sadly there will still be a gender earnings gap because of female privilege of assuming her future husband will make as much as her at least so she only needs to major in something that will give her a median income to provide half of what she thinks her family needs in income; and man continue to assume there is a reasonable chance that his wife doesn't like her work and wants to stay at home with the kids so he needs to major in something that can handle 100 of the family's financial needs; if i was a woman i would have majored in something easier and more interesting even if it meant a 50 drop in pay since that is all i would need for my contribution to the household income	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/133	1.504
How in this world is the Economist allowed to publicly say these things and not get viciously lynched by the Feminazi regime!? Must be a small glitch in the matrix. I am certain, the Economist will deeply regret this very objective article study, and go right back to spewing vicious misandric propaganda. Just a glitch in the matrix, nothing to see here. Men are evil oppressors. Down with Western culture and destroy all men with a special emphasis on destroying straight white male. Yeah, kill all western men, and western culture altogether. First, black people go through the same things women and females go through, including dealing with the wage gap, black people get paid less than white people doing the same jobs, WHY DOESN'T ANYBODY EVER ADDRESS THAT?!!!! Second, as we all know, women and females have LOTS of double standards and advantages over men and males but we ALWAYS complain about the "double standards" of men and males and the "advantages" that they have over women and females, WHY DOESN'T ANYBODY EVER ADDRESS THAT?!!!! Third, as we all know, there are jobs that women and females do that men and males do but get paid less than men and males get paid and there are jobs that men and males do that women and females do but get paid less than women and females get paid BUT NOBODY EVER CALLS OUT WOMEN AND FEMALES WHEN THEY GET PAID MORE THAN MEN AND MALES DOING THE SAME JOB AS MEN AND MALES!!!! Fourth, and last but not least, Law & Order: Special Victims Unit, literally the most popular show and the longest running show on television, had the duo Benson and Stabler, and the man who played Detective Stabler left because the woman playing Detective Benson was getting paid more than him, you didn't hear women and females whining about the gender wage gap then. Just saying.	Black, Gender, Nobody, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	5/226	2.212
The gender pay gap is only real when the statistics take into account the gender , however those statistics don't take into account the job,the time worked,how long you have been in the job or the experience of the profession. Woman and men are earning approximately an equal amount when you take into account the same jobs and time worked. Some people say even when those statistics are only taking the gender into account it's because woman aren't accepted into higher paying jobs,that is absolute bull, men and woman have equal opportunities, but there will never be an equal outcome,not because of sexism ,because of the natural choices each sex makes. So in conclusion woman are pretty much equal to men in western culture.	Gender, Sex, Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	9/122	7.377

a lot of women choose to take a few years out to bring up the kids to kindergarten. If more men want to do that then great but the last word in this video was 'then fewer women would be held back'.. Why don't these pay gap warriors ever discuss a study that shows the pay gap between men and women who are in the same age range, same education, same years in a particular job with the same job position(s) and same experience in the job market. There is no pay gap with those people. Anecdotaly certainly. But not systemic.	Age	Age - General	1/59	1.695
Woman on average are NOT as ambitious as men. Men are raving psychopaths and risk-takers and only the craziest amongst us are the ones who make it to the very top. Thousands of years of necessary gender roles which are now becoming obsolete will not just vanish from our biology overnight. In the meantime, how about we try a little harder to get along?!? How do you explain childless women who are in exactly same position as their male counterparts, have slightly more experience and slightly more responsibility, equal education, equal age , work equal hours but still earn less? Are they not demanding enough? Just thinking, because i know quite a few and would like to know why that is.	Age	Age - General	1/56	1.786
Maybe, it's because when asked what they think they should get paid at the interview, woman actually ask for less. So guess what? They are paid what they ask for....less.	Woman	Gender - General	1/30	3.333
I figured it out how to get through to you. Take out the dangerous jobs nobody wants to do that men do that women don't, then add all the job positions men and women do adding them all up to get 100 and 100 showing they make the same amount for the same jobs positions. Next show the dangerous choices of work that men do that women choose not to after you figure out it is the same pay, it will show from men's choices of dangerous jobs that it adds up to 14 for men to who choose dangerous jobs women choose not to do leaving it out of the 100/100 equation, let the 14 set off to the side by men choosing to do dangerous jobs women choose not to do by averages of pay. Do not add this to 100 because it is choices of work vs pay. Now wait for it..	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/155	0.645

Look up the link there is no wage gap , narrator is a woman and the first question she asks. If women get paid 77 cents to every dollar men make why are companies not only hiring woman . Biggest cost of any production plant is wage	Woman	Gender - General	2/46	4.348
We have a very similar problem here in America. I am a woman , have worked hard all my life, and now own a company where we employ men and woman . I looked at the data here in the US for actual full time employees, and the local job boards and was happy to find I could save about 20 getting women to work instead of having to pay men. It wasn't like I'd get any more value out of paying men either, so why would I hire more men. This helps women too in the end, since they are more likely to get employed, because they are cheaper. Trump came in at just the right time, as my retail business has grown to the point where this helps a lot in terms of my profits too. There is new legislation coming into place that will block the Equal Right Amendment from ever passing, which will allow employers to profit by better margins, and women to benefit by having more opportunities. This is good for everyone, and in fact, because many of my employees wind-up working another job, I don't have to pay all the benefits and related overhead. Again, what's good for me as the employer in terms of lower cost women means I can take advantage of more women employees. In my industry women generally do not push for as much time off, or a raise nearly as often. In fact, I had to fir several men over the past few years who wanted raises when they were already getting 15-25 more than my girls. Also, the women wind up learning more skills by working a second or other jobs, and as such, I find that they have more breadth and depth of experience than the men. So note to other women— SHUT UP, before you ruin it for all of us by trying to get equal wages.	Woman	Gender - General	2/319	0.627

Already women dominate the medical sphere but men, physics and maths. Within these fields, 30 of jobs are held by women (each of them) more and mkre women are going to higher paying jobs. The cause of this lower payment is due to women CHOSING lower paying jobs. In the furture we will see more women going up the career lader. They are changing their choices. There isn't "the future is female" as it undermines equality but instead we will see women having equality with men. However we can't know for sure what women chode as they are individuals not statistics. Lots more men die at work compared to women. When are we going to see a drive to get more women into dangerous jobs like working on oil rigs, heavy construction etc? Or do they only want equality in the "more desirable" fields such as science?If women want to get rid of the gender wage gap you have a few choices1. Choose to get the same job position as a male whos wage you wish to match, rather than something that's just slightly similar (i.e cleaners and janitors are two different things)2. Don't have children. If you don't have children you're not going to have any more time away from work than male colleagues so you won't end up with less experience or less opportunities to do overtime and achieve performance based bonus. If a woman takes a year away from work to bring up children, when she returns anyone who didn't have time off and started at the same time as her will now have 1 year more experience which may be beneficial when promotions come up3. If not having kids like option 2 is something you can't live with then have a kid, take the minimal possible amount of time off, then go out to work and earn money to support your family and instead let the father take the time off and look after the kid and you support them both.The problem is lots of women want the perks and benefits of the way males sometimes earn more, but they don't want the extra responsibility that comes with them.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	2/267	0.749

There are millions of variations due to the different job types and age groups and it swings both ways with some favouring men and some favouring women, the biggest problem is when calculated overall they don't count for hours worked with the majority of overtime being predominately men and that two thirds of the part time workers are women which inflates the figures to falsely prove their agender. As stated it is illegal to pay anyone less for doing the same Job. What modern feminists want is to cherry pick the high paying jobs for women regardless of if they can do it or not as well as their male counterparts. You don't see feminists pushing for women to be equally represented in the high risk and sometimes low pay industries, that are dominated by men causing the death at work rate to be 97 male.	Age	Age - General	1/146	0.685

The ONLY reasons why a woman would ever be paid less than a man is because she has less hours, less experience, less education and a completely different job title and tasks. Ultimately if a woman has the same job title and duties as a man and their both on salary and not commission then they are paid equally. If a woman and a man have the same job but get paid from commission then the ONLY reason why a man would ever get paid more is because he busted his ass more made more sales. WAGE GAP = Urban Legend. I don't think it's just that females choose to be teachers and nurses, they are often encouraged or pushed to do that. Plus I think some people might think twice about a woman being qualified to work in construction, mines, tech, executive, pilot, and other male dominated jobs. I worked male dominated jobs and some people thought I was one of the clients not the employee. Plus women might face second guessing because people assume she might have a baby or might have children even though not all women have babies or children. Plus why should teachers make less. They do work outside the classroom like preparing lessons and grading and even after school plus they provide a valuable service which is educating our next generation so they become productive citizens and we have a robust workforce in the future. And I thought nurses do make good money so I'm confused about it stating officers make more. I know one nurse who was able to go on several trips and is a single mother. Another one owned a big house and had 4 children. Also I don't see anything wrong with a woman having a baby. Having children have their benefits and I think it's good that women spend more time with their children so that they can raise them good to become productive citizens with good morals and values. I do agree staying out of work would keep your earning potential the same or even decrease it depending on what field you work in. You would just have to accept it as a mother. In the West, women generally chose the job they want. Nobody is stopping them from studying engineering. Companies are so keen to be diverse they hire every female engineer who applies and quickly promote them to management positions. But, many women simply don't want these jobs. Gender wage gap doesn't exists. A gender earning gap on the other hand does exist. There is no evidence are that proves a wage gap. All these statistics being thrown out by the hard left compare the salaries of full time working males and females and don't take into account how much overtime was worked, the position, or years in the position. Men earn more for several reasons, the choose work that usually has higher risk and demand. For example, working away from home, working copious amounts of over time, being in actual full time positions. Women tend to work less hours, gravitate to working cushier jobs, and hold more part time positions, and usually end up having children which forces them to take less hours and sets them back from growing in a position because they can't put in the hours to move up. If women want to earn as much as men then it's simple, work the jobs that we do, work the professions that have a high death rates, go be Powerline technicians, iron workers, roofers, truck drivers, I encourage you. But no most women want to be nurses, work as office admins, or be hair dressers. Your choice in careers are your fault, if you want equal earnings then earn it. For example I worked a few years in banana farms doing very hard work in the field carrying banana bunches from the tree to the trailer 90 kg banana bunches all day. Then getting to the shed and lifting them up onto the chains to hang them then de-hand each Bunch which was quite physical as well. Now I never met a woman in the 6 years, working on all different banana farms, a single woman doing these physical jobs. Gender equality is desirable - yes - if it means equality of outcome. But we cannot guarantee equality of outcome. When you leave men and women to make their own choices, you will not get equal outcome. If women want equal pay, they should be talking about making different choices and taking different jobs in higher paying fields. They need to take equal responsibility and consequences. Women can take dangerous jobs on oil rigs, working in mines, construction, as police officers, etc. They can work the longer hours and overtime and fight for the executive positions that pay the six figure salaries. There is no gender pay gap.	Gender	Gender - General	1/6	16.667

When I applied for a management position at the company I work for, the bosses doing the hiring asked my fellow coworkers which of 'us' they would prefer to get the management position. By 'us', I mean, they asked about all the male applicants and none of the female applicants. None of my coworkers were even aware that I had actually applied. I had told them, but they had assumed that I meant I was planning to apply, but never did, as my name was not listed as an applicant. Afterwards, I spoke to my coworker who had been given the management position. He was shocked that my hourly pay was less than the state's max threshold for overtime pay. Even though he had 2 years less experience in the job, he had been paid above that threshold. After 5 raises, I am still making $1.75 per hour less than that threshold. This is against labor laws that are meant to guarantee pay parity for men and women working the same job with the same experience. There is a loophole to that law, though, as proof of violating the law needs to be shown on the company's pay records, and the company chose to 'not keep any records of that sort of information'. There is a pay gap, and it's not that women simply choose to be paid less. It's that many company's in the US have chosen to not record key pay information, the legal system relies on letting companies self-regulate and self-report violations of labor law (like allowing a child to rat themselves out if they have their hand in the cookie jar - kids aren't going to get themselves in trouble by ratting themselves out and neither are companies), and chalking it all up to women having babies or being overly emotional or just plain lying, even though that's not the case. I really do miss the military's payscale. Paygrade (basically, rank), time in service (basically, experience), allowances (annual set pay for purchasing new uniforms), and special pay (hazard pay for deployment to combat zones, etc.) were factored in; gender was not. Women with the same rank, time in service, and who were in the same situation (both located in a combat zone or both assigned to the same duty station, etc.) were paid the same amount that men were. It's not hard to set up a system like that civilian-side, but until it becomes mandatory for companies to track and report pay records or it becomes possible to admit worker's pay stubs as evidence of pay disparity when any group reports a company for labor law violations. As far as the MGTOW/men's rights denial that the pay gap exists when women demand fair and equal pay for equal work in the same job with the same experience, I find it odd that so many of them are upset about women in porn getting paid more than men. Honestly, using a pay system like the military pay system would fix that, too, yet the MGTOWs, men's rights advocates, top company executives, and shareholders who fight against admitting a pay gap exists in any other job have been against implementing any such system.	Gender	Gender - General	1/535	0.187

Well, it can be confusing especially to women and most women aren't very bright unfortunately- yes, across the board women do earn less, but that is because of the EFFORT GAP. Women are incredibly lazy: 70 of women only major in liberal arts trash, get worthless degrees, call in sick twice as much as men, mostly work part time, do less than half the work as men in any field, do not take risks & if they want to be in top positions, women need to learn what accountability is like a man, because no company is going to put someone in charge who refuses to be accountable & who can even remember the last time a woman admitted she was wrong about anything? I fail to see any problem with the situation. So women choose different kinds of jobs than men: so what? Why must that be 'equalized'? Why are people saying we must have 'equality of outcome'? Men and Women are different – thats ok.....equally valued...but different. Should we force people, by some kind of tyranny or social engineering, into careers against their desire or calling? Ex. must we be 50/50 split in careers such as engineers , nurses, steel workers, and fire fighters? I think not. I've heard the natural ratios in careers such as nursing and engineering - if people are left to their own desires/interests/aptitude - is something like 10:1.I'll say that the traditional mother (stay-at-home or work part-time) is an extremely undervalued thing today. This article suggests that women giving any more attention or effort to children/family than men is an obstacle to 'gender pay equality'. And suggesting that we must close this gap in the name of 'being progressive' is a frightening prospect. (sarcasm: Geeeee....what a burden child raising is for natural families. If only we could put all children over the age of 3 months into the hands of qualified state-supervised professionals, then we could achieve full equality....what an accomplishment that would be). As someone who has no interest in childcare let me say equality in earnings was reached in the 1970's. With regards senior positions there are a number of reasons. Women often pull the drawbridge up behind them and I have seen this so many times. Also a study by the Harvard Business Review found women did not want more senior roles due to the extra stress and responsibility. In my last job the only woman there liked to finish around 3.30pm as she had family commitments whereas I wouldn't leave until 6.30 to 7 and later at busy times. In more senior positions you are expected to work more hours and more hours leads to more responsibility. That just suits men better than women as the majority of men are driven by their work life and not their home life. It is unlikely this will ever change as it is part of our personalities and just one of the things which makes men different from women and there isn't anything wrong with that. One of my friends as he earned less than his partner initially agreed to take time off to mind the baby but after a few weeks she was missing the baby and he went back to work and they cut down and managed and did the same when the second baby was born. The majority of Women have a bond with their children that the majority of men just do not have. He could not wait to get back to work whereas she struggled with the idea of being away from her children. I expect more from The Economist. Even More or Less shot down this earnings gap saying when you adjust for role taken, seniority, qualifications it just wasn't there. Market forces determine salaries and external childcare in society is viewed as less important than being Sergio Aguero or Bill Gates. That is because those industries whether through high margins in technology or gate and tv appearance receipts in Football there is a lot more money flowing around than in social work and men tend to work in higher valued fields and women in lower paid industries often with more security such as state funded positions. This is down to choice. Nearly always in engineering roles the candidates are 3 men. Why? Engineering is male dominated. Turn this around apply for a HR position and the candidates will likely be 3 women. This proves like it or not there are male and female positions. Keane a random teen I have done some research, and you are right about part of the things in Italy. But I'm from America, so things are a little different since the cultures are too. So any evidence that is given, could be countered back because of reasons. In America, things are pretty equal between both genders. There is only a little sexism between the two. I would say, feminists are not stupid, but I do not agree with what they say. I believe in all gender equality in each country. I'm sorry if I'm saying crap, but I'm just typing what my mind says makes sense. It's usually wrong, but that's besides the point. I'm better at math and things like that. Not social interaction. Keane a random teen 1.) 15 of construction workers are undocumented. It's easier for women to get those jobs when they're being paid under the table. I'm sure it's more than the number you found. 2.) The ratio doesn't matter, and you're putting words in my mouth. I said the women who are already in those fields, do their own heavy lifting, not that we do the majority of it. When we're given a job, we do it. THAT is what I was saying. Men are the ones insisting on doing it for us, sometimes aggressively. 3.) I told you I have proof, but you ignored me and the other point I made in favor of irrationally inflating men's abilities and calling women inferior. 4.) YOUR BODIES are NOT superior Women have better endurance, more agility, we handle the heat better, have better balance. All very important in construction depending on your occupation. You're also comparing the best men have to offer to the rest of us. How is that fair? Even if IQ was a good way to measure intelligence, pretty sure Stephen Hawking said it. "Those who boast about their IQ are losers." Men are not more intelligent than women in general. Come back to Earth. 5.) The kind of work I do is residential repairs. Sometimes commercial, and I, nor anyone I've ever worked with, was required to lift over 100 pounds. Which, if you remember that women are ALSO able to build muscle the more they work, and that the average American woman can lift at least 80, isn't a problem. I also feel like you think men, in jobs that DO require a lot of strength (because knowledge is more important in most occupations) are lugging around 200 pounds all by themselves, without the help of other people or machines. Keane a random teen Do. You. Want. Proof? That is NOT common knowledge, it's common bias for men who don't know what women's actual advantages are. If you think strength or speed is superior to endurance or agility, then that's your opinion. An opinion is not fact.Men do not have more endurance. No matter how many times you say it, that will not be the truth. There is no evidence men have more, but some that says women do. And it makes more sense if you know anything about our physiology. Men do better in most sports, because sports were designed based off their strengths. They do not do better in extreme endurance sports, or any sport dealing with balance or flexibility. We have longer, and more elastic muscles. Our joints and ligaments are more easily moved. We have more energy to burn. You're in denial. The vid does not make reference to the extra money men earn when they work while women have children is spent on their families, that is the children that the women stop working to have. Or is it the norm that women have & raise children on their own? While that happens the overwhelming majority have 2 parents who decide for themselves how to prioritise earnings and childcare. This usually results in men working, and trying to maximise their careers or overtime to best support their family responsibilities and women focusing on maintaining a good home environment. I know couples where they do the opposite or do both at different times. I'm also told that childcare, without tax relief in the uk, often costs more that can be earned after tax by mother returning to work. There are mothers who do this anyway as they wish to be active but choosing to stay at home is a reasonable option. Much will come down to personal circumstances of the people involved and their priorities. The repeated portrayal of relationships between men and females particularly involving children as competitive rather than complementary is distorting. Broadly speaking , women leave the workforce to bear and probably raise children; men stay in work and work hard to earn more money to spend on their families. Variations on this can and do occur by the couple managing their lives as they see fit. The other portrayal as women as too timid to ask for a pay rise or assert themselves in meetings is nothing like my experience. A good colleague is someone who helps get the job done, make or female. An overly assertive or timid colleague is usually a liability, male or female. Also, if women are pursuing careers as the men are, then they will compete for the promotions available. If more men are at work it seems probable that more men will be promoted. But suitability for any particular role is more down to individual ability and fit for that role.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/339	0.295

Although we don't live together, me and my girlfriend both work as IT Directors for technical firms here in Chicago (at different locations though) and we both bring in $194,000 a year (which is pretty damn good). We both have Master's Degrees in Computer Science and we both love what we do very much. I commend & applaud her because she's worked so hard to get where she is today and her supervisor gave her an immense pay raise (my boss also gave me a huge pay raise as well). She deserves it. We're not jealous of each other at all since both of our salaries are very equal (our expenses are first priority, then the fun stuff comes later lol). However, there will always be jealousy and resentment from most husbands or boyfriends because back then, the men were the main breadwinners and made more than women, but today, women earn way more money than men, and there's nothing wrong with that at all, as long as they don't hold it over their spouses' heads. Dee Ray as a woman I can say, nobody is stopping us from having those jobs, psychologically women are more prone to nurturing and that is simply scientific and not sexist, yes there may be more men in STEM fields, that is only because men are more prone to going for logical jobs ,that isn't an opinion,it's an actual fact. Woman are more prone to taking jobs such as nursing and teaching and being a stay at home mother because psychologically there are more prone to it and they have a different chemical balance which makes them better at nurturing then men. None of what I'm saying is sexist it is facts. Muh sexism ." because sexism requires intent. I theorize that it has to more to do with culture than anything else. Why? Because the jobs american culture traditionally has placed on women are far fewer in number than jobs that are traditionally placed on men. Thus, there is going to be way more supply than demand for those jobs, and that leads to lower wages for those jobs.I come to this conclusion because this is not a consistent wage gap world wide and it varies differently from country to country, thus it must be culture rather than some global patriarchy .It is not sexism but merely its specter, something that will be eroded away with time as more and more women break out into non traditional career paths. The communists used them to destroy the western family, so the government would turn into the new father. If you want to understand feminism, read The communist manifesto by Karl Marx. Bill Donoso. The essiantailly question is (and feel free to disagree with this) that the main thing that drives people (in the west) is meaning and what gives meaning to our lives. It could be that experiencing the growth of a new human being inside you is so meaningful that ones value structure is fundimentaly reorientated, the pursuit of a high end carrier might loose its motivating factor. But nothing negative has happened.You hear Farthers talk about that same reorientation but in different ways.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/85	1.176
Thanks for the response! If I'm getting this right, you're saying that the average woman gets more meaning from giving birth to a child after 9 1/2 months than the average man gets from that birth. Because of that, it is more likely for women to prefer the newfound meaning of caring for their young child than the pursuit of their career. I'm not entirely familiar with the statistics, but what if women who don't get the average amount of meaning from childbirth DO wish to re-enter the workforce and face lower wages, cut hours, etc? Is it a case where you just can't get the best of both worlds? I think that's where my main concern lies. From the last bit about fathers, I think I get what you mean. If they're not already, they have to mature and start working really hard and long hours to provide for their young family instead of hanging out with the guys all the time.	Woman	Gender - General	1/163	0.613

One: Women are not a thing, but in the mind of insecure males. There are people, who happen to be of female gender . Typically males do have a problem with it, which is why they hate when women make more money they do (in fact if it wasn't for gender pay gap, imposed by males, women would be making more money than males all the time)). That's what it boils down to, people of female gender , smarter than males, who make more money than males, make males feel threatened, so the males hoof and puff and use sexual harassment to keep them at bay. In the end they all deflate into nothingness ... watch Trump.Two: leftists are not a thing, just people who use objective reasoning and facts to make arguments, Again males, that is insecure men, tend to hate facts and replace that with "shit" using power to impose this shit onto others (See Trump). Three; let women say what they like, your opinion, given you have no clue what a woman is, is worth shit.Four: Family is fine, but it is not for you to decide what women should or should not think or prefer or like,which is what you cannot stand, the fact more and more women of all ages, just fuck do what they want, cause they can afford it and do not need to suck your dick. In fact, that's what the pay gap and sexual harassment is all about, try keeping women from exercising their freedom to be smarter and make more money than any emotionally weak and insecure male (you being one nice example, another .. Trump, who is triggered every time someone says his ass look big).Finally: get a hint... you are males, not men.	Gender, Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	6/297	2.02

That's true since kindergarten...so in the end they score by better, if they are given a plain field, exactly because they are used to the unfair treatment. Ironically, the privilege stupid males have enjoyed, it's the very reason they are being outclassed.Guess what? I ,as a man, love it.Working with women is a lot more fun and productive... Most of the time anyway, exactly because they typically had to be smarter than anyone around them, to get where they are. Males buddies instead more often than not suck each other up and so they end up lowering their own score bar. These are the ones ,who are worried about women and complain about them. It is illegal for either gender to be paid a different wage than that of their coworkers. The real reason women get paid less is because women tend to study fields in university such as social work, psychology, sociology, while men on the other hand study engineering, computer science, physics, etc, which at the end of the day are higher paying careers. Google, Microsoft, Apple , Facebook are all constantly getting sued for not hiring 50-50 men and women but that is just not right. More men choose stem as their careers and more women choose social studies as their careers. We are not arguing that most doctors are women why should we argue that most engineers at Facebook are men. This of course translates into the so called " gender gap" which is basically in dumbed down terms, men in engineering getting compared to women in social work. Of course if you group them together and find the average, on average men get paid 15 more. Nobody is forcing women to study careers that are paid less, they chose it and then they complain. I (a woman) study mathematics and statistics and most of the people in my classes are guys. While we are hitting the books and killing ourselves over calculus, the majority female classes that are social geography, social justice, sociology, etc are out partying during exam week, and now they are demanding they get paid as much as the average men. First of all, I have about 20 friends, including myself, that smoke pot on a regular basis. None of us have been caught yet. Yes I shouldn't have said impossible. What I meant to say is its very unlikely for us to get caught when compared to corporations. There are also different levels of law. Unequal pay is pretty up there but pot smoking is considered "petty law" and isn't as strictly regulated. Secondly, pay is not discussed among coworkers but it is recorded on spread sheets and employee charts for anyone in management, the union, the board, and government regulators to see. There are many men and women employed in these fields who look over these charts on a daily basis that would not stand for unequal pay. If a company paid 2 employees different wages for the same job, we would know about it really quickly. THE SECONDARY HOUSEHOLD INCOME FACTOR: I find working in EDUCATION, the cause of the lower rate of pay in society is caused more by the fact that many teachers are secondary income earners for their household and this is a major obstacle to participating in industrial action (i.e. striking stop work action) to improve pay rates in education. Secondary income earners are not really concerned about how much they earn as they already have a steady and better income flow from another partner in the household. Their financial welfare is not totally dependant on their income. So they are blasé about stopping work and pushing the government for a better rate of pay. The secondary income earner doesn't necessarily have to be a woman .	Woman	Gender - General	1/124	0.806

False. She would say "that having a baby is a choice", and not a price women pay for motherhood. Albert Querky Sorry for replying, but I felt a tad bit of sexism . First of all, the B word is for addressing female dogs. Not female people. Second of all, the female brain is fully capable of understanding why some men make a lot of money. Actually, at my young age , I can understand still so much more. But you are failing to see that many women make a lot of money too. That is the side of the argument you are missing. And about risks, I can really see that risk you took there when you first posted this comment. You really thought no one was going to reply to this? You also made it so much harder for me to argue about it since I can barely read it based on the lack of punctuation. You also failed to understand that many females are teachers. It is made clear that a lot of females are school teachers. They knew they weren't going to get paid a lot. They took the risk anyway. I also took the risk of getting proved wrong. lachusity When a man turns 18, he is required by law to register for the Selective Service. While the draft has been eliminated in the United States, thanks to the work of Milton Friedman, there is technically still a registry in the event the government ever decided that it's important to sacrifice the lives of a few hundred thousand young men.Women in America enjoy the privilege of being able to exercise their constitutional rights without also have to be obligated to die in defense of those rights.Feminists claim that women do not have 'equal rights', yet continue to advocate for 'special rights' without seeing the hypocrisy. Women have currently are entitled to three legal options to absolve themselves from their children, morally and financially. that they do not wish to take responsibility for. 1. Women may abort the child before it is born2. Women may put the child up for adoption (without having to notify or identify the father)3. Woman may leave the infant, in accordance to Safe Haven law to be wards of the state and walk away.When fighting for legal custody today, many states the law will still assume that one parent is a 'primary caregiver' and one 'tertiary caregiver'. Typically the primary caregiver is a woman. There is such a thing as 'shared custody', however it requires that the tertiary caregiver sue to prove themselves worthy of equal parenting, which is difficult and costly.Additionally, the legal presumption of shared parenting upon divorce – that children have a legal right to an equal relationship with both their mother and their father following relationship breakdown – is strongly resisted by the National Organization for Women (NOW) and other feminist organizations who know that women will almost always win custody of children under the default laws.In fact, men who can afford to purse legal remedies and challenge primary custody stand a very good chance of winning. So, while the law does not specifically indicate that custody will be awarded to women, the defacto result of primary/tertiary caregiver custody law is that women have a legal right to be assumed caregivers for children. Men do not.Men are generally not eligible to receive aid from domestic violence shelters. There are no court advocacy programs for male victims of domestic violence, and men and their children are not eligible for state and federal money for housing like women are if they are abused. As of now, there is only one shelter for male victims of domestic violence, the Valley Oasis Shelter. Women have approximately 1,800. Own a small business? There is a number of inaccuracies in this video, although it is not as terrible as I initially expected upon clicking on it. The notion that "women are as ambitious as men" is factually incorrect; in psychology, we know this not to be true. The claim that, as more men choose differing career paths and focus more on paternity, more women will reach executive positions at companies is wrong, or at least has no evidence supporting it. The amount of executive roles at companies is relatively small and unlikely to be affected by a slight increase in variation of male occupations or time off from work. Further, men are never going to take as much time off from work as women do on average. We know that people who get into executive positions have certain temperamental and cognitive advantages that make their selection to these positions more likely, and these properties are, on average, more prevalent among men. Finally, the notion that women are being "held back" by the current societal structure is an unfounded claim. Also, the perverse notion that increased competition is somehow discriminating against women due to unequal outcomes is one that only a mentally-challenged person would think stands to reason. Our biological reality is such that, on average, men are more suited for competitive, high-stress environments, which explains their overall higher wages and more senior roles in society. However, one must not ignore the significant in-group variance within men and women, which is greater than the variance between said groups. In other words, any individual woman can do anything she wants in life, including not having children and thus progressing further in her career, and making a ton of money. What you cannot do however, is a) choose to have a child in the middle of your career, and expect to be still as likely as the average person to get into a senior position, and b) claim that unequal outcomes in life on aggregate are somehow indicative of systematic discrimination against a given group of people.

good arguments, but one thing missed: a man can have both - career and children, a woman cannot - because giving a birth automatically puts you out of the working life, at least for some time (as you put above). This is a fact. And it's unfair that one half of population can have it all, and another cannot. So don't say there's no inequality and a woman can choose as well as a man can. This inequality is biological though, not because "evil men" elaborately decided it to be this way - women just drew this "biological" card, shit happens. But it's still inequality and we have to accept it as such. And after we accepted it for what it is - we can look for ways to solve this. And if a man is wise enough and a woman is ambitious enough, they can sit down together and come up with a solution: who works how much, how they share responsibilities, hire a nanny etc. So the solution exists. Let's only not pretend women can have it all without cooperation from their partner's side - because biology tells a different story.	Woman	Gender - General	3/193	1.554
+Tania Dym How is it having it all? You think that it's the mere result of having sired an offspring that then entails to having it all?No it's not, a hell of a lot of fathers barely get to spend time with their family in the same way the mothers do. The fact that women in general even if it by the women's own desire the takes more time of and don't earn as much or even less than the woman , and even becomes the stay-at-home parent. Women even then find it the majority of the cases a huge loss in attraction for the man, and then it's all hell from there.And then especially so if the mothers don't want the father to be with his kids. At least in the western countries, and I can't imagine it's much different most places, the court system is literally rigged against the fathers to the to the point of training judges, lawyers, social workers to coach women into fucking over the men. And that is when you one doesn't take into account the laws system that are in place to even force judges to force women to not even being able to make an amicable result in custody. While women usually get a free lawyer by the factor that men usually are the ones footed the bill for the lawyer either way. While the men have to try to just get a hearing and getting into court and in just his legal fees can something like $20.000 or 17.000 Euros per year, and that is just to get it through the system and nothing is guaranteed.And I haven't even gone into details here.Yeah no, men don't have it all. Tania Dym You CAN'T have it all. That's the point. Life isn't fair. You don't get to have your cake & eat it too. I'm sorry, if you have a problem with that take it up with God. But how is there still a race to gender equality (in the west)? Clearly, as stated in this video, women don't get payed less for the same job, but they have the same FREEDOM to make a DECISION for their CAREERS, as men do. No one is telling women otherwise, women can choose what jobs they want, and so can men.I fail to understand how there is still inequality in the western world, having heard what been mentioned in this video. justinfor yes, valid point. But recognise that women have the freedom to do engineering if they wish to. No one is stopping them, "boys club" is simply a stereotype. If a woman seriously wants to be an engineer, I'm sure she wouldn't let the stereotype of an engineering career being a majority male occupation, steer her away from becoming an engineer. It would be like saying that a white person won't become a rapper because the career is majority black occupation. Obviously when put into that context, the logic and stereotypes behind the argument ridiculous. A job isn't exclusive to one race or one gender . Therefore shouldn't be treated that way. justinfor well quite harshly, my response would be to toughen up. If you're not willing to go for your dream career because your gender or race is not the majority of the workforce in that sector, then that is completely a personal issue.What would be your proposal? Less men should be engineers and more should be nurses (women vice versa)? Should the government force women to take jobs in male dominated careers? or force men to take jobs in female dominated careers against their personal freedom of choice?The vast majority of people haven't picked their jobs based on, if more women or more men work there. Even then, if your job decision is steered on that decision, then you are probably just looking for an excuse not to take the job. We are at the stage where men and women can make the decision themselves, as individuals. Perhaps some people might be stupid enough to pick their job based on race , gender or religion. But even then, we shouldn't give up our freedom of choice to make exceptions for the few.	Engineers, Gender, Race	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General, Nationality - General	5/183	2.732

I don't believe in equal outcomes, just equal opportunities. Women do make different choices in life, but women are not paid to do work like 'mothering'. To put it crudely, you can manufacture a product and sell it for profit if somebody buys your product. You can demand more pay for the hours you put into manufacturing your product too. But if a mother's product was her 'child', she can't technically sell her child (unless she's into slavery) thus she never gives up ownership. She doesn't get remunerated too because nobody 'buys' her child and she couldn't assign a monetary value to the child as well. In essence, mothers will always be financially disadvantaged in this way. The only hope she has is for her child to repay her one way or another when he/she grows up. That too is a long shot... So? Either have a very successful career, or have children, but not both.	Nobody	Age - Youngsters	1/156	0.641
Dan, the difference is due to women being underemployed. If they need to change field to make a living then that's a reasonable decision. They don't have to 'toughen up' and put up with garbage. This video is old garbage that's been debunked. The whole STEM field claim is bullshit.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/50	2.0
I can see your points, but I do think it is incomplete. First, there are many countries on earth still allow HR to state " male only" in the job advertisement. Second,I agree with the part that no one is stopping them, but one also has to acknowledge that often, it is very rare people are encouraging them or senior same- gender role models to represent the certainty or possibility. Same also applies to many nuturing men dare not to be a full time stay home dad. Third, I doubt every male engineer has the same convention and strong motivation as the women wants to be an engineer in the situation you described, one might argue that it is inequality itself to require stronger motivation to do the same job.My question is: is it fair to draw an equal sign with theoretical/legal equality with actual equality? After all, it is in human nature to seek acceptance, and too often by trying to fit the general expectations to do so.Also, keep in mind human brains' decision-making part only fully developed at age 25, and when the majority of us chose our major we have not yet reach that stage.when we were choosing our career pathes how many of us are sensible enough to overlook conventional gender roles? shirehorse91 Yes, that is what I'm implying. If you had read the thread of comments previous to that one, you will see that I am not suggesting that only women need to toughen up.I am saying that BOTH men and women who would base their jobs solely on the demographics of who works there, instead of just going for the job they enjoy most, need to toughen up about their decisions. Otherwise, men and women who pick their jobs based on their income, skills and qualifications etc. are fine, and being smart when picking jobs.What would you make of a person who says:"Too many girls work there""I'm not black , so I can't take that job" You get the picture. Because modern feminists believe in a Marxist worldview in which all people either fall into the category of "oppressor" or "oppressed" based on their group identity. Woman are an oppressed class in the West, and men are an oppressor class, therefore all the fundamental interactions between men and women is rooted in this oppressor/oppressed dynamic. Coupled with the postmodernist ideal that gender is simply a social construct, and all gender differences are socially constructed by the patriarchy in order to maintain men's roles as oppressors and women's roles as the oppressed, if women have different outcomes than men, that MUST therefore always be the result of oppression, and not women's choices, since women are incapable of making free choices in a patriarchal society in which they are the perpetual victims of male oppression. Of course there is still a problem with gender equality in the Western world. Where do I start? The video itself mentions that more women are graduating University than men. Men can't choose whether or not to opt out of fatherhood, women can just get an abortion. The mortality rate at work is far higher for men. Women are far more likely to be able to win custody of the children regardless of which one would make the better parent. Young boys have been put on Ritalin and other drugs in order to comat their testosterones. Bloody hell even the smaller factors such as men are always expected to pay when on a date. Men are always expected to be chivalrous to ensure women are comfy even at the expense of their own comfort. Yeah, gender inequality does still exist but you don't see many male advicotes. Bethebest 1 it's quite simple really, our culture should be free of government intervention. If you don't want to pay for the full dinner at a date then don't. No one is forcing you. Instead find a woman who prefers to pay for her self. What essentially happens is that the economical ladder will start to vanish for the women if they are actively held back just because some don't pay for their meal when going out on a date which maybe happens once a year during a 5 year period tops. So what you get is women understandably starting to withdraw from the workforce and instead have their role at home which will bring a more conservative society and this in turn will put half of the population left being unused in terms of development and economical development. And the very ambitious women will move away to countries where they will have an equal opportunity. Your idea resembles of a conservative driven socialistic dictatorship. do you know why overseas chinese/indian/jews/javanese/etc are much more richer than their peers in their own origin country? cus they got discriminated in many ways.. so they band up together, work harder, study harder to even the playing field.. when they get so much richer, the majority would then felt economy inequality.. how come a small portion of those minority had so much more money than the majority? then gave rise to either racist bigot like Hitler.. that only willing to focus on one side with constant propaganda, disregarding all other relevant information. and your pattern of argument is the similar, you just replace racism with sexism .. but with equally dishonest n narrow minded focus.. And you continues with whataboutism and irrelevant shit Your personal view on women is irrelevant in this debate.Discrimination base on gender has nothing to do with what anyone think women can or cannot do.IT DOES NOT MATTER, for sanity's sake, are you retarded?The issue is, gender is linked with a pay gap, just to mention one ... Same job, same responsibility, different pay because of gender . That's fucked up.. it's no different to say that black people should get paid less for the same job, because the color of their skin increase cost to the emnployer.That's what you are arguing, by saying ... black people smell different ,I remembered that time I smelled a black person and he definitely smelled different, therefore they shall be paid less, that's normal.That's the kind of shit you are arguing. Replace black with women and you get the same. That's how fucked up are	Black, Gender, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	8/155	5.161
again, you cannot answer me.. so you dishonestly dismiss it as irrelevant n evading the point..if the work require the people to smell good, like masseur for example, then yes.. generally some racial minorities would had disadvantages. because of the food they consumer, their cultural norm or their biology that cause a certain smell.. they had few choice to make, one is to combat it with deodorant n changing lifestyle, or they can chose other area of work that did not require them to smell certain way. you simply cant force the owner to pay them equally if them cant bring the same quality. its the same with work that require physical strength,.. or commercial sport like NBA that require taller body size. those with disadvantages with generally make less money, for the same effort. they need to work harder to even playing field. and that is not racial discrimination. racial discrimination is purely base on race .. like what still happening in many prestigious university in US against asian. asian people need to have higher score result to enter.. Why would I feed a whataboutist like you?Your arguments are racist , discriminatory and in fact all based on myths and nonsensical stereotypes ... Beside the fact I don't believe a word you say, you have a significant lack of understanding about how meaningless your experience is versus the actual world.But regardless of that, the actual issue with your nonsense is that what you say has nothing to do with the topic at hand, which is discrimination against women, based on their gender , regarding their compensation for similar jobs held by men.You are trying to justify discrimination based on unrelated personal convictions.Even if all you said was true, it still wouldn't bare meaning with regards to the topic at hand.Reduction of compensation based on gender is nonsensical and based purely on an issue of power in the corporate world. Nothing you said address the issue. Again, you have personal issues with relating to women .. your feelings, shortcomings and lack of experience with dealing with women have no baring in this debate. TheGreatgan I don't know why everyone is being so rude to you, it doesn't help. I still disagree with you, i think its the way you are framing the problem. You are placing men and women into two separate groups (which they have been in society for a long time) but if you frame it as though you are looking at individual people, it makes more sense to demand equality. See historically men have done things and faced certain pressures and the same with women, the idea is to recognise that these pressures are artificial and not natural so when removing pressures for women to take lower paying jobs for example at the same time we want to remove the pressure on men that they have to be the highest earners. Its going to take a long time but essentially its about a societal change from thinking of men and women as two distinct groups to all individuals being people in their own right and having the freedom to follow their ambitions without any societal handicap because of their gender	Gender	Gender - General	1/180	0.556
haha, dont worry, not everyone is rude to me, only that two trolls.. i am a man that can see things from various vantage point. if you read carefully everything that i wrote. i did explain that i am using their perspective to explain my point. personally i do prefer classical egalitarian approach to the issue, that is certainly the most ideal way to see things. BUT the reality is people like them, including mainstream media n various Feminist organization up until now are still grouping people based on their identity especially gender . as long as that still serve their interest, they wont ever let it go.. they only way to deal with it, is to always expose their flaw.. there are hundred of thousand of article n video, about gender equality. trying to engineer society to be quote n quote "equal".. but where is the video that teach woman to provide, to accept the responsibilities that come with it? where is the video that teach female to respect lower income man? n the list go on.. there are nearly none.. while in actuality, those kind of thing are directly affecting the goal they claim trying to archive. ok, now i respond to your 2nd point, there are actually very little gender bias in modren society. some of the handicap were result of nature, but gender is not the only things that created handicap. even among the same gender n race , there are people that born with exceptional talent n people with lower IQ. there are people that born in violent family, n so on.. so most of us in the pursuit of the jobs we wish to had. we had to pay extra price. there is no way around it.. if we the society highly imbalance, it almost always eventually balance things up. but it might get ugly and i really dont want that.. i plan to have kids, maybe a daughter too someday, i want them to live in good world. For a better and more accurate explanation of the gender wage gap by labor economists see my video entitled "The Adjusted Gender Wage Gap" and "The Women's Wealth Gap" Women make 8 cents per dollar an hour less than men for SIMILAR work and hours. So in a job where males earn $50hr, the average female coworker is paid $4 less per hour, $160 less per week and $8,320 less per year. Maybe YOU'RE privileged enough to not give a shit, but over a lifetime that adds up. In 50 years that's $416k. That's not pocket change dipshit! LEARN THE WAGE GAP. The wage gap and the earnings gap are not the same thing.The male wage premium needs to be abolished until men can prove why they deserve a premium. Why are the feminists not crying bloody murder about the lack of women cleaning sewers and working the oilfield or driving refuse trucks? They only want their so called "equality(as fake as their understanding of it is)" when it's a suitable job in their own view. C'mon little feminists(I know I'm mansplaining now) see if you can follow. Say there are 100 jobs available with 50 male and 50 female workers available, 50 of the jobs are oilfield jobs paying £50/hr and the other 50 are desk jobs paying £20/hr. both men and women can choose which jobs they want. 40 of the 50 men choose the oilfield and 10 of the women choose it as well, 10 of the men choose the desk job and 40 women choose the same. The average then for the men will be higher and the average for the women will be lower because of their choices of work. It has nothing to do with unfair practice. Actually the taxes are reallocated by the government via fiscal policy, whereas the central bank provides stimulus by buying bonds with newly created central bank reserves which then drives down the interest rate. Its a really tricky balancing act and getting it right requires a lot of skill.Government produces nothing . And all the monetary problems the U.S. has have been caused by our government via far leftist policies.I get that you have a negative view because there are some women who are spoiled but trust me, we arent all like that.Jesus Christ, you're still not getting it. It doesn't matter that a handful of women aren't rejects of humanity in the west, it's the majority that matters. How thick are you exactly? And this isn't about individual women & their ethics or lack of them, women in the west have God like legal power over men & children & women are above the law themselves & I'm not going to simply trust they're not going to fuck me over or take you WORD for it! LOL If I had God Like Legal Power over you, would you want to be around me? Of course not! I can destroy your life at a drop of a hat. And ALL western women are spoiled & worthless, some just to a worse degree than others.yes, I love a challenge, curling up into a ball and giving up isnt something I doFacepalm. You were implying earlier that women can't achieve anything because they're told they're stupid.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/257	0.389
They weren't comparing the earnings of men and female in the same job.And that is 100 deliberate. They know that most women are dumb enough to fall for this idiocy, so they keep confusing women to perpetuate this myth, that's why it NEVER goes away so they can continue to petition the government to get millions in funding for Affirmative Action programs & a million other women only government programs - it's literally STEALING based on FRAUD. Anyone pushing this lie & obtaining funding needs to be indited and go to prison. ENOUGH of this BULLSHIT.	Dumb	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/97	1.031

I sympathise with the guys who this happens to.... and it 'happens' to 99 of any men who get married in the U.S. because of the LAWS & THE SYSTEM backing up backstabbing piece of shit witches made that way by feminist schools & media. you dont like anything I say Nothing you say is even remotely close to what I'm talking about. And this is what I see over and over and over with women, you all seem to have no clue about the world you live in & how it operates beyond finding the best prices on shoes & this is why everything has to be 'mansplained' to you.so theres little point continuing this conversationFor me there's no point, because it's all 100 one way: Me explaining the entire world to you starting with why women earn less money: Because they're LAZY (& not very bright). I don't think at any point in my life have I ever learned anything from a woman at all (that she wasn't reading out of a textbook written by a man) or had any constructive, helpful anything to say or anything even mildly interesting to offer.	Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	2/197	1.015
Riiight, you want to work for the Federal Reserve or work for a bank, good luck with that. You'll end up a teller. All of the BS you learn in your junior college taught by feminists & academic jerk offs who have never spent one day in the real world will be 100 useless to you & you won't even remember it 5 years from now.Every female today needs the entire world explained to them as if they were 5 years old, which is exactly why they need everything 'mansplained.' Has it ever once occurred to you that the very reason why the government & legal system treats women like retarded toddlers might have something to do with the fact you are? Women commit horrendous crimes every single day & get a slap on the wrist- just reading this today: [LINK] .. one of a million examples of something a woman did that a man would have been buried under the prison for to never see his child again. Or if a man & woman are drunk & have sex, it's 'rape' because women are retarded toddlers incapable of making adult decisions, etc.	Old, Sex, Woman	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	4/194	2.062
+Jeff Bridges it was women who created the first house powered by solar energy. it was a woman who discovered the cure for malaria, just like it was a woman who discovered francium and solar radio bursts. women invented nine coding languages and found evidence of elements heavier than helium in cosmic radiation. i could go on. these are all helpful, interesting things that were achieved by bright people. all knowledge, medication and inventions you wouldn't have if it wasn't for the women who came up with them. so, to say that you never learned anything from a woman unless she was reading a textbook written by a man is a bit of a reach. if your teachers presented any of this to you in school, it was because they learned it from a woman	Woman	Gender - General	4/135	2.963

Lets not forget the MOUNTAINS of men with apprenticeships and other technical qualifications that often take longer to complete than a degree course. I have NO IDEA why people only consider academic qualifications when on the subject of the gender pay gap. Men in skilled blue collar work are just as talented as someone with a degree and often a lot more useful to employers.In countries like Germany, completing an apprenticeship is considered the same as getting a degree. They're even allowed to use the abbreviation of "craftsman" or "Master craftsman" just like "PhD" of "MsC". It's the overall respect for technical skills in Germany that has made them so prosperous. Not really. It goes nursing, psychology, business, biology, accounting for women. For men it's business admin, accounting, biology, fiance for bachelors. For a masters, it's business admin for both men and women. For doctorates it was engineering, chemistry and physics for men and for women, educational leadership and administration, chemistry, and I thiiinnkkkk Biology. Again, hardly useless. Contrary to popular, anti feminist belief, women aren't majoring in gender studies and liberal arts. That's pretty rare and I don't think even on the list for most popular degrees. Even social work is at like 2.	Gender	Gender - General	1/94	1.064
Being a woman costs more too	Woman	Gender - General	1/6	16.667
It costs more to be a woman because women are gold-digging whores who don't give a shit about about anyone or anything other than designer handbags.	Woman	Gender - General	1/26	3.846
Lol the reason being a woman cost more is because women are more expensive while shopping they have more hair to cut they bleed out of their useless bleed holes every month so they have to get pads	Woman	Gender - General	1/38	2.632
ms wpwm Sanitary pads are dirt cheap. Not every woman needs birth control; only those women in a sexual relationship.	Sexual, Woman	Gender - General	2/20	10.0
