Im pretty sure that there are bigger problems to do with sexism than the ones at the olympics.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/18	5.556
Why am I being marked as sexist I'm just a 13 year old and people are attacking me for being sexist. Yes it's a serious cause but don't punish me just because I'm a male :(	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/36	2.778

I remember about half of these incidents when they occurred. I can laugh about them now but I was so annoyed when I watched the news coverage of the 2016 Rio Olympics. These reporters, journalists and sports commentators need to be trained for how it to gender neutral and of course to not be sexist.	Gender	Gender - General	1/56	1.786
Sexism in woman's sports is a real thing, and I've had my achievements discounted based on the fact I am a girl before.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/23	4.348
What about the Tongan flag bearer. There's a video of female reporters rubbing oil onto his body and a headline that stated that his good looks kept them from making a good headline. This woman is ignorant of what is the actual case in some of these scenarios. Katinka Hosszu herself credits her success to her husband/coach because he boosted her self-confidence. And the Phelps 100 fly story was a much more shocking headline than Ledecky's 800 gold. Liz Plank, learn more about situations before you make claims of sexism . And the hijab thing seems more ignorant/Islamaphobic than sexist. The tennis one: the commentator corrected himself after you cut the video clip saying he was the first MALE tennis player to win 2 golds.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	2/91	2.198

Is... is this a joke. This video blows up problems that aren't even problems nor major inconveniences. I remember the swimmer and her husband greatly helped her train and helped her to be where she is now, the fact that he's a man changes nothing . I also wouldn't expect any sort of names to be in headlines, that's what the rest of the article is for, names and details are next to never put in the headlines so this lacks context or common sense.	Common, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Social Class - Working class	2/84	2.381

There are absolutely valid points being made here, but sexism goes both ways, so it would makes sense to mention, at least one example, and maybe even only keep it to one to represent how unbalanced it is	Sexism	Gender - General	1/38	2.632
I agree that sexism is pervasive in sports but not all of the points in this video were reasonable and this woman is extremely condescending. You won't convince anybody if you treat them like that.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	2/35	5.714

Okay. I think the real reason these kinds of videos are hated is because of the way they present the information. They talk to us as if we're toddlers or idiots, and they seem very proud of themselves for it. I'm gonna be honest, I didn't believe in this kind of stuff until she pointed it out. I mean, it's not really killing anyone, and it's not a huge amount of cases, but this is kinda ridiculous. I think this video would have done better if this woman wasn't speaking about this issue as if she's a kindergarten teacher. I know there are a lot of sensitive guys online-and thats ok, I know you feel attacked and confused when women talk about sexism . I just am surprised that THIS video offended so many. Pretty standard blatant sexist stuff. Enough of the anti-sjw outrage culture, you're reaching and it's getting embarrassing. I don't doubt that your hurt feelings and emotions are real, but try to analyze why and maybe wait till you cool off a little so we can have a real discussion instead of just typing angry things that you would never actually say in real life.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/98	1.02
Hmm. Pretty heavy handed in the delivery but I'm shocked that this kind of misogyny was so prevalent at the Olympics. These comments. A satirical delivery of a report on the sexism in media during Olympics? "TBH I FEEL LIKE IT COULD BE LESS SARCASTIC" kind of translates to "I FEEL SO ATTACKED RIGHT NOW BECAUSE I DIDN'T REALIZE SAYING THOSE THINGS WAS SEXIST :""""(("	Sexism	Gender - General	1/44	2.273
I really don't understand why people think this was a bad video. Her tone of voice was perfect for showing how stupid and utterly ridiculous the sexism against female athletes is. It's great that we can laugh through the pain.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/40	2.5
Hiro Fox Typical feminist, anything critical must mean I'm a MISOGYNIST . Who cares about the fact that some of this was taken out of context and that media TODAY SHOW, BuzzFeed, GMA, Cosmopolitan.... sexualizing male athletes.	Misogynist	Gender - General	1/36	2.778

+christopher rembert Listen critique is very different from being ignorant just because they used the word 'sexist'. I don't think male athletes go through the amount of sexual harassment/comments that female athletes have to go through. One of the biggest reasons women quit sports is because of the harassment involved. And it's not just the harassment, it's your competence being judged by your sex . I've tried joining hockey, martial arts, football and so on, and I can't find teams that accept females because it's so goddamn dominated by males, which isn't a bad thing, it just gives females less of an opportunity to join. Maybe these people didn't portray it the way you wanted, but the point remains. Sports media is sexist.	Sex, Sexual	Gender - General	2/122	1.639
I thought this was gonna be really bad because of comments and like dislike ratio. However, it was honestly pretty solid.It was all just quotes, sure presented a bit sarcastically, but this is the epitome of sub conscious (at least I hope so) bias. I would have appreciated more suggestions on what should have been done instead. But things like giving credit solely to a coach with a female athlete or asking an athlete to twirl are both obviously sexist at some level. Its a lot of the little things that keep females not equal, not the giant ones anymore. You would be an idiot and denying reality if you were to say that sexism didn't exist.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/118	0.847
Sorry how can the presenter say this with out realising how stupidly ignorant it is. She actually thinks that sexism is only applicable to women. She should of included parts about the sexism male athletes faced epitomised by the objectification of the Polynesian taikwondo competitor.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/45	4.444
wow this is sexist: it was all presented by a woman see! that makes no sense Michael Phelps is a living legend and has done great in the Olympics for years! And that consistency is truly better than one gold.I honestly might unsub because I HATE BUZZFEEDpls stop, I still love vox	Woman	Gender - General	1/54	1.852
I don't usually agree with the trolls on this channel, but the format really isn't helping the message here. There are some pretty tone deaf moments in sports coverage, but, again, the format isn't really helping the point here.	Deaf	Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	1/39	2.564
I agree partially with this, but why did she talk only about women? Sexism is not only about the feminine side being assaulted, but boys have to deal with sexism too. In my 16 years I saw more girls being sexist about women than boys.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/45	4.444

All of these 'examples of sexism ' are simply the media trying to appeal to a wider audience. 'Wife of a NFL player' will garner more clicks than 'trap shooter'. Micheal Phelps is much more popular, and more people will read articles with his name so news sites obviously put his name first. This also applies to the articles at the end, the editors simply want as many clicks as possible. This isn't sexism at all, it's simply a business model to garner attention	Sexism	Gender - General	1/83	1.205
Because putting a name thats more famous than another as the top of the headline to get readers to view it makes it sexist... ok vox go back to good content please and not your obviously biased and feminazi points	Feminazi	Gender - Female intelligence	1/40	2.5
'Holy crap he said she was a pretty women' Just in sport announcer has both assumed someone's gender and called them pretty boycottheolympics	Gender	Gender - General	1/23	4.348
Most of this was not even sexist. Vox is better than this complaining woman . If she could back up her views instead of complaining then I would be much happier.	Woman	Gender - General	1/30	3.333
Would he ask those same thing of a male athlete he was interviewing? he's calling attention to irreverent things in relation to her gender/age to get a point across to the people watching. it called subliminal sexism . you want to pretend you don't see or notice it because it makes you uncomfortable? fine. that seems to be the trend with this comment section anyways	Sexism	Gender - General	1/64	1.562
I don't see why the fact that 90 of the presentations are male is seen as the reason for sexism . It's like implying that men are automatically sexist, which is false. Some of them are, most of them aren't	Sexism	Gender - General	1/39	2.564
As a new watcher, I actually like a good portion of the videos but stuff like this where the women studies major acts as she's the smartest person in the world shows a whole new level of arrogance while failing at comical content. If you want to say its sexism with your argument thats fine just don't act like you 100 correct and smarter than everyone else.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/67	1.493
I'm actually offended by the nonsense taking place here... the part about the tennis player dude broke 2 records and the interviewer doesn't acknowledge that a chick has done it before? And that's the crime?She did it against other chicks...Everyone knows Serena is amazing... for a chick .	Chick	Gender - General	2/49	4.082
That argument about 90 of males are sports editors is simple, men on avarage watch and play more sports than women do, it's a fact. Women can be sports editors too, it's not because employers simply dismiss them due to their sex , there are simply less of them applying.	Sex	Gender - General	1/49	2.041

I mostly agree with this vid although I think some of the sarcastic comments were taken out of context. For example the hostess complains about the comment of the gymnastic team looking like they could have been at their local mall. It might be a stereotype that all teenage girls spend their time at the mall but it does happen a lot. The comment itself had no sexist reasoning behind it. I picked it up as a statement merely about the very young age of the girls. They are young and what they have done was very special. The next thing where I think the anger was misplaced was the anger about the breast implant article on website hollywood life. I agree it is weird that that was the subject the website was talking about but it but the article was written by a woman . The impression the video gave me was that men were being sexist towards women athletes. There was no man being sexist in this case. Nevertheless I think the ultimate message is good but maybe next time you guys can be more clearer of the issue you are trying to discuss. Alori White FACTS? LOL. Most of this video was cherry-picking by taking headlines and articles out of contest. But, typical of a brainwashed feminist to label anyone who disagrees as a MISOGYNIST . Maybe have a look at the women of The Today Show oiling up a male athlete. Shame on you.	Misogynist	Gender - General	1/51	1.961
What makes people mad is that opinions are taken as fact and that anyone who disagrees with your pov is a misogynist apparently. That's simply not true. This is the sort of reason why women are fleeing feminism in mass numbers; you may defend it, but it's actually quite hateful.	Misogynist	Gender - General	1/50	2.0

Searching for sexism , are we? During the Olympics season all we heard about was how great Simone Biles and her team were. Of course, they WERE great. 1. Adam Kreek: Maybe she wants something different than to be a competitor.Vox: He [Adam Kreek] describes her as "not being a competitor"A) Acknowledge the word maybeB) He never said she not a competitor. He talked about what she might want. To the contrary, he recognized her as a competitor by saying that she might not want to be. If she wasn't a competitor than such an assertion wouldn't merit being mentioned.And about what you said following the clip of him, he never mentioned disinterest. He acknowledged that she has many options and that as much as she may be interested in competing, she may take another either additional or substitutive path. Ever think that maybe by saying "different than to be a competitor," he means more than to be a competitor?2. What was the context for the "they might as well be standing in the middle of a ball" NBC clip? Why didn't you provide it? But anyway... Why would he suggest that women belong in a ball rather than competing in a women's competition? Wouldn't a sexist agree that a women's gymnastics competition is a fitting place for women? If he were being sexist, why wouldn't he say all of the teams belong in balls?3. Next. They show the male and female coaches all the time for male and female athletes.4. Okay, that's kind of sexist, but she isn't simply being outshined by her husband or thought of only as the wife of a man. Her husband is a BEARS' LINEMAN! He's certainly more notable than her and they didn't give his name either. So it wasn't "Women are first and foremost the wives of their husbands." It was "This particular woman is the wife of an NFL player." And mentioning the Bears probably gave them a lot of retweets and likes, so they were partly motivated by wanting more likes and retweets, not entirely, or even necessarily in part by, sexism. 5. Clearly he was referring to singles tennis. He wasn't being sexist. The two women with more than one Olympic gold metal in tennis as well as the four other men with the same have no more than one gold metal in singles tennis. He is the first person, male or female, to be awarded two or more Olympic gold metals in singles tennis. Again, not only have two women been awarded two or more Olympic gold metals in tennis, but four other men have as well. They all only have at most one Olympic gold metal in singles tennis. By the way, the women who "broke" that record, a different record than the one to which the reporter was referring, broke it after men had. So obviously a man isn't taking credit for a record broken by women, especially since they didn't actually break it.6. So far, you've had the weakest case regarding charge number five. This is kind of sexist but Michael Phelps is a big name. People really care about him and it's not because he's a man. When people see his name, they will buy the paper.7. You didn't provide sufficient context and I'm still a bit confused about what happened here.8. Hollywoodlife.com is about that kind of stuff. It's not real news. You knew this or at least should have.9. Where does sex factor in?10. How are we supposed to find this article to confirm what you've claimed about it?11. Some of these "examples of sexism " aren't sexist at all. For example, that tweet that said "wife of linebacker" is not sexist. Who tf would know who she is? By showing who she is connected to, people would actually know who she is, and might get interested. As well, Michael Phelps was more prominent in the newspaper because he is more well known. I like most of Vox's content, even that which deals with gender issues, but this video really doesn't seem to fit in to the overall theme of Vox's channel. This smug, sarcastic commentary contrasts greatly with the usual even-headed, well-written/researched voiceovers that I'm used to. In addition, there were a few points that I didn't agree with at all. For example, the commentators only mentioned Hosszu's husband because he is also her coach, who is usually someone that is quite integral to an athlete's achievement. Also, when the remark about the gymnasts being in a mall was made, it was made in reference to how comfortable they looked, and how much fun they seemed to be having. Sure, the comment lacked a little tact, but you can't say that it was part of some sexist war being waged by NBC. Both of these examples would have seemed a lot less offensive if some context was provided. I thought Vox videos were made to inform people about pressing issues or just interesting topics, but this video seems like it was made for the sole purpose of stirring up vitriol from the audience. I'm just disappointed.	Gender	Gender - General	1/194	0.515

The thing is that the reverse never happens, they don't show a close up of Michael Phelps' mom and say "look at the woman responsible for creating this athlete and thus this win". The swimmer's accomplishments should be hers, her husband is not responsible for the win simply because he is a support system. The fact that they showed a close up of HIS face when SHE won the race they says a lot too, I mean you could argue it was because he looked so excited and happy, but the commentators could have said something like, "here's her husband celebrating and looking very proud of his partner's achievement". Vox - sexism was an issue in this Olympics, but Liz Plank's presentation is horrible, and the writing for this episode was terrible too. First off, you tried to make it funny and it isn't funny because there are no jokes. Simply pointing out a thing that happened, and telling your audience "Look how ridiculous that is!" doesn't make a joke funny. It's about delivery, timing, and set up. You have a decent set-up. The premise being you're addressing sexism like it's an Olympic sport - but if the premise is good, you don't need to mention it explicitly. It would be implied. Saying the premise explicitly means you think your audience is stupid. Delivery is not good. Frankly, Liz is too animated. If you're presenting this as if you're a sports caster, then it would be funny if Liz actually tried to act like one with the "news anchor voice" and demeanor. Liz tries to make these bits funny by pointing out the ridiculousness of these sports reporter's sexist comments, but it comes across as high &amp; mighty and condescending. Timing is an issue too. These bits come one right after the other. Give the audience time to think about the sports reporter's comments, and take the time to actually write some decent commentary about the interaction. You give the facts and then do a quick one sentence bit about it. Actually dedicate some writing time to each interaction so the audience can have time to mull it over and slow down the pace a bit like in the other videos you guys have where you address topics seriously. This is why people are saying the video is "unprofessional," but really it's because it just isn't funny. Sexist jokes can be funny, but this video just is not. But Vox strikes me as a the kind of place I wouldn't expect to see a glib, cheesy takedown of media coverage. And the "commentator" almost makes me pause because it's so bad that it seems like she's being ironic, and actually lampooning feminists or something. It doesn't not sound genuine. Alvar Marin What if a guy made the same video, people would not get this annoyed, but because it is a female talking, the human brain does not find it as agreeable. (humans do not respond as well to the female voice when compared to a male voice, ). Its called subconscious bias, its when you make a decision on something because of an arbitrary feature, rather than objectively looking at what is being presented, which 60+ of people have done on this video. There is a study done with people, where they were told story of successful (real) businesswoman and identical story of a fictional businessman. The people were asked to rate the her/'him", and people did not like the woman , yet the IDENTICAL story of the man was ok simply because of the arbitrary gender switch. It's called coaching, would you not have had a problem with it if she was a lesbian and her wife was her coach and turned her career around? 4. The Chicago Tribune covers a professional football team named the Chicago Bears, maybe you've heard of em. Cogdell is NOT a native of Chicago, as she is from Alaska. Here is the CRAZY part....CLICK THE LINK....OMG, what is the title of the article....? "Corey Cogdell, wife of Bears lineman Mitch Unrein, wins bronze in Rio" 5. Mark The Gr8 Mark does not know anatomy so I will educate Mark. Testosterone builds muscle, women have different bodies. This is proven here "Direct sex differences follow a bimodal distribution. Through the process of meiosis and fertilization (with rare exceptions), each individual is created with zero or one Y-chromosome. The complementary result for the X-chromosome follows, either a double or a single X. Therefore, direct sex differences are usually binary in expression (although the deviations in complex biological processes produce a menagerie of exceptions). These include, most conspicuously, male (vs female) gonads. Indirect sex differences are general differences as quantified by empirical data and statistical analysis. Most differing characteristics will conform to a bell-curve (i.e., normal) distribution which can be broadly described by the mean (peak distribution) and standard deviation (indicator of size of range). Often only the mean or mean difference between sexes is given. This may or may not preclude overlap in distributions. For example, most males are taller and stronger than females, but an individual female could be taller and stronger than an individual male. The extents of these differences vary across societies." Here Mark PS:Anatomy isn't sexism	Sex, Sexism, Zero	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	5/192	2.604

I'd just like to point that out as a swimmer and as a person that watched basically the entirety of Olympic swimming. Can we also talk about how sexism affects men in sport as well? Men and women are "typed" into sports based on the social perceptions of the sports as being either innately masculine, feminine, or both. Why is it that the female gymnasts are getting more coverage and Spotlight than the males? Why is it that male boxers get more spotlight than women? It's because society dictates and pressures that a man should do a sport that portrays him as masculine while females must portray a feminine image. +Nemesis9250Gaming the crux of the problem lies in the power structure in the system. Sure, racial minorities can form groups expressing charged views that can be seen as hostile toward another, but by definition this isn't racism. Racism is a systemic issue - it's the fact that the socioeconomic and political systems that drive our country are in fact designed against people of color. When we've used the word "racist" so colloquially we conflate its meaning with other words like "prejudiced." of course minorities can be prejudiced against white people. But there's no such thing as RACISM against white people in the academic sense of the word (and yes, the distinction in vocabulary IS important for purposes of studying, discussing and addressing the problem) because the course of history in America and indeed in much of the world has placed white people in a position of power by the exploitation (historically or currently) of other races. This is why people say minorities cannot be "racist" against whites, women are never "sexist" against men. By their very definition those claims are logically unsound.	Racism, Racist	Ethnicity - General	4/182	2.198
+Nemesis9250Gaming to add to my other comment, in a different hypothetical nation where whites constitute a minority and the de jure or de facto conditions of the economic, legal, political and social environment in that country systemically oppresses white people, then yes in that nation there is a racist system against whites and many acts of individuals, the government or other groups can be correctly labeled as racist if it falls into that framework of oppression. In America obviously that's not the case.	Nation, Racist	Ethnicity - General, Nationality - General	4/83	4.819

+Nemesis9250Gaming Yes, those are the dictionary definitions... I would argue that they're simplistic to a troubling degree; they're correct, but only technically so. One can't expect a dictionary definition to get into the complexity and nuance of the issues involved. Do a quick Google search for the ACADEMIC definition of racism . I won't insult your intelligence by copy and pasting it here as you're evidently capable of doing a Google search. That definition is the more important, more complete and more correct definition, which forms the basis of a dynamic discussion (not necessarily between two strangers because we probably can't get too far) that seeks to identify what racism and sexism really are and how we go about addressing those problems.	Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/121	2.479
Yifeng Tong I think you would like the change the definitions to fit your argument, I cannot make that happen. Racism to me is more of an action or belief, not a structure. Same for Sexism . Oh and back at you with the ability to Google a definition, if you Google both of those you will get an exact copy of what I pasted. Also who is to say what definition is more complete and correct? It is a very subjective definition from what I see here. I could be selfish and say that the most complete definition is the definition we have currently, but I prefer things to be correct over me being right but at the same time wrong.	Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/121	1.653

+Nemesis9250Gaming no, I'm not changing any definition. Recall that I defined the terms before you copied and pasted the most elementary dictionary definitions from a Google result. With due respect it doesn't matter what these words mean "to you," as an incomplete understanding of these two issues doesn't mean those issues do not exist. Nor is it true that there's any subjectivity to how these terms should be meaningfully defined. And again, I would argue that this isn't a matter of inconsequential semantics - for those people who devote their lives work to promoting equality and justice for all as is promised by the founding principles of this country, it's completely necessary and important to recognize and define these phenomena in a purely non-subjective way. I do understand where you're coming from - I can certainly see how "racially charged" issues and talk of sexism have come to the forefront of our collective attention in this day and age and how it may be uncomfortable because it challenges the throne of privilege some of us occupy. No hostility intended there, by the way. I recognize that I myself occupy such a throne of privilege by being a man, being a resident of the US, having been educated and having had a life without adversity etc. I'm just saying that these issues are complex, and while they're not black and white (hehe no pun intended), definitions are important and certainly not subjective.	Age, Black, Sexism	Age - General, Ethnicity - Black, Gender - General	6/241	2.49
Yifeng Tong If the definition wasn't subjective, why would there be more than a single solid definition? It's because some people BELIEVE(subjectively) that the simple definition is correct/incorrect. Who are you or I to say which definition is correct? In this situation how would we formulate a correct definition? Racism to me is a rigged system, prejudiced action or belief, but that DOES NOT make racism just a "rigged system(racial inclination)". Racism is keeping a race down because of their race . Racism would be targeting white people because they are white. Racism would be believing black people aren't human. Vice versa. As a man I love the privilege of 80 suicide, longer prison sentences, more prison sentences, many times higher workplace deaths, rigged custody system, etc. But think of the poor women who aren't allowed to get a job they are half qualified for simply because they are a woman and women consist of less in a certain career path. You are saying it to make a point which is what I mean by "argument".Regarding the stats cited: I am no native English speaker but what I have gathered from Pop-culture girl is used quite often to refer to young women, whether it be in sports or other topics of conversation, where the same (i.e. referring to a young man as boy) is far less common . You can argue that this is bad but I would disagree. My native language is German and German does uses gender profession e.g. there is a masculine and feminin version of writer. Now it is claimed that we always should use both version if we speak of the profession more generally to be more inclusive while people used to default to the masculine version when speaking of the profession in a more general way but they also included women with this term e.g. when they were asked to name their favourite writers (masculine) they almost always also mentioned female authors even though they were not technically included by the masculine version of the word. The point being: Words have the meaning society gives to them and must not be defined by their origin e.g. the word peculiar in English comes from the Latin word for money. This it is not automatically a bad thing if we use the term girl more often to describe women than boy to describe men.I am laughing at this video so I don't have to cry tbh.It is in a certain way disgusting how much dishonesty is in this video FOX and VOX get more similar with every Liz Plank video. Furthermore, the video is discussing about the words that were used at female athletes by english spoken media, simply a grammatical offense from the language of english. So I don’t see where germanic people should have any opinions on this matter since we’re discussing an offense done in the english language and not germanic. I don't follow the other sports so I don't know the full context, but I feel like the tennis examples don't really work. Bouchard in particular is a pretty bad example. She went from being a top ten player to barely top 50 and has been focusing entirely on marketing. Despite being far better than many of her opponents, she barely won a match in 2015 and she hasn't been doing much better in 2016. Despite her lack of success, she has found time to appear in numerous adds and product placements. When it comes to marketing in women's tennis, being young and attractive is unfortunately more important than being successful (which is also why Sharapova made more money than Serena before she was banned for doping). As far as the comment about Murray being the first tennis player to win to Olympic gold medals, this seems to be more discrimination against doubles than against women's tennis. Doubles tennis is never treated with the same respect as singles regardless of gender . I think this is unfortunate since doubles players work just as hard as singles players but singles has more viewership and doubles is almost always forgotten. I assume the commentator would have clarified he was talking about mens tennis if either of the Williams sisters had a second singles medal. I'm not denying that there is sexism in Olympics coverage, and the other examples given do seem sexist to me (although I don't know the full context), but I feel like the two tennis examples don't show any obvious sexism and they don't beling in this video. Sexism is a serious issue but business, not sports is not the area to bring this up. Men are better at every sport ever competed by both sexes. Men (in general) are bigger, stronger and faster. So, If you want to watch the BEST, you watch men. You watch women if you want more entertainment. Women's tennis is far more entertaining, not for the manda4tory short skirts but because women have less strength and the rallies are able to go on longer. This makes the game more exciting. An ACE is a potentially perfect serve but its a fairly boring play. A true feminist would prefer to challenge the best at their sport even if it were a man. If a woman excels in her sport there is always the potential she could play with men but if a man does not make the cut he can not settle to compete with women... seems like there is indeed sexism but from which side is a discussion. I don't want to be advocate of the devil but the best woman in tennis would rank around 400ish at best if the ranking was cross gender . That's almost always the case no matter the sport. Fricken Cool And you are a woman in the Western world, or indeed the ambassador of all women in the western world? The mere fact that you think you can judge how women feel, not only that - but ALL women - regardless on what evidence you're basing this on (for indeed no such evidence could possibly exist) speaks of a problem that is in a way at least related to the overall problem of discrimination against women, whether it be here in the West, or in other places. Comparing different kinds and degrees of discrimination does not help. Neither does denying that there is a problem. Don't get me wrong, friend, I also cringe and wince at ultra feminists, or the so called femi-nazis, who hyperbolize otherwise inadequate problems; but, to suggest that there is NO discrimination, even if it is a milder form of discrimination, left in the West, to me is absolutely absurd. There has been progress, true, but nobody in their right mind would expect a mere century to heal all previous indiscretions (unless, of course, you don't think there were any indiscretions to begin with?) My stance, as a male, white (ish), lower middle class person is merely this: I listen to people when they talk about their problems - I don't dismiss them. I do dismiss the fringe arguments who are doing more damage to their cause as opposed to helping it (i.e. ultra feminists) but I listen to those in the middle who don't act all victimised and like society owes them anything, in fact they just state what THEY PERCEIVE the problem to be. "They perceive" being key here, since if something affects their perception to such an extent as to awaken any sort of mutually-felt discomfort in a pattern-like manner then maybe, just maybe, there is a problem there? Maybe not a problem as "big" as the problems women have in other parts of the world, but comparing the two is like saying: "Those holocaust survivors have nothing to moan about, people have been, and continue to die in much bigger numbers in total, so it's not a big deal" - yes it is, and yes it was, regardless of all other pain and suffering there may have, or indeed may still exist, the two are not mutually exclusive. Do you get my point? Sorry if I offended, was not my intention to do so, in fact I think your argument is well structured and based on truth. I just don't see how that excludes problems of women here.	Nobody, Nothing, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/428	0.701

Why are you picking out clips and showing them out of context?1. The tennis player comment is because she was on a losing streak and he suggested maybe she is in it more for the endorsements instead of winning tennis matches....this wouldn't be the first time a female OR male athlete has been accused of that. The twirl from the Australian commentator was stupid, I'll give you that one.2.The gymnasts comment was about their $2500 uniforms, not about them....Nice try, though.3. Hosszu's husband took over as her swimming coach after her swimming career was plateaued with her former coach. Thus he is responsible for turning her career around. It's called coaching, would you not have had a problem with it if she was a lesbian and her wife was her coach and turned her career around? 4. I mean, true Ledecky got a Gold and Phelps got a Silver, but it was also Phelp's - arguably the world's best swimmer and the most decorated olympian in history, shattering a record set in 200 B.C. of most olympic titles - 2nd to last race in his 5th olympics and last individual race. Not to mention that Phelps almost never gets Bronze or Silver, and this particular time he not only got a Silver, but had a 3-way tie, including with long time rival and friend, Chad le Clos. We will NEVER have true equality until we let males and females compete against each other! If I were a feminist I would complain about the fact that females cannot compete against males. How is that fair? Male sports get more coverage. In a truly equal world there would be NO delineation based on what you have between your legs. So to all the feminists of the world who see sexism in everything, let's make this happen. We should have equality in sports and not have women versus women and men versus men, but instead have unity. Once we have equality in sports it will start a chain reaction causing an end to all sexism . Males and females are equal and should compete equally. Am I right? some of these are fair, like the exteme cringe during the tennis interview, but come on use some context Vox, this isnt all straight sexism . A lot of this was taken far out of context. Let's review some of them:1. The commentator said the teenage girls on the USA gymnastics team may as well have been standing in a mall because he was commenting on how calm they were and didn't seem to be bothered by the magnitude of the event. 2. With the tennis player who won two gold singles medals, it was implied that it was for men's. A woman doing the same is irrelevant. TV coverage does the same thing the other way around too to make people more interested; just last night, after the women's 400m hurdles, the commentators were saying how the American who won was the first American to win gold in the 400m hurdles - an American man had already got gold in the 400m hurdles, but that was irrelevant because it was a different event. 3. Phelps winning the silver was the headline because everyone wants to hear about Phelps. Andy Sawyer you know their story right? she underperformed at 2012 london olympics, under pressure of importance of the event she did not show her best time, and did not get any medals. So she asked her then boyfriend (now husband) to become her new coach. this year she is absolutely crushing it.sure commentator could have phrase it more appropriate, by explaining how his support and presence there helped her (cause this is pretty much the only change from 2012 olympics where she was also regarded as very promising athlete and was expected to take medals).vox took it completely out of the context and claimed that sexist commentator thinks coach is a true winner cause white men always get fame of other people achivements - as you see it is not the case, maybe he could have phrased it better, but he did help her to get convidence and realise her full potential and her husband/coach is a part of her success story.and when loving support of the wife of her husband (the reverse of what vox criticized) said to be crucial of his success nobody cares, because it is true like michelle obama for example. but when it happens with a women there are will be always a feminist trying to create drama over it.if you ask why personal backstories of athletes should be even told and not only their achievements. Then you should know that one of the strongest selling point of sports is personal stories of success, this is what makes people care about sports, not the actual time and records. Oscar Garza Dude idk how long you been on youtube, but this has been the status quo for awhile. Sure not all of them may fit the demograhpic of a young white male, but there's still a lot of people close to that description commenting sexist things on here. A lot of the time you can just tell by their profile picture. And, priveledged young white males are the most likely to say these things for a few reasons. One, due to their social standing they are priveleged to not experience the harrasment and discrimination that many other do, and so they don't understand it. Can you provide me with a source for this one in regards to male athletes being accused of being more in it more for the endorsements? Also if the tennis player was in it more for the endorsements then she wouldn't be doing the Olympics, because you get better and more lucrative endorsements by winning. 2. While there is sexist sports coverage (I was disgusted by that "give us a twirl" comment), it's not really sexism to focus on men's events at the Olympics. People mainly watch the Olympics to see the best athletes in their sports, who are all male. The only reason that men and women compete separately is because female athletes can't compete with male ones. Sure, female athletes are still impressively good, but not enough to even qualify for men's competitions. So it's only natural that audiences see women's competitions as second rate and coverage simply reflects that. Also, the BuzzFeed-esque satirical style was quite annoying and makes the unsubscribe button look tempting.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/111	0.901

David Lukner Not all of them, but here in first world countries it seems common to skim over actual womens issues and then get pissed about some comment that personally offended then and call it sexism . Thats not sexism . Sexism is the fact that in Saudi Arabia women JUST got the right to drive, but only so long as they arent wearing make up. Sexism is the fact that in China women who dont get married because they want to focus on their career are seen as failures and disgusting, but men who do the same thing there are applauded. Sexism is the fact that a common wedding vow is to promise forever submission to the husband, but men only have to promise to be kind to their wife. This video we see here has very very few actual examples of sexism and even the ones that are being shown seem like stupid accidents where someone could have simply worded something better	Common, Sexism	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	7/162	4.321
JE Hoyes Poor wording isnt sexism because these people are trying to convey a completely different point outside of sexism . She is the current world-record holder in the women's 400-, 800-, and 1,500-meter freestyle (long course). She also holds the fastest times in the 500-, 800-, 1000-, and 1,650-yard freestyle events. In her international debut at the 2012 London Olympic Games as a 15-year-old upstart, Ledecky unexpectedly won the gold medal in the women's 800-meter freestyle in the second fastest performance ever. In total, she has won 20 medals, 19 golds and one silver, in major international competitions, spanning the Summer Olympics, the World Championships, and the Pan Pacific Championships. During her career, she has broken thirteen world records. Ledecky's seven individual gold medals at the World Aquatics Championships is a record in women's swimming. Her combined individual titles at the Olympics and World Aquatics Championships are a record for female swimmers. Ledecky's success has earned her Swimming World's World Swimmer of the Year and the American Swimmer of the Year awards in 2013, 2014 and 2015, as well as the FINA Swimmer of the Year Award in 2013. Ledecky was also named the international female Champion of Champions by L'Équipe in 2014. She was named USOC SportsWoman of the Year: 2012–13. I think no one should pay attention to this kind of things, it really does not affect any one but the athletes, and if the athletes do not respond to this kind of things, that means they did not know about them or the just do not care. . And I believe no athlete plays a sport so that men in the media can accept them or publish more stories about them. Like for example the tweet of the Chicago newspaper. It wont affect her reputation if they mention her name in some tweet, she already won a medal in the Olympic which is astonishing, and I do not think she cares, she is happy that she won, who cares if the mention her name in a tweet. The case of Genie Bouchard, the comment the reporter made it is truly sexist and very disrespectful, and it is also a direct comment or attack to a woman . In those thing we should focus about and rant about, everyone, women and men. Nevertheless we should not pay attention to some tweet someone made without thinking twice about what he was going to publish. We have to remember that most media outlets (including this one) just want to attract some attention in order to gain revenue, and men in sports are bigger that woman in sports (fact), although both should have the same attention the reality is different. That is why maybe some media cover first men sports. I do not think the intention of covering men sports first is to disrespect women. In conclusion we should focus more on the things that really matter, like social, political and economical matters, women and men should fight for equality, but by complaning about why a tweet did not have the name of the woman that won a medal is just dumb and it is getting offended for nothing . You're half-right. She's annoying and mostly wrong. Is there sexism in sports journalism? You bet. But Liz took almost every example of " sexism " out of context, plus she didn't even bring in examples of how men are objectified (and sometimes groped on live TV by female journalists).Is sexism bad? Yes. Should we fight it? Yes. These are things we already know, and yet, here she is grasping to find any example that even remotely resembles some form of a rude action towards a woman , and attributing it towards " sexism ". It's pathetic, shameful, and poisonous.	Sexism, Woman	Gender - General	5/95	5.263
So stupid, you are judging sound bites not the actual videos. That unnamed NBC commentator is Tim Daggett and he was referring to the banter between the gymnasts at that moment. They weren't nervous about where they would place on the podium, they were friends hanging out, enjoying each other and being in the moment. That isn't sexism , it's a spot on observation. I do agree with the overall sentiment of this video, but a few of the examples are reaching just a bit.The Phelps/Ledecky headlines, for example: If we replace Michael Phelps finishing 2nd in his discipline with say, Serena Williams finishing second in hers (I know she didn't, but just for the sake of argument), Ledecky is still the secondary headline in my view. Why? Because Williams is an international sports icon. Putting her on the front page of your paper is simply going to sell more copies than putting Ledecky on the front, no matter what record(s) she set. Its the same thing with Phelps. He's been a household name for YEARS, so people want to know how he did. It has nothing to do with him being a man, and everything to do with him being a living legend. I'm so disappointed by this comment section. Yes, maybe its wasn't the best of ideas to bring out the satire card but clearly, it feels like everyone is missing the point Vox is trying to make. Gender inequality is a problem women face whatever they do and Vox shows us how it takes place in the OG. Don't ignore everything this girl is saying and talk about the "bad production of the video" and so on instead. That in itself shows how sexist our society is, brushing of a topic as important as gender equality and talk about "how bad quality this is" and "unsubscribing" and "please fire this woman " etc.	Gender, Woman	Gender - General	3/111	2.703

Katinka Hosszu's husband is also her COACH, so yes a substantial part of her success could be attributed to him just as it can be for any top tier athlete. Who do they dump a cooler on when an NFL team wins the Superbowl? It isn't the Tight End. Nobody doubts that Hosszu is an outstanding athlete and she has a world record to prove it, but giving her husband credit for part of that success isn't sexism when he deserves it.Also, Phelps getting top billing for silver in that article probably has a lot more to do with his name recognition than sexism . And you assume that the fact that they're the two most popular sports are some how denigrating to women? Gymnastics is popular because it's a beautiful sport and female athletes tend to be more flexible than their male counterparts. In other sports the men's competitions are more popular bc men tend to be physically superior, i.e track & field, the worst olympic male track and field athlete would easily beat the best female track and field athlete. I support egalitarianism, but there are several problems with this video:Firstly, it was presented rather poorly. The wit just wasn't there and this overly cynical approach makes it look stupid rather than funny.Next, some of these 'sexist' incidents weren't even inherently sexist, or we just don't know. How do you know if the reporter that asked about the record that two women beat wasn't simply ignorant? What if the hungarian dude was actually the one who introduced his wife to competitive swimming or something? So what if phelps' artile was higher? We don't know if the cause of this was sexism for sure. If it was, then you have to ascertain it somehow in the video, and not just try to apply a narrative that isn't self-contained within the incident. In regard to the phelps one, i'm pretty sure it's because phelps is revered as a competitor in the olympics and has an godlike record. In fact, you could argue that the fact that he got silver made the headline, because he was actually beat by someone in swimming.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/181	0.552

Women or people of color may have a different or new perspective on a given issue that may otherwise (and is) ignored by such a heavily dominated area. People who have jobs like new report allows them the opportunity to let them tell us what they think is important about a story. Without diverse perspective, they might not see an issue that affects a certain sex or race because they don't experience it themselves. It's part of the privilege of being a white straight man.	Race, Sex	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/113	1.77
SpottedTigress Then why won't black people, women and gays apply for reporting jobs if its such a massive deal. You see these reporters don't care about racism or sexism . Halpo2k9 Women, LGBTQIA, and POC in fact DO apply for reporting jobs. Whether or not they're hired is another thing. And there is such a thing as white privilege. It's ignorant to think that it doesn't exist. Yes, there are certainly women reporting but it's doesn't even come close to half. It's a measly 10. Especially considering women make up 51 of the entire world population. 1 out of 10 reporters are women. Do you think that 1 person in a room of 9 other people are going to have their voice heard as loud and clearly as the other 9? You have to admit that's pretty sad. Halpo2k9 How do you know women generally don't pursue journalism as a career? Because they're not in the field? Or because they're simply not applying? I'm so glad you brought this up because both your example and mine tie into gendered stereotyped ways of thinking! This is exactly what I'm getting at! It DOES exist as a two-way street. There SHOULD be more male nurses but there aren't because nursing is heavily considered to be a "girly" profession because it's heavily dominated by women and thus discourages men from participating (or becoming doctors instead). It exists in the same way when talking about sports news casting. It's heavily dominated by men and thus discourages women from participating. There's certainly A LOT more involved than just those two points but I'm trying to keep it in a nutshell. Maybe there would be more a more even gender split in both fields if there were more representation for them! Both men, women, POC, and LGBTQIA have the capacity to do these jobs, but they are discouraged from doing so because of fake "gendered" professions.	Gender, doctors	Gender - General, Nationality - General	2/182	1.099

SpottedTigress If they really wanted those jobs why would they be discouraged by "fake gendered professions". 50 years ago, you would never find a woman in a newsroom. Nowadays the ratio of men and women in newsrooms is about 7-3. That tells me that people aren't afraid to apply for jobs they are "discouraged" from doing. It's just the majority prefer to do something else. Like nursing. Here, I can tell you want to help women and have a more equal world, I understand that. But instead of focusing on western society where women have the same rights as men and in a lot of cases do a lot better than men, focus on the real problems, like sexism in third world countries, or sharia law. Don't create problems from nothing .	Nothing, Sexism, Woman	Age - Youngsters, Gender - General	3/131	2.29

?? Are you just spouting words now? It hurt itself in confusion? Intersectionality means that things intersect. It's not exclusive to one racial or gender issue but they overlap.	Gender	Gender - General	1/29	3.448
SpottedTigress Intersectionality is about how various oppressions from various identities are not separable. It has nothing to do with ideas.	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	1/20	5.0
Does it not?? So let me get this straight. You think that people's ideas about what is or is not important has nothing to do with struggles or oppression that they, or people similar to them, face in everyday life? Nothing about a person's life experiences gives them any reason to want to share their story or make change in the world because their identity does not connect to their ideas?	Nothing	Age - Youngsters	2/73	2.74
Halpo2k9 I'm sorry, I don't agree. Also, don't tell me what I am for or against. I don't stand for people trying to get away with sexist bullshit like it's no big deal. People will think of any little excuse to dismiss the fact that sexism , racism , and other prejudices actually exist in this world and it's a huge problem. And I'm not making any words up either? Do words like intersectionality insult you because they're factual? If you'd spend 2 seconds on google you could see that, but you're too busy using derogatory terms to describe trans people.	Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/99	2.02

SpottedTigress Everyone defines equality differently. And you still didn't tell me if you consider the privilege metric as a part of the definition of sexism and racism .	Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/27	7.407
Equality (noun): the state of being equal, especially in status, rights, and opportunities. That sounds about right. Seriously, 2 seconds on Google can change your life. And it's up to anyone with privilege and power to help people who don't have it. And more importantly, it's about recognizing when someone is being sexist or racist (or what have you) and do something about it.	Racist	Ethnicity - General	1/66	1.515
SpottedTigress - -So do you or you do not consider "privileged" people being discriminated based on sex or race , sexist or racist ?	Race, Racist, Sex	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	3/22	13.636
SpottedTigress So how are you different from what you dislike? Denying sexism and racism against entire populations.	Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	2/17	11.765
Halpo2k9 First of all, I don't think anyone should be using derogatory words towards one another. Secondly, I think you're talking about "fairness" as opposed to equal. And lastly, no you shouldn't use derogatory language such as the N word towards a black person because it takes on a different meaning when it comes from a white person. You have the power and privilege to say whatever you want, but just realize you're being racist .	Black, Racist	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	2/75	2.667

SpottedTigress Wait, a definition of a word that changes with race ? There are so many problems with that, e.g. there are people with black families who are born white, are they allowed to say Niger, or how about Asian people, or people with black skin but no slave heritage, or Muslims, and the list goes on...The issue of women's violence towards men being accepted IS definitely about equality. This issue actually slips into legal territory, you see. Women are generally given a better punishment then men for the same crimes, and rape law is still gendered as for forced penetration to not count as rape in many countries.	Black, Race	Ethnicity - Black, Ethnicity - General	3/109	2.752
Halpo2k9 Sorry hun , but my argument isn't the one in trouble. Simply saying "you're wrong" doesn't make it so : And yes, definition and meaning have two different connotations. Blah Cga Sexism and racism are facts. I'm using facts to help explain my argument that racism and sexism are a real problem, but it's not as simple as you're trying to make it. There's a reason that people dedicate their lives to studying this subject and the reason they teach gender and politics in classrooms. Acting like they don't exist is ignorant and stupid. I've done my best to rationally explain in ways that even YouTube man-babies can understand. Get off your high horse.	Gender, Racism, Sexism	Ethnicity - General, Gender - General	5/85	5.882
SpottedTigress The "facts" that you have been given we've proved wrong. Going back to my point. You are wrong Sexism in the western world is almost non-existent. Racism in the western world is almost non-existent. What you should be worrying about is Sharia law, or 3rd world countries that don't grant women the right to vote, etc. That is all we're trying to say. And we're not "acting like it doesn't exist. We have facts and studies that prove our argument. If you really want equality stop looking at what women don't have and start looking at what they do have. They have just as much as a man nowadays. It doesn't matter how the message is delivered...people will complain anyways. If you do a serious video about the topic, people will say that you don't have to be so oversensitive and that you should stop whining and why you have to take everything so damn serious etc. When you made a funny or sarcastic video about the topic then people will complain about you beeing insensitive or superficial and will deny you of having any kind of humor in general. And in both cases there will be people that outright deny that there is such a thing as sexism in the world and/or trying to ridicule and belittle the problem.
