Sydney Watson Stands at attention Commander Miss, the fields report a TV show called 'My Little Pony' having an episode about taking a town that decided to never interact, and how it was collapsing due to lack of ways to communicate. I will gladly donate once I have my next paycheque next Thursday, always really enjoy your content and very much appreciated everything you had to say. Can't hardly believe people are actually like this, sadly this is starting to become the norm in a lot of different places in the world. I hope you have a great great day Sydney Watson, and I cannot wait until the next video about these crazy leftists trying to smash the patriarchy (those last three words made me cringe a bit, my apologies if they make you cringe a bit as well) Keep up the great work, the more people that know how things are going in the world the more opportunities there are to fix this total mess of a world. Oh and if someone tells you they're offended then I have noticed that if you tell them you're offended because they're offended it tends to really mess with them an might cause them to cease being offended to prevent offence being given using their own language against the left can be quite humorous at times Take care and be safe	Crazy, Patriarchy	Gender - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	2/191	1.047

No, there is zero legitimacy in this type of language policing and similar types of bullshit. It is not only completely immature, but it's also an enormous red flag for mental health professionals as it's downright crazy and likely means these types of people are plagued by severe cognitive, emotional, and social underdevelopment. To the point, it's genuinely concerning that we're seeing this on such an ever-increasingly large scale. Bottom line, these "Karens" honestly just need something to complain over and then champion so that they may feel significant. Along with ensuring that all the other "Karens" everyone doesn't forget how "virtuous" they are. Likely because even they themselves know, that aside from their perceived personal virtue, that their lives are completely useless. As they don't even come close to contributing anything of substance to society, aside from the countless inane immature and misconstrued understandings of what real social justice is. It would be more than safe to wager that most of these people actually have a sub-conscious gnawing pit in their gut that they aren't truly championing social justice and are rather doing the opposite. Taking offence is a legal term, and I am a full-time of student doing a Diploma of Electronic Music Production, Bachelor's of Arts in Psychology (external) Diploma of Web Development and my background is working in high needs mental health, in my professional opinion as someone who works in Mental Health and has done so for 30 years the person in that Now this video is seeking to educate people to be sensitive to language with an intent to create an atmosphere that increases the risk of mental health issues, when she herself has mental health issues. That is a criminal offence and it comes under the [LINK] or guilty mind, where she did by her own free will and volition and with malicious intent use language that results in vicarious trauma. The first generation feminists from my generation (60s into the 70s) were willing to compete with men and have competed and earned their place. These 3rd generation feminists now see that they must compete on a heads-up basis and they don't want to do that ;they just want the whole deck stacked in their favor with all the chips on their side of the table. "Gals" is the pair to "guys" Miss Sydney the Watson. If there were more females represented in a group than males and someone outside the group wished to gain the attention of the group, they could refer to the group as "gals" and I – as a guy – would be okay with that (despite what Karen the commie proposed). Women have had the opportunity to do this for some time now, but apparently just prefer to use "guys" to address all mix-gendered groups (or otherwise). I've always believed the reason for this is so that women can blend in with males, for the age old reasoning behind women desiring to invade (and be accepted in) male spaces. If you want to understand what’s going on with the foolish progressive leftists bs vs common sense Christian conservatives , read ecclesiastes in the bible! I swear these leftists are the zombies of the apocalypse from revelations lol!Ever heard a leftist say I am sorry, I had my head up my ass cause I believed the TV and The Internet, I should of did my own research, and made sure I got the truth using my heart and soul, before I used my emotions and ego? Odds are you probably never will, they would rather serve evil without even knowing it, and play right along out of sheer fear and ignorance, all because some religion told them if they sin they will burn in eternal fire, they would rather believe after death nothing happens or serve their ego or believe they are a god, instead of just reading what jesus taught, he was even correcting religion as child, that’s why they murdered him, because what he taught made sense and made ppl realize religion was lying to them and was stealing their money and putting them in fear, I have died three times badly, there is no hell except for those that enjoy evil and they create it for themselves, you have eternal life if you understand what jesus taught with your heart and soul,, hell was created by evil to control you, your soul is powered by god and is light, light dances in the fire, god is love and the source of all life, thats why evil wants you fearing fire, god is not some dude sitting on a throne with a beard and a staff pointing a finger at you, jesus taught this, jesus didn’t teach religion, he was murdered by it, and until you get heart centered and connect to your soul before using your mind, and understand this, you will always only serve ego and those dark whispers in your own dark mind, light is information and darkness lack of information, the truth will set you free, free from fear, those that think any truth no matter how ugly it is, is negative, are truly only in fear of it, until you get this you will just keep repeating this over and over, also I would advise getting baptized by a minister you trust, full dunk, it will cleanse all the negative bs off you and attached to you, jesus walked for days and days just to get baptized by John, which sadly both Jesus and John were murdered shortly after by pretty much the same ones ruling earth now, oh the irony lol	Common, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	4/440	0.909

This Orwellian duck speak is the key to rewriting mass consciousness. Additionally, with the redefining of the words we already use, language is, itself, being outlawed.By the way - the English language is the only one being assaulted in such manner. I think this is so as most every other language on Earth has gender-specific verbage. If the English language is disposed of this easily for political correctness (the term used in the old Soviet Union for conforming citizens), how will the gender-specific languages and cultures handle it? I doubt they would tolerate it for one minute.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/98	1.02

All this feminist word policing does is make women look like they they are weak with fragile egos and can't handle anything in society which is why men must tip toe around them and can't be friends with them which is the opposite of what we want. What women should want is for men to see women as people with the same rights and dignity and deserving of respect as themselves and that we are perfectly capable and suitable to be coworkers and friends with and that it is not a big deal and doesn't need to become a sexualized thing at all no matter how attractive either person is. People should be psychologically healthy enough to just admit to his or herself ' wow, this person is good looking. I appreciate that. Ok, back to work or whatever.' And keep that thought to themselves. But a long time ago in the Mad Men era when they found that sex sells and ran with that idea and created a snowball effect the infected all of society, everyone became so immature that they started voicing all their sexuality and sexism and other isms until no one knew how to not use their freedom of speech. 'Tell me what you really think!' So then we started fighting free speech with PC speech which is just freedom of speech with a PR Firm! And that's what is going on here, more PC PR nonsense. I personally call everyone dude when I am in a casual context which is all the time and I know exactly when I started doing this. I am 42 now and it started long ago when I was 14 and watched 'Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure' followed by their 'Bogus Journey', and then watch 'Wayne's World' both 1 and 2. Those were the magical years where MTV was still there for everyone playing awesome music videos that I could wake up in the morning and get ready for school listening to and go to bed after Beavis and Butthead and the headache of PC culture was nowhere, we could wear what we wanted to as long as no one looked like a stripper and no one was censoring our creativity because we were just teenagers and teenagers were expected to be weird and do some dumb stuff and we didn't have school shootings!!! Then I graduated in 96, things got PC. Something happened to MTV. And then came the Columbine shootings. And then more PC and more shootings and then 911 and then the country descended into a chaos that rivals the Joker! Because now all I see are people wasting time and money on things that make no sense while there are actual people in real need of help right now being threatened with euthanasia because their medical care won't cover an in home nurse and stuff like that. But we are listening to a bunch of winey girls telling people what they do and don't want to be called? Get a tougher skin! Almost 2 years ago I was verbally assaulted by three women in my hometown. Backstory: I am 66, a Viet Nam vet, disabled (I walk with a cane), and although I had long hair and a beard looked NOTHING like the myriad homeless folks here. I live in the liberal mecca of Eugene Oregon, as I said it is whee I grew up but I was gone for 20+ yrs and recently returned home, but back to the story. I was walking downtown early one morning(7:30 am ish), stopped and talked to a pair of local PD who patrol there then crossed the street and saw three ladies exiting a coffee/donut shop with cups in hand, I said ”Good morning beautiful ladies, I hope your have as beautiful a day as you are!”, when they were 15 ft in front of me. Within 5 seconds I ha ALL THREE i my face screaming at me about being a sexist, a misogynist , and several other things as well, I calmly stood there while they frothed at the mouth, then I felt a hand on my shoulder & the 2 offices were there, the one to my right said ”We got this, young man!”, they stepped between me & crazy ladies informed them they were yelling at a VETERAN who is obviously DISABLED and a senior citizen. Their response? ”He never said he was a VET!”...MY response: I took off my ball-cap with the U.S.Navy Veteran tag on it, held it in front of them , said ”It should have been self evident!”, put it back on and walked away. I didn’t walk downtown for over a year because of that one incident. I saw this title and had to tell ya. You know.. i have been thinking.... where does all this animosity come from? It seems to me more and more people are isolating themselves and our elected officials seem to search for ways to support individual loud speakers.... So, do you think that this possibly go back to the 70s and 80s great plan for nuclear concept of family and individual support for those that whinge... i ask. And has this improved our society? have we become more tolerant and reliant on ourselves? never in history have we been so dependent on the false guidance from the political spectrum as today AND not surprising have we ever in the history since the second world war been as censored as we are today...Is this simply the plan of the new world order?... let us argue and fight over little things that really are insignificant when it comes to ones place in a communal society? and not worry about what is important, like rising inflation, or, I don't know... important stuff like the insane amounts of taxpayers dollars spend on the political machine, or heaven forbid, the military.... I can't wait to find out what we do about the blight of the Spanish language. Or French. Or Italian. Strange though it is that these people have not yet attacked foreign languages, they must at some point, seeing how the very structure of those languages contain male and female grammatical differences, take the fight to the barbaric hordes of.... well, the rest of the first world..... Most English terms are actually fairly ambivalent to gender, whereas other major languages have very distinct, gender-based differences in their speech, often using the male version whenever a male is present in the group, no matter whether that person is in the majority or not. As far as I can tell, these differences are not meant to subjugate females, but rather provide additional information, or simply imply additional meaning to things. Or maybe for convenience. Or maybe because the world is overrun with evil males who are trying to subjugate all females because penises are sure signs of the Devil's wicked influence. Boy, it's just so hard to figure out these days. It would be so much easier if all the so called "higher intellectual beings" could show why they are so smart simply by referring to others as humans. No need for heavy details, e.g. I ask what do you drive? "a car" no one says a vehicle thats black , 4 door, manual, 2015 etc, we say car so to relate and allow us all to focus on real problems lets all just say I am human, what are you? Human. Don't get smart and say homosapian, no need to, we still have slow learners that won't understand so human works wi th out offence. If someone is offended, it means they aren't human so they must be aliens... or the human race really is not that intelligent, which seems more accurate everyday. All the best humans. Don't be a snowflake and think about other people as having the sole purpose of "hurting you with normal words".2. If you do speak, your "value" to the group, company, audience whatever will be judged by what you say, the ideas you verbalize.3. It's not OK to offend anyone - but - it is SO OK for me to use peer pressurized guilt to shame you to only say and think what I believe is socially acceptable. I don't get it - what happens to someone that is offended? Nothing . To be offended is a choice and because someone has chosen to be offended by a word or a saying I somehow must feel shame for my lack of understanding their right to choose to be offended? I call shenanigans on that.You cannot offend me. If you say something and I become offended then it is going to boil down to the fact I just heard some pretty strong truth about myself I didn't like - that means the problem lies with me - not the person that said something I didn't like. So instead of trying to force you to say only what I want to hear maybe I should go figure out how to fix what ails me and not try to make the entire system change to fit my wants. Sydney I love yor take on things but if you are not into the gender thought crime obcession in the US, why move there when there are literally hundreds of societies that are not so batshit crazy ? I left 20 years ago and each day I thank whatever devine force there is that I do not have to deal with any of it where there are relatively rational interaction between the sexes, despite dominated by a small but easily seen domination by the numbers of women in business, the arts and education. Men are not complaining, in fact we enjoy women who are happy and accomplished. The US is a failing society that will never let go of the anger and fake division to focus on real problem. All the talk about aggression by men towards women do to addressing them by "ladies" or "guys" all the while those who seem hypersensitive to any hint of aggression are the first to support the US destruction of much of the world for reasons no one can explain without lying. 20,000,000 people have been murdered around the world since WW2 by the US and none of them did anything against the US. Talk about insane misplacement of priorities. You are still young so why not go someplace that does not drive everyone crazy ? No good can come from it, you are not going to change it. The hypersenitive care nothing about others, and what they do to others, possibly as overcompensation for imaginary slights, they all fully support the massacures conducted by their countrym ignoring that at least half of those slaughtered were women. Um... the bi-chair was a joke... it was made as a joke. Sure the builder may have had to much time on their hands but, it was still a joke. As for making Christmas less Christian... it makes perfect sense to me. The holiday originated as a pagan celebration and MANY, MANY, MANY pagan (read as non-Christian and pre-Christian as well as contemporary modern neopagan) faiths celebrate the winter solstice. It's not and never has been a celebration that was owned or dominated by Christianity. As for the "guys" argument. As a non gender conforming individual I say get the hell over it and just move on. Of all the hills in this life that we need to climb... is people using "guys" as a generic term, really the one people wanna die on? There is WAY more important stuff to worry about. I also wanted to say that while I may not agree with everything you post, I do agree with some things and please keep making great videos :)On the nature of "dude"... I come from California in the US... everything and everyone is dude. It's not a gendered term and it's not even a term exclusively reserved for people. My dogs have been dudes. My car has been dude. Really it can be used everywhere.Best bet for this kind of thing is to relax and if some one gets butthurt at your greeting them... stop greeting them. Or go out of your way to greet them in the way that makes them uncomfortable because f*ck'em. Personally I'm all for looking people strait in the eyes and saying in as comedically "white" possible (think Leave it to Beaver but more exaggerated) "Praytell my hommie G! What doth be up?" Hey Sydney, have you heard about this 208 statistic? I think it'd be interesting to hear your take on it! [LINK] People up in arms that it will and I quote "take 208 years" to reach " gender equality" in America, for a number of "reasons"Being concerned about equal representation in Congress and other aspects, I can sort of understand. I mean, our very country was founded on this idea of representation- However, the goal wasn't for an "equality of outcome" scenario where we made up a certain of parliament; it was because there was no real voice or say in the actions of a far away government. These are also the same people who are championing men (or anyone they classified as not women in their statistics, I should phrase it as) making up less than a third of masters degrees: "The U.S. has achieved gender parity across all levels of the education system. Women now earn more than two-thirds of the master's degrees and the majority of doctoral degrees."There's also the fact they're recruiting comedians to help raise awareness for this shit, but between the arguments mentioned above among others, it actually caused me pain trying to pull off the mental gymnastics that would be required to have some of this make sense, that the "stand up comedy" angle wasn't going to make it any better. It definitely doesn't seem like they're looking for an even 50/50 split, or anything in that particular realm of quote equality end quote. I'd love to hear your thoughts on any of the matters they're trying to bring up. Do you think any of these issues actually do have some reasonable merit? (as the vast majority of it sounds like hogwash to me, But what do I know? I'm just a straight white male nerd, a PC gamer of all things; being public enemy 1 is great!)I also wanted to stop by and say between you and ShoeOnHead, life as a "deplorable" has been atleast more humorous- Its helped keep me from being a crazy Flordia-man story due to sheer loss of sanity.So, thanks for that! I used to work in holiday daycare for elementary school aged children. One time I greeted a group of female children as "young ladies", and they rapidly corrected that they weren't ladies, they were girls. I was confused as to which of us was being horribly sexist or ageist . Was I being ageist by accidentally implying that only mature women are entitled to respect? Were they being ageist for the opposite reason? Was I being sexist for genderising them, or were they being sexist for genderising themselves? Then I realised that as a straight white male I was automatically at fault. Then I realised that as a male, I shouldn't be working with children at all because I'm probably a sexual abuser. And then I realised I doubly shouldn't be working with girls, because there's an epidemic of violence against women and girls (and only women and girls) committed by men and boys (and only men and boys), that is caused entirely by a lack of respect of females (any other contributing factors are meaningless). So having come to terms with the fact that I was an ageist , sexist, genderist, female-hating violent sexual abuser who didn't have any respect for any females, I figured I'd better quit. (Disclaimer: Everything after the second sentence is obviously a ridiculous exaggeration.)	Ageist, Sexual	Age - General, Gender - General	6/218	2.752
Yeah the left is most definitely getting crazier and crazier by the moment. For many years as adults we have chosen to properly educate the children about how to properly use their language and how many terms are indeed generic and have no specific reference to any one group of people, but now all of a sudden the left wants to change everything for no true apparent reason other than to twist it into a FAKE sexist or racist comment so they can falsely blame groups they hate for improper racism or sexism that never actually occurred. What I want to know is the etymology of a word. So, that is what I set out to do. The term "guy" or "guys", in its genesis, has nothing to do with gender . It comes from Dutch and German words meaning "ropes". It is nautical in nature. While "guy lines" in English are usually in reference to tents and whatnot, the origination had to with boats. So, when we say "Hey Guys!" We could also be saying, "Hey ropes!" Or, "Hey braided pieces of hemp!" And perhaps that is a bit masculine, because very few women at the time were sailors, but so what? Faggot is a term for a bundle of wood, but also refers to ONLY gay men. We never call Lesbians faggot . If faggot and guy are related to men it is only because men have largely been rulers and many, if not most derogatory slang will be directed towards a ruling class. In this case, the ruling class has been mostly male. So "Guys" became a male term, even though it simply meant "ropes". 1. For a man, addressing a feminist or feminised woman , is more risky than handling toxic waste. Fact.So best thing to do, is avoid feminised women like the plague. Leave them unemployed with their cats. 2. The feminist in the video knows little to nothing about men obviously. I can't count how many times in a group of men, another man has come along and said something like, "OK girls, let's go" or some similar statement in a friendly way. That would be very mild compared to the average ribbing men give each other. But you can't speak like that to a group of men until you have first earned their respect. And you don't earn respect by being a snowflake . Perhaps because men, have actual real problems and discrimination in life and so we just laugh at such things. Apparently actual real serious problems and discrimination is beyond the "lived experience" of your average feminists. 3. "I am powerful" but I am such a snowflake I can't handle you saying "hey guys". Because I'm a feminist. there is a reason we use single gender colloquial terms in speech... TO PREVENT OFFENDING PEOPLE... the whole idea of having to use the right term in the right social situation, just opens the door to people more often using the incorrect term and offending someone...Now, if you were suggesting single, non gendered terms to use in ALL situations, that might be different... but instead the whole movement is insisting on complicating things by creating new terms, rather than steering us towards unified non-gendered terms. I don't even know if trying to put SJW's into the Left/Right debate is possible, because they've become so barking mad over the tiniest thing, they're like something different. And for the record, as a female, and as one that's spent my life in a male dominated field, I agree that this whole 'guys' thing is inane! I called myself a 'JourneyMAN' mechanic before I became a Master, I call EVERYone 'dude, or guys' regardless of gender , I refer to the people in the House and Senate as CongressMEN and when singing for my band, I'm the FrontMAN.... trying to be politically correct by amending such things with gender specific changes not only sounds bizarre, it makes me feel like MY preferences/choices are irrelevant and less important than whomever is offended by the use of common terms, which..... offends ME! Greetings, life form!Personally I feel so lucky to be homosexual . It's so much easier to interact with other men, especially of a similar persuasion. I try to avoid women in case they are feminists. My message to them is don't talk to me about equality, because you clearly don't want it.As a Brit myself, even I have no idea how a guy can be someone of grotesque appearance, unless it is a reference to Guy Fawkes. For those who don't understand this, Guy Fawkes was part of the Gunpowder Plot to blow up Parliament on 5 November 1605 when the king was performing the State Opening, and now the failure of the plot to kill the king is remembered every year with fireworks and a bonfire to burn an effigy of Mr Fawkes on. (Or sometimes, any other hate figure you like.)For a parting shot, I used to manage a small team at work who came from all parts of the world. They all hated all the PC stuff about race and how patronising it is to get special treatment as part of a minority. So I never did in staff appraisals, we just talked over coffee about whether they did a good job, and they loved that.And don't talk to me about team bonding events... the best one our larger team ever did was the day was when we had a huge pile of forms to process, so my manager booked a big meeting room to get it done in, just leaving our secretary to answer the phones. And to get more done, everyone bring food to share so we can have a quick lunch and get back down to the work. OMG it was the best buffet ever. no term hurts anyone unless the individual allows it to hurt them. So, everyone just needs to stop letting random terms of acknowledgment affect their ability to function because they are suddenly the victim of unintended sexism that really isn't a term for with unintended sexism , but a general term as you say. Yes, I have had ladies be offended by me referring to them as such, but most, like being called a lady. As for girls, well, I believe if it is teenagers or someone several years younger, that it can be used, but, not so much for women of similar age . Seriously though, we should take things the other way and use more offensive terms in an endearing way to prove a point. Hey, jackasses how are you doing? Language is just the spoken and written word, but the emotions and meaning behind a word can always change the purpose and even the intent behind a word. Black people have made the n-word an endearing term. I still don't like it and think it should just disappear from our language over time, but at least they made it into something positive from an extreme negative. I don't know, but I guess the way to be noticed these days is to find ways to get everyone to see you as a victim of some sort and create speeches about the most unnecessary and mundane things rather than learning science, math, technology, etc. Communication is important, but so is EQ. These types of people that find the most mundane and inconsequential things to be offensive fail to in their emotional intelligence and are wasting everyone's time and energy on something stupid. Books should be read to learn to better ourselves and understand the world around us better, not find ways to pick apart every little thing others say and do. Women back in the 1930's were not heard? I'm sure that there are MANY husbands who disagree!Taking domestic violence cases out of the equation, and looking at the amiable and happy marriages that took place, yes, women were heard. It was part of a loving husband's duty to represent both his and his wife's wishes/opinions at town meetings, etc.The reality is that it was logistically more difficult for women to attend these events when they were busy rearing children.For example, here in Australia it is compulsory to vote. So I had to drag my 6 week old son off with me to the polling booth, a few years back. I would have GLADLY let my husband vote for me. Also, when you're in the midst of raising children, it can be very easy to go a couple of days without leaving the house. That is often just part of committing to raising a family. But I don't see too many of these women with children. Too busy worrying about someone misgendering them.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/175	0.571

Ok - so basically, "guys" originally referred to multiple human males. Now, as with so many other words, terms, phrases, etc. that were meant exclusively "human male/s", it also refers to any human regardless of sex or gender . But, it is a problem because if it was originally a masculine word. So, from the side notorious for redefining words, words can only mean what they originally meant. OK, so homosexual men, you're no longer "gay". That's not your word. You gotta invent a new one. "Gay" wasn't originally associated with sex or sexuality. Feminists expect men to stare at the ground, and not speak until spoken to. Then when you do speak, know that you are addressing a goddess who is superior to you, and if you do not speak in the proper manner you will be severely punished for your transgression. It is insane as it's an other over the top PC analysis from America which is obsessed with gender and race definitions and victimhood. What's weird is most of the examples used in such arguments are historical by the present generation who has never lived it. Mainly college aged girls who were born after 1995 but bang on about gender roles from most of the 20 century which DON'T exist anymore. I personally hate the term "guys" as it's a shitty yanky term, it's dumb , it's lazy and it's an informal term with little significance . And if terms are such an "issue" when addressing a group, then just use a single greeting such as: hello, good morning, hi. Again most of the world will just say, "only in America ", and laugh. PS.....The term ladies is quite obsolete as many women today are hardly ladies. Maybe they should learn some etiquette first before worrying about PC terminology. Well, that's just an open invitation to me to continue on using words such as "actress" instead of the once PC, all inclusive "actor" and of course, "comedienne" doesn't have to make a comeback in my speech because I have retained it in my spoken and written words, mainly just to piss off those who get offended by...ummm...all sorts of stuff. I probably won't have much use for the word in the future though, unless, of course, Hannah Gadsby makes a sudden career change.All of this gives us serial language offenders licence to revert back to using other words that the snowflake culture has tried to eradicate from our language. Try these on for size: Lioness. Jenny (female jackass). Pea hen. Bitch. Slut (a multiple choice in offensiveness.) It could mean what you think it means, but it could also mean the aforementioned bitch, especially if the slut has had a litter of pups! It was also used to describe slovenly, untidy, dirty and generally disreputable women AND men, as in Chaucer's writing, "Why is thy Lord so sluttish?" [LINK] I know I and many like me, will be severely taken to task over this 'misuse' of language, but I consider myself to be doing, with my words, a service to the greater community by triggering those super-sensitive little babies. A lot of NSW and Queensland are stricken by a terrible drought and if it doesn't rain soon, things are only going to get worse. So, I propose that we all band together and collect all of those feminists' tears and melt all of the snowflakes and, I bet, in no time flat, the flats will be pretty green...up there in Ironbark. Greetings and felicitations, cohorts!So she freely admits "guys" refers to both genders. And admits its a colloquialism. Then goes on to say it's sexist and offensive. She's not offended, but clearly finds it offensive. Feminists say they want equality and to be treated equally, But then bristle at a term that basically puts them on a level field with the group. "Don't lump us in with the men. We want special treatment."I laughed at her little, "I am powerful" nonsense. You can't be too powerful if you get uptight over a common term and think how you're greeted has a direct impact on your "power" or influence. All romance languages have gender for objects, people, etc. My native language (Portuguese) especially so. It is a barrel of laughs, seeing the PC people doing incredible linguistic gymnastics to be PC with language, going to extremes of using English terms but at the same time, local gender articles, defeating the initial purpose of gender free PC. For example in dancing classes, the instructor instead of saying the man (o homem) or the woman (a mulher) to identify the very sexist gender roles in traditional dances, he will use 'o leader' e 'a follower'. For those distracted, the article is still gender specific. I just smile, when it happens.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	6/109	5.505
" Gender " is originally a grammatical term which had nothing to do with sexuality. For example the Greek word for sheep is grammatically neuter but that does not mean there are no male or female sheep. " Gender " has been hijacked from its original use in order for some with an agenda to hoodwink people into believing they are guilty of something which they are not. "Man" in the English language can refer to either human beings in general or to a male in particular; the usage is determined by the context. Of course, determining context might actually require some people to use their head for something other than an ornament sitting on their shoulders. male /masculine terms EMPOWER and EQUALIZE people. female terms are DEROGATORY and passive aggressively insulting and disrespectful and narcissistic.In the same token, men are more likely to be conservative while women are more liberal. But we know the truth. Liberalism itself does not empower people, but it sure as hell liberates one from tradition and rules and constraints. Conservative and tradition actually gives meaning and purpose, and identity, it fills people while liberalism empties people of their culture, identity, and also burden or responsibilities. In yin yang, conservative/rightwing would be filling black , while liberalism/leftwing would be the white void which empties the mind to be open to outside ideas. The problem is today's liberalism has not only emptied itself but holds onto extremely few toxic and self/destructive ideas and behavior. Every damn day this is being proven by the sole fact that majority of the violence , verbal and physical (outside of private setting) has been influenced by the left. And, yes, this comes from a woman who laughs at these crazies because I grew up where I couldn't play certain games on the playground, or certain sports in gym class, or couldn't work certain jobs...all because I was a female. So, to these whiny children, I have to say, "Stop adulating, and grow up! You don't know how good you have it." This is all a way to control free speech; something I hold dear. The idea of a male term being used to address a group of "carbon-based life forms of the homo-sapien species" actually has been around in language for centuries - if not, millennia. I took 5 years of Latin, and one of the first grammar rules I learned was about gender . You wanna know how it works? You refer to women as feminine nouns, males as masculine nouns, and groups of both as neuter nou..OH WAIT, you actually refer to groups of mixed genders as masculine. I'm not sure that this is in and of itself inherently sexist at all. In fact, I believe it's an exaggeration and over analyzation. At the end of the day, what makes your best friend your bestie? Is it the fact that he or she doesn't offend you? Or rather, is it the fact that he or she has your best intentions in mind regardless of any accidentally offensive things they may say. Two things to note off of that: First, language is simply a verbal expression of our own feelings, which means it is A) highly subjective and B) highly interpretable. The language context is exemplified by tone, body language, and attitude. Second, in human interactions, trusting the other's intentions and heart is key to growing any relationship. If you're offended by the words a person chose without realizing that they meant absolutely no harm and was just trying to verbalize feelings (and may have made a mistake, we're all human....or are we?? jk). You might as well get offended because someone wrote your name with a heart on the sand..because sand is coarse and rough..and gets everywhere - all the while ignoring that it's a heart and the intentions are pure. Anyways, that's my 2 cents..err, 2 dollars	Coarse, Gender	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	2/295	0.678

I don't agree with all your points of view, but I certainly do with this one. This "guys" argument is just as flawed today as it was 35 years ago when I first heard it in university. It reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of etymology, and is akin to the "newspeak" habit of genderizing language regardless of the roots of the words. Another good (failed) example of doing this is using "herstory" in place of "history" — a word that has absolutely nothing to do with gender . Message to the language police: most English words have roots in other languages, or are sometimes even directly borrowed from another language. A word you think is gender -based (other than obvious gender pronouns) almost certainly isn't. The next time you see (probably a feminist) try to turn etymology on its ear, find out how many languages they speak. I'll wager they only speak one. I always wonder how feminists like this act in countries like Italy and Spain, where the language itself requires the kind of language they're terrified of. The male is superlative in Spanish and Italian(well, Latin, I don't know about Italian but to my understanding it's the closest living relative to Latin, so shot in the dark) so when addressing a group of mixed gender the male is the correct form. The feminine is exclusive to female exclusive groups, and they literally don't have a gender neutral form for many words. Well, they didn't when I was in school, but God knows now. If it has the word male, guy, man or another word that is used to describe a man it is by default sexist according to these women and men.We do not call them hu"man" we call them people...No we call them human!It's like saying you can't call our species Homo Sapien because we aren't all gayI also came across the term LatinX because some idiots made up that Latino is inherent male.. No it isn't!And if you want to be super pissy about it you could simply cut it down to Latin or call it Latinus (which is non gender based in latin)What this girl is advocating is that we as a society should put more weight on words and give them more power (even though she's trying to also claim that they shouldn't have more power).Words are words and they shouldn't have so much power.They should be easily sidestepped or ignored if you do not like the words.It is really that simple.We should grow to become more resilient to words, not fear them more.Also, Sydney, it would hilarious if your middle name started with a J. Jeffery Williams It is worse in Western Europe for sure. I have not been lately, but it was getting like this to some degree when I was there.I was in the Army stationed in Germany and a few more places. A lot of the German guys in their Army we worked with were totally spoiled weak soy boys, real tall and lean but total wusses. Being gay was very common and normal there. You could go to a skating rink, or a club, and see lots of women skating together with their arms around each other or dancing together..You know how when people dance sometimes someone cuts in to dance, usually a man cutting in to dance with a hot chick , sometimes a gal cuts in to dance with a man, etc.. Not in Germany. I have seen women cut in to dance with other women, when they had a strong clean cut jock type US soldier they could be with.. but no, the chick wanted the other chick ! Most of the single gals I met there had no sense of romance, they were cold and stiff. They either were not interested or they would take you home to have sex as if it meant absolutely nothing like renting a movie or something.. I met a couple German chicks that were very American influenced and they were a lot better, more fun and regular. This was between 10-15 years ago, I was over there for almost 5 years, in 3 different places. . Just recently an older normal old school straight couple that lives near me went to England for vacation.. I asked them how it was.. the first thing the wife said was.. "I saw a lot of men that looked and acted like women, and a lot of women that looked and acted like men, we wont be going back there" She definitely was not saying it as if she thought it was a good thing, that is for sure! That was her first and basically only comment about it, so it must have been a strong bad impression. The soy must be strong there now! I guess I'm learning that language is all about perception and less about intent. And, as a consequence, I have been offending women (some women) all of my life. Being 3/4 of a century old , my formative years were very gender specific (guys were guys and girls were girls) and we didn't mix the terms because it just wasn't accurate to do so. But, as feminism grew in stature among us, we were cautioned that we couldn't use terms like girls, or gals, or ladies because they were offensive. So, what were the approved terms of greeting for women? Nobody really knew and terms like "guys" became quasi-acceptable because we didn't have an alternative word. (Note: Until recently, I didn't know what cisgender referred to. Much to my surprise, I was one.) But, due to my age , I have never referred to a mixed group of men and women as "guys" because, despite dictionary secondary references to "person" , it just doesn't feel right to me. So, if I must greet a mixed group of XX and XY humans, I merely say hello (or some other greeting) and avoid using any colloquial reference to their collective gender identities. This may be more formal, but it works for me. Keep up the good work. I enjoy your channel.	Age, Gender, Nobody, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	5/217	2.304

Here's an easy one to debunk. The gender wage gap in the Medical Field. And I am sure this applies to 99.999 of all job and career fields out there. For one. The BLS reports that, pay very close attention here, when it comes to "Medical and Health Services Management", that is a mouth full and can be confusing, "Medical and Health Services Management", women make only a mere "77.0 of the 'median' weekly earnings of men". Let's break this down. Shall we? Okay. So. When it comes to the term "Medical and Health Services Management". This includes ALL "MANAGEMENT" keyword. An RN (Registered Nurse) is not typically going to be paid the same as a PhD (Doctorate of Philosophy). A PhD takes anywhere between 4 to even 12 more years of study, and the presentation of your own theory, hypothesis, research, etc. You must put in a lot more money, a lot more time, and a lot more intelligence to get a PhD. A RN on the other hand only requires 4 years of College. This is at the Bachelor's Level. So, the normal time span to get a Bachelor's Degree is 4 years. To get a Master's, the next step up, takes 6 to 8 years. To get a Doctorate or PhD, it can take a total anywhere from 8 to 16 years, or more! It all depends on the person, their intelligence level, how much time they have to put into it versus work time, and financial standing. As of now, roughly 91 of nurses are female. As of now, only roughly 33 of Physicians are female. You see where this is going? (It doesn't take a genius to see this.) If 91 of nurses (which are lower paid, obviously, duh) are female and 33 of Physicians are female, then it comes to say that there will be more females as RN, which are management positions, than Physicians, which are management positions as well. So, therefore, there will be a wage gap in the management department, so to speak. This is a no-brainer. So, what you are telling me, is that by putting forth more time and effort, earning a higher degree and therefore being in a better position to be paid more and be in a more responsible position than that of a female. Having more time lost at work, having earned less and gained more debt along the way. Telling me that I must forego my paycheck that I have earned, to an RN that only spent 4 years, maybe 5, if they are slow for whatever reason, so that the mythical "Gender Wage Gap" can be filled and equalled out. Then, you have lost your mind. Here's an idea for you idiots out there. Grow up, go to school the same amount of time, earn the same level of degrees, earn the same pay. That's it. Not hard. And quit trying to force BS down my throat! Stupid beta lunatics. RN Job Description found on Google Search:In general, a registered nurse job description includes monitoring, recording and reporting symptoms or changes in patient's conditions. ... This is a word that's supposed to be so offensive to them, yet it's somehow okay when they use it as a greeting, but God forbid anyone else say it because then it's bad. I've never understood why it's okay for one group to use a word, just not anyone else. If it's so bad then why say it AT ALL? So apparently it's okay depending on the color of one's skin. NoobisYT Sure...and in taking it back you have robbed it of its power...but if it's powerless why restrict its use? It's either okay for everyone to use the word, because it no longer bothers you, or it's not okay for anyone to use it. The fact is that certain parts of the black community wants to have their cake and eat it. They want to throw the word around like they have taken it back, whilst reserving the right to be horribly offended when anyone that isn't black even utters it barely within earshot jokingly between friends. Of course these people don't realise that if they stopped being bothered by it the fuckwits that use it maliciously would eventually stop using it and the word would be completely robbed of all power and could enter back into the common vernacular as the harmless thing it is; a mouth sound. It could even be used as a sign of respect for a black individual, thereby completely inverting its original meaning...now that would be taking it back. MeatSafeMurderer I'm not trying to fight you or anything, I'm just trying to address your question. The reason why white people cannot say the N word is because it was white people who used that word to oppress black people to begin with. Black people taking ownership of it takes the power away, but the second a white person uses that word in regard to a black person - you're giving the word it's original power back.Can I ask why you even want to use it in the first place? I'm not black myself, but there is no circumstance in which I've ever wanted to use the N word, much less say it in reference to a black person.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	5/120	4.167

NoobisYT you have no claim neither to the suffering nor victories, nor shame of people who came before you. "Revenge racism " is just as bad as the original racism it is supposed to be a revenge to. I'd say black on white racism is a bigger problem than white on black racism in America right now. Either the word itself is or isn't offensive. If the word itself isn't offensive, which well, clearly it isn't given that it's socially acceptable for black people to use nigger like it's confetti at a child's birthday party, then it isn't offensive for everyone. And context actually matters. Which, whoopty fucking doo, since when has it become ok to take anything out of context? But, offensive or not, it's definitely better for everyone to have the right to both offend and be offended than it is to police what people can say and think. The issue with censorship is very simple - there shouldn't be a single person on the planet that you can trust to decide what you, an adult, can and cannot hear, see, say or think. No one can be qualified for that job. Of course, one can argue that most people aren't responsible enough to handle their own rights and freedoms. That kind of train of thought leads to dystopian regimes - such as the communist regime. You can't have both censorship and freedom. If you relieve yourself of the responsibility of being offended, you're putting your personal freedom in the hands of others. Nigger is from niger/nigre which is from Nigeria. It has geographical roots. The word negro is a word that means the color 'black' in multiple languages. Nothing about them is literally offensive other than the 'hateful feepees' of the 'racists' using them. Crackers on the other hand, accuses all white people of being oppressors or white slave owners by being passive aggressive and putting whites on the pedestal as 'higher beings' with narcissism who crack the whip because 'whites enjoy taking over shit with their authority complex'.And today blacks use the word 'nigga' which isn't even a real word, and derived from nigger just so they can have an alternative word to nigger so they can have 'some' pride and/or keep to their roots but not have to feel any shame while sharing comradarie (for lack of better wording). It's absolutely hypocritical of blacks to claim 'nigger' is something akin to the worst word/name/label to be called when it has no meaning, and where there are far worse terms than nigger. Nigger doesn't even refer to them as slaves, not one bit. The only people who feel that way, were TAUGHT to feel that way by SJW libtards hellbent on teaching minorities to hate white people, and to teaching white people to hate white people while seething with hate and misplaced self-guilt. And then my sociology professor who's biracial claims its only okay for blacks to call each other nigger BECAUSE they're black because its THEIR thing but not when called nigger by nonblacks. THE FUCK IS THAT SUPPOSED TO MEAN. The word chink could be applied to me, but to the asians who never set foot in the west, that word means NOTHING to them. If you called an African a nigger in their own country do any of them even know what that word means? And even if they did.....its horrendously illogical to EXPECT them to be offended.Culturally today, a nigger is described as someone who belongs in the slums, an uneducated and/or uncivilized troublemaker. People make fun of hillbillies, whites, and christians. ALL THE TIME. Always ridiculing their every aspect. But as soon as you use a term for blacks/hispanics, you're suddenly hitler. This is a double standard rife with lies and fake truth from a fake point of view from a fake unhinged reality by the liberal left.	African, Black, Chink, Negro, Nigger, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Nationality - Chinese	14/394	3.553

Yara Flahat Okay so to recap, it's not okay to say the N-word . . . depending on the color of one's skin.... buuuuut if it's the "right color" then it's all well & fine to say it how you want, the way you want, when you want, as MUCH as you want. Wow, how convenient. It again illustrates who the real racists are. It would be different if there were anyone alive in the USA today who had been a slave, or anyone who had owned slaves at any point, but none of us fit either of these categories. There's NO slavery, there's NO oppression, all people can vote, all people can go to school, all people can own a home, all people can own a business, all people can earn the same wage (provided they WORK for it), so where's the oppression and why am I constantly reminded of "slave ownership" as if having white skin somehow implicates me for it? I've never owned a slave nor have my parents or their parents. If the N-word is soooooo offensive then why do some black people use it AT ALL? Nothing you have said justifies anyone uttering this word, yet we still live in a world where one group can and one group CAN'T . . . depending on the color of your skin of course, and that's the bottom line here. Ones skin color allows one group to do something another group is all but forbidden from doing.	Black, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black	2/250	0.8
greenrefrigerator You're completely missing the point. It's about historical context, have some empathy man. It's extremely unfortunate that white people enslaved black people to begin with, and then to go as far as to create a word to dehumanize them. And here you are 200 years later complaining that people are going to (deservingly) call you a racist if you use that word in white skin. Just don't use it. Nobody can stop you from using it, but don't be surprised if you say it around a black person and receive a punch in the face. Yara Flahat yes it was wrong to enslave another race . No matter what that race may be. But the word wasn't created to put them down. It was used to refer to them because the original colonists believed they were ignorant of our society and beliefs. Which in the beginning they were. It has since turned into a racial slur that some hateful people use and I personally don't condone its use. Especially in that connotation.	Race	Ethnicity - General	2/76	2.632

Yara Flahat Seems you're missing the point as well. I'm not saying I use the N-word or want to use it. Personally, I think it's reprehensible for ANYONE to use it. I'm merely saying it's rather two-faced and hypocritical for black people to say how "offensive" the N-word is only to use it so much themselves. If it's that offensive then they shouldn't say it, EVER. So while you're accusing me of having no empathy, I've been saying all along the N-word shouldn't be used at all by anyone. You can't tell one group not to use it while you can use it as much as you want. Real life simply doesn't work that way.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/115	0.87
ryudragonlord1 ryudragonlord1 Look man, you're really misinformed, no offense. The word was absolutely used to refer to them as 'less than' human. It was a term of ownership and possession. Read up on it.Regardless, slavery is bad whatever the race , you're right. But if we're talking about specific historical context, black people were enslaved by white people. Full stop, period. You can't use generalized statements about slavery being 'bad to everyone' to separate white people from this history. It's in their ancestral origins, if we want to move forward in society, it's really really inappropriate for white people specifically (because this is heavily context important) to use that word. I know you don't like having your language restricted, and I can't resist you, but I'm asking you to have some understanding of what that word means and who used it for why, and why it would make you a better person to NOT use it. greenrefrigerator I'm not saying you can't, I'm saying you shouldn't. I'm not ever going to tell black people they can't use a word that was once used to degrade them. That's THEIR call. Yara Flahat I am not responsible for what a few bad people did hundreds of years ago, and I'm not responsible for what other bad people after that did either, nor do I share in any guilt they should feel for being bad because I am not a bad person. None of the people who would be offended were slaves, nor were their parents, grandparents or great-grandparents, they have had equal rights under the law for nearly sixty years and racism against blacks in general has decreased to the point where we actually had a black President. Yara Flahat " Black people taking ownership of it takes the power away, but the second a white person uses that word in regard to a black person - you're giving the word it's original power back."You missed my point. You don't take the power back by restricting its use. In restricting its use you're only tacitly admitting the word still holds all the power it once did. When a white person uses the N-word to refer to a black person it is, in large part, the black individual's decision how they interpret that. Words hold no power over us except that which we let them. It is not the white person saying the N-word that gives it its power; it's the people bothered by its use. They are the ones allowing the word to continue to have power over them. If instead the black community repurposed the word and allowed anyone to use it in reference to black people as a way of denoting respect, not disrespect, the very meaning of the word would change and in the process it would be completely robbed of any power it once held. Once it was actually robbed of that power racists would stop using it. They would have to move on to new words, which could be dismantled and repurposed in exactly the same way; effectively robbing racist fucknards of any shred of power they still hold once and for all.	Black, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	7/240	2.917
MeatSafeMurderer I see your point, but at the end of the day, how the word should be used and the meaning of it, isn't something you or I can dictate. It's the black community's decision. I'm not gonna tell them what the right way to use the N word is, and neither should you. Their oppression = their choice how they handle it. It leaves a bad taste in my mouth to picture a white person 'teaching' the black community about how they should respond to the N word. It's up to them. If you want to be an ally, listen to them. If they're asking you not to use it, then don't use it. It's a respect thing.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	2/119	1.681
