have a parental figure there all the time, helping me step by step through everything , who doesn't have all those other responsibilities or makes me feel like a burden. My mom was 46 when I was born and my dad was 47. I honestly think that's why I was born with a list of complications, for example, my heart wasn't beating when I was born. I also am minorly physically and a bit more severely mentally disabled . My grandparents were mostly gone when I was 2 and the one that survived was gone by the time I was 12. Luckily, there were pretty financially stable by that age and they were mature and very wise, as well as kind, which are some of the best qualities in parents. I think my point is that older parents (maybe 40+) are probably the better option however it does have physical downsides that I mentioned and maybe more death, which is pretty hard on children. The sooner you have them, the sooner they grow up, fly the nest and leave you on your own.My mom is only 56 and keeps saying she feels 'redundant' now and doesn't know what to do with herself thats why shes always pushing her children to hurry up and get married so that we can give her grandchildren, despite the fact that none of us are remotely ready to start having kids yet. Thats why I have no qualms about being an older parent, I'm not planning on having my kids in my 60s but I think late 30s/early 40s isn't exactly the worst thing on the planet.People who are stressing out about losing their parents early need to remember that many people are living way into their 80s and 90s now and being a young parent does not mean that you will definitely have more energy for your kids, my parents worked all hours during their 20s and were therefore too exhausted to play with their kids too. I have every intention of being a young parent. I have always wanted to have a child in my early to mid 20's. My personal reason is because I would like to have more time with my children. Think about it this way. You give birth to your child at 25. Say for example you live until you're 65. That is 40 years you got to be in your child's life, whereas compared to having that child at 45. By the time they're 15, you'll already be 60. That puts a huge burden on both of you. Not only have you retired, but what if you can't help them with college? Not everyone saves efficiently. But now that kid is stuck with the question of trying to support you at such a young age . Also from the child's perspective, they wouldn't have even had that much time with their own parents. These are the factors that I put into this question. Nothing else. Only time. I'm not talking about family issues or anything else, just time.	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	2/176	1.136

The Hamster Army! . I am 44. Dated my wife at 24. We decided to marry and have kids when my wife was 35. Best decision ever. Sure. Our kids will have us 15 to 20 years less. But they will have parents who have a strong marriage and no money problems. We have a house. Nice cars and go on many vacations. My kids are 6 now. You know how many early 20 parents we knew who lived in apartments? That is no place for kids to live or grow up. 90 percent of young parents we knew had many money issues. This caused many divorces. Also these young parents never got to party or travel or enjoy money. They eventually divorce in their early 30s. Young parents do not think about the kids at all. Many grow up poor and have bad childhoods with divorces. I only know 1 couple who got married and kids at 21 who made it our my age 44 still married...	Age	Age - General	1/168	0.595
Mike Miller I think you can't say that for all young parents you really are painting them with a broad brush. Because people can generalize older parents too as well. Having children when your too old can result in a number of health complications that may not be even worth having a child. And then raising them still might be a problem because you have these career hungry older adults that never had time for a kid in the first place. I think it depends on the individuals making a baby I've seen success and failures on both ends of the spectrum.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/102	0.98
soraya .e . I agree with you for the most part. But most young parents I have met are struggling and they live in apartments or live broke and I have seen how it affects kids. But. I have seen older parents and hear the complaints of the parents having health issues or they are not interested in doing active activities. In my experience. Most older parents wanted kids more then the Younger parents. A lot of young parents got pregnant by mistake or did not want them. I have seen many of these go bad. Older parents like my age 44 with kids 6 years old. We spend all of our time with them. I feel guilty my kids will graduate college and I will be retiring and prob will die when they are in their late 30s give or take. A lot of us older parents are this way because of our baby boomer parents we had. We grew up with parents who provided well but never spent time with us. This shaped many of us Early Gen X this way. This whole video is a straw man argument. Stats can be used to justify anything. How can an older age have a higher vocabulary by nature of there age alone? The issue I see with thing is this, the older parents are the ones who raised the younger parents, so many of the same detrimental environmental factors would be passed on and especially vocabulary actually increases over generations as newer words are created all the time. I'd say having kids between age 30 and 35 is best. By then most should be financially stable, more mature, and still have lots of energy (though honestly if you don't still have a lot of energy at age 40-55, then you haven't been taking care of yourself very well...not saying people that age should be able to jump around like 20 year olds, but if you stay active and don't get injured, then you should still be able to keep up with and do most things with your kids, unless they're into extreme sports or something). All of my friends from high school already have kids. (I'm 26), and that's great for them, but for me personally I'd rather wait till I'm like 30.	Age	Age - General	3/125	2.4

It is quite clear a good parent is not whether one is young or old . It is a factor. But the circumstances and environment is the most important. Being old doesn't matter if you are alcoholic and penniless. While young parent may be irresponsible, this mostly because the parenting they received. If there is institution to teach people good parenting and support them, they become good parent themselves. I know this video is only making general assessment, but I think we should be more focusing on educating good parenting regardless of age . And not only giving education but support, financially, and mentally.	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/102	2.941
Swings and roundabouts. My dad is 70, I'm 47, my eldest is 21, my youngest is 5. Meh? Education is the key, also being a self employed person helps shuffle the schedule to focus on family. I know octogenarians who are functionally idiots and I cannot comprehend how they've lived so long (human compassion?). I also know kids who intimidate me with their brains/creativity. Mutual respect despite age is the first step. My dad is now Gramps. Being poor is the low point of early parenting, but having smart parents and a decent education helps. I'm blessed. Happy new year Youtube freaks.	Age	Age - General	1/102	0.98
I thought this was going to look from the perspective of the child, but it turns out it is from the perspective of the parents. There is one important factor not mentioned here. Children born to older parents are more likely to have to become a full time carer to their parents when their parents degrading health takes away their independence (unless the option of a care home is available, at great expense). This will likely happen right at the time when the child is reaching the peak of their career in middle age , and have a family of their own to raise, forcing them to give it all up to be a carer for possibly 20+ years. If the parents are young, the offspring will likely be approaching or in retirement by the time they have to do the full time carer role, meaning that have had the chance to fully live their life and do the best they can. It is old considering human biology. At that point you are aproaching menopause if youre a woman and have increased risk of getting a defect child due to age . You also start aging yourself and may not have the energy to be active with your kids when they become teens (but that also depends a lot on the person, people age differently)	Age, Old, Woman	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	4/62	6.452

My parents were 40 and 43 when I was born. Based on my experiences, 40 IS old . They're both in their late 60s, with my dad turning 70 in a few months. I've had to take care of my mom for the last several yrs and it's really done damage to my adult life. I'm stuck in the nest while all my friends from high school and college (I'm a millennial) are employed, married, and (in some cases) have kids. And most of the people I hung around with in high school are no longer in my hometown.I'm hoping I have kids before my late 30s. It's better for kids to take care of their parents AFTER their adult lives/careers are launched and not BEFORE. To me, waiting until 40 to have kids is one of the worst things you can do to them. for a mother, yes its kinda pushing it. The rate of Austism goes up at that point. That being said my grandmother had my uncle who is only 8 years older than I am at age 42. She had my mom at 21. She is very religious and had a lot of kids.	Age	Age - General	1/53	1.887

I honestly feel like age doesn't matter. Sure it's better to not have kids when you're a teenager that's for sure since you're trying to figure out yourself and finish high school and go to college or work but I'm gonna be a first time dad at the age of 24 next year to a baby girl and there are times when I'm nervous and feel that I haven't done enough in my own life (traveling, money, career, home ownership and etc) but that can all still happen with a kid you just gotta be more flexible and realize that you're gonna help this new human navigate this world and be a good person that's what it's all about. I may not be rich yet but I'm rich in wisdom, love and ambition that I will pass on to my kid. I will never be a perfect dad but I'll always have unconditional love and support my kid no matter what! Strictly science wise, I think our bodies are designed to have kids in our late teens. My parents had me in their 40s, and the only thing that scares me is that they might need my help in the next 10 years health wise, and that would put me in my early 30s by then. But overall, my parents came to every soccer game, were able to help me with my homework besides mathematics, and they always payed for things when I was in financial stress. This whole information is very generalized. Meaning that there are many exceptions and, for example, older mothers don't always give birth to abnormal children, also otherwise and so on. My point is that there are no guarantees of giving birth to healthy or unhealthy children no matter what age the parents are. this actually hard to explain, but if you don't fully understand what I said, feel free to ask, I will try to make it clear. Cause I ain't having a second kid god dammit, my first one is turning 18 next year - Who comes out of retirement to make a kid in their late 30's?My mum had me late and died when I was 16, I'm glad I was young and enlisted when I had a kid, my son is a pretty awesome person to be around. I'd hate to not see him get older. I had a kid before I could get into a bar and have never gotten into hanging out in bars, it was all about getting my skillz in order to make dough and pay the bills and building a future for my kid.Having a kid at 18 didn't bother me much, I had chances to do shitty work and even worked somewhere I basically considered "my dream" and I still have more time, maybe ;)Who knows how much time we have, kids are the only way to ensure there is a future though. Regardless of how old you are when you make one, remembering they will "own and run the world one day when you're old " is the most important – you're gonna be dependant on whatever it is that is made, whether or not it's your child, everyones' child is some region's future leader... I believe people shouldn't rush to have kids they should take their time and wait until there ready, they need to wait until there mentally and financially ready to take care and raise there kids, but I know how life is and how things can happen unexpectedly and can change over night especially when it comes to having children, but people need to understand those days of going to parties the club and the beach and all that other shit is over, now your life should be nothing but work and takings care of your kids, raising your kids the right way and making sure they have everything they need and a few thing they wont, you need to teach and prepare your kids for the real world that there going have to face and deal with alone one day as an adult and as potential parent themselves, if people are not willing to do this much then they need to rethink twice about having children because anything less is going to be a sorry ass parent. there are a lot more factors involved than just the age of the parents for the rise of mental disorders. the biggest reason is that there is a greater amount of reporting for mental illness than in the past as it is becoming less of a stereotype and more accepting as a disease	Age, Mental	Age - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/53	5.66

Rising rates has more to do with better diagnostic practices and deeper understanding of those disorders, not having old parents.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/20	5.0

And another reason to have kids young is that older parents will be too old and too tired to play with you and by the time the kids grow up, the kids will be at risk of having their careers/adult lives put on hold because of caregiving. You're screwing the lives of your kids by waiting until your late 30s/early 40s to have them.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/64	1.562
I work in special education and I can assure you that parental age has nothing to do with autism or ADHD. My student's parental ages are all over the place. The only pattern I see is that more of my ADHD students have parents with poor, unstable backgrounds who are generally uninterested and uninvolved in their child's education while the autistic student's parents are usually the exact opposite (often stable but overly involved). This could be a complete coincidence or there may be an underlying reason. I really dont know but I hope they figure out soon	Age, Nothing	Age - General, Age - Youngsters	2/97	2.062

My dad was 79 when I was 26, but he died last July after a quick illness. I was embarrassed about having an older dad when I was in primary school because my classmates would ask me if it was my grandad. Once I got into secondary school, I met more people with older parents and was proud to have an older parent. He had lived such an amazing and crazy life before he met my mum at the age of 40 (she was 25). The one thing that hurts me the most is knowing I'm going to spend the rest of my life without him in my life and he won't get to see where I go with my career. We shared many interests including current affairs and history, no one else in my family or my partner are remotely interested in this. Oh, we're the same age ! Well, my father is 67 whereas my mother is 47.The age gap was restricting at times, e.g. my father and I played less outside, when I turned 6+. He is wise and has more life experience as an independent person so he's like the captain of our family. I feel you, it's sad but true that the older parent will most likely die earlier than the other. I'm just 20, so anything could happen yet, but I'd like to have two children in the 33-37 age range, two because I'm an only child and I think it sucks, I'd have loved to have had siblings, and that's the age range I prefer because it's old enough to have your life settled down and to be both finantially and emotionally balanced, but not too old to be actually old when your kids are grown up. Besides, there are many things I want to do first that could be difficult to do while having to raise kids. My mum was 37 when I was born, and my dad 41, and I think it has both advantages and problems. Psychologically speaking, my mum is younger than most of the women her age I see: she is very geeky, she's is a lot into pop culture and I can talk with her about almost anything, but she gets tired easily and she's not in good shape, so she's " old " physically speaking. On the other hand, my dad is physically active and in good shape, and has more energy than more youngsters, but he doesn't know shit about pop culture and references, Internet and technology in general. Sure you can attempt to plan your life as much as possible. But if you don't meet anyone till later in life, then it is what it is. The idea of financial security is great, but not a sure thing. I don't believe there is any real way to assure financial stability. All it takes is a change in trends, and millions lose their jobs. You can think you are secure, then lose it all. Or health issues strike, that happens for young and old alike. Or, like some of my friends, well they popped that blue pill from teens to thirties, and when the time came, it was extremely hard for them to conceive. Partners leave as well. Dez Lovecraft But I don't think we should do this so much. Do you think we will ever evolve if we keep sustaining our current selves? Natural selection should always come so we can improve as a race , as a species. Death isn't the enemy. It's only bad when you have wasted your life. So no, I won't kill myself now, cause I plan to do a lot still. Death shapes the world. It pushes it to become stronger, better, as evolution works. If we keep sustaining ourselves, many of us, who are fat , lazy, sick... maybe we won't evolve as a race to become smarter and stronger. Maybe there is a better form for ourselves in the future, but we are holding it back, suppressing ourselves because you don't need to be stronger and smarter anymore, you are taken care of, and have no reason to fight. I, for one, don't want to live to 200+ because that's far too long, and unnatural.And better conditions of natural resources and the availability of food.. isn't just down to how good we are at science. I'm 17. My Dad and Mum are nearly 60. I've only lost one grandparent, which was still very recent. My parents are sensible, my dad exercises a lot, both laid back when they can and do party with friends. They are both hard working, no severe illnesses (yet), my dad even quit smoking (My mum has never smoked) and both drink only on occasion (never drunk). My parents know technology enough to get on with life (my dad more so than me sometimes). They help when they can and push me to do better. I also have 2 older sisters. Compare that to my girlfriend, who is almost my age and a single child, her dad is almost 40, mum is quite a bit younger, they are both intolerable and put so much stress onto their daughter. They are split up, dad is getting drunk a lot, is very clingy and has anger issues, being an absolute embarrassment in public because he loves football. The mum is loud, obnoxious, smokes a lot, also drinks a lot, and just doesn't support my gf at all. She literally said "Aww your cute when your angry" with no support whatsoever. Dad has a decent job, being a teacher, the mum doesn't really have one, still living with HER parents (who are nice, being older ;)). Because of this, my girlfriend has a lot of stress and can't really talk to her family much about things. There is always a lot of pressure on her. No, trust me, my mother was 20 when she had me, and my father who was the same age left after 2 years, so I was down to a mother who was depressed and lived in her bed until I was 11, without a father. I would've taken older parents who know they'll be together, are well financially established and tried to spend time with me. Biology is stupid; there's nothing intelligent about this design.	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/44	4.545
Actually yes. Biologically speaking it fulfills the requirements both parties have. Men want a young, attractive woman who can bear children and women want both security and resources to raise said children. Women's window for maximum fertility is 16-26, peaking around 20-25. Men's peak earning years are between 30-40, maybe 50. So simply put yes and older man and a younger woman is a good combination.	Woman	Gender - General	2/66	3.03

Diet Bleach XD. I just remembered that song about that kid wantin to bone Stacy's mom. You made my night with that one.Regardless it's funny as hell, but it's not accurate. As I've said previously men want young women for children, women want men who are either slightly older or if they got some weird daddy thing way older because of resources and security. It simply doesn't work the other way around since the older a woman is the less likely she is to have healthy kids and the younger man won't have as much to provide to her compared to an older competitor.Sure you might see cougars and younger guys boning here and there, but it's not going to go any further than that.Edit: Love the name btw. I love me some diet bleach myself.	Weird, Woman	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/139	1.439
TheBunkerBuster 105 This is entirely untrue. Women's fertility peaks in their 20s, with some estimates putting the highest rate in the late 20s. Teenage pregnancies carry significant risk, and younger mothers are often unable to properly raise and care for an infant. It's important to note that the brain doesn't stop developing until around 25—a 16 year old may be technically capable of having a child, but emotionally, financially, and physically unprepared to do so. You also make some strange and biased assumptions: that men want "young, attractive women" (yuck) and that women want "resources to raise their children." The idea that men want younger women is entirely sociological, and has no biological or inherent base to it. And women, of course, are entirely capable of desiring a career and a high-paying job, in addition to or without children. You also fail to account for men who wish to stay home and care for their children, or for how men's fertility wanes during their thirties and forties.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/167	0.599

Watch...Research is going to say it's best to have kids at the age of 40 in ten years. Biologically women can get kids at the age of 12. 35 is already pushing the limits and women who starts at the age of 35, they can only have one to two kids. We were taught in school that having kids at a young age is immoral or dangerous. Young people managed family for thousand and even million of years just fine and even happily with the support of their family of course. The government just scares you, so you won't have too many kids. It's basically the government the population control. Don't think government would do that. Look at China and their one child rule. The West is just more settle about it and I don't think it's wrong for the government to have population control. It is needed for our survival. Most likely Europe or the US. Then they’ll bring their culture to various sections of those countries where they settle.The reason I say this is because not only is this happening with middle eastern immigration, it’s one of the two time tested ways to lower population, specifically male population. The other being conquering other lands through military force, i.e. war. A high birth rate is good for your country because put very simply, the cultures who have the most children will control the future. CindiXGaming :3 What I mean by soft patriarchy is a society where men have the power and the corresponding responsibility that comes with it. So essentially men protect and provide for women, but in return they are subordinate to the men. Keep in mind there's a massive difference between a soft patriarchy and a hard patriarchy . A hard patriarchy is some mad max shit, where women are rape slaves and weak men die in droves. Soft patriarchy is similar to a relationship between a parent and a child. The parent may be in a position of authority, but they cannot abuse the child and they are directly responsible for them. Soft patriarchy is what we had for a long time and only recently did we swap to a more egalitarian system. Egalitarianism is a lot like communism. A good idea in theory, but in practice it doesn't work. Granted it works better than communism, but that's beside the point. Egalitarian societies slowly decay over time as the women refuse to have children. There's a lot of reasons why Egalitarianism has serious failings, but for the sake of brevity I'll leave it there. Nacho Gwac That's implying that someone goes to college in the first place. Frankly if you're an average man with an average mind you're better off going into trades. Colleges can and will discriminate against you in applications, not to mention that they're full of bureaucratic bullshit and this is coming from a college student. The Trades as a whole (plumbing, electricians, carpenters, etc) are seeing reductions in their labor pool since much of the old guard is retiring.They're not 6 figure salaries, but they're definitely sufficient to support a small family with two, maybe three kids if you're financially savvy. Frankly the only reason I'm not in there myself is because my entire family put so many resources into me going to college that I essentially have to. It'd be selfish not to.All that aside, people need to stop with the 'I'm not financially sufficient' shit. Believe me if you have any kind of will, a bit of muscle and decent head on your shoulders you can make at least 30k. People are just too lazy to find jobs or are complete pansies who don't want to get their hands dirty. Ultimately I don't care if the birth rate rises, in fact I don't expect it to. I have precautions for the event of either total societal collapse or demographic replacement. I'd just prefer it if I never had to use said fallbacks. I prefer my nation the way it is and I'd like it if it remained that way. The only way that happens is through an sustainable birth rate. I'd definitely like the next generation of Americans to be born in America, not be imported because women want their precious careers and men can barely be considered men anymore. If I ever decided I wanted a kid it would be at an older age . I have no urge to breed, and on top of that I'm always tired and broke. That's just my choice. You do you :)	Age	Age - General	1/68	1.471
Yorak Actually that's a myth. Biologically that person isn't correct, 35-39 is only 4percent difference in fertility from 27. Same goes for the medical issues. Also it was said in the video that those studies weren't real and were there to pressure women to have children. And btw men's fertility lowers also as they age , we could say the same for the men to have babies before 25	Age	Age - General	1/68	1.471
shakhir r children are sicker if they are born from older parents ,both men and women shouldn't have children when they are too old	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/24	4.167

Novusod who the hell are you to tell another how to live? Everyone is fulfilled in different ways. You can't say that someone can't find a full life in labor and service. Doctors and nurses do it every day...GLADLY! In fact, that's what led me to get a nursing degree. There are people who have dedicated their lives to serving their communities and abroad with volunteering. People desire different things to fulfill their souls. And we're ALL different. You're only being egocentric.	doctors	Nationality - General	1/82	1.22
