I’m turning 30 in a few weeks and I’ve never been more depressed. I think it’s because I graduated college late and started my career late, no relationship right now. I feel like I wasted my 20s. Older folks still tell me 30s are young and I definitely don’t feel 30, but it’s the first time younger adults will see me as ” old ” . Sorry this sounds so trivial lol	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/70	1.429

we are the age of stars, existence is so much more than the isms of humanity.	Age	Age - General	1/16	6.25
some aspects of the human condition are relevant to the age of the person, some are not. to disrespect someone on the basis of their age is a fallacy. a person can contribute tremendous value to a society at every stage of their life. at each stage of a persons life they are likely to contribute in ways that are unique to that stage of their life. a twenty year old male that has the life goal of having a large family is not expected to marry a 65 year old female. a 65 year old machinist is likely to have a lot to teach to the next generation of 12 year olds. it is all about context. Whoa. According to Alzheimers.org, ONE in FOUR women will get Alzheimer's. And that's just one of the dementia diseases. Rates of dementia, including early onset, are skyrocketing. Most of the middle level managers these days are in their 30s and when they want an analyst or associate they always go for 20 year olds as it's easier to boss over them as against a more qualified 40 something year old . This happens mostly in corporate offices because the HR and the manager don't pay salaries from their own pockets. Mature people would benefit more by targeting small business owners who wants quality work rather than glamour.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/79	1.266

This is a load of BS, in my opinion. Everyone goes through old age , it's not a social construct or form of discrimination that affects one group of people. Comparing it to the other "isms" of the world is pretty ludicrous. And honestly, I don't think wanting to retain a youthful and healthy figure is something people can stop wanting naturally. I've seen many old people who look better and are more active than these younger people because they took care of themselves and ate healthy. Most of the old people I see at the gym are fit and workout daily, which I give them props. We all have the power to control our destiny. I honestly believe that if you eat healthy, stay active, save for retirement, becoming old wouldn't be that bad. Retaining youth doesn't make you an ageist , it makes you smart because you're preparing for the future. What's stopping you from becoming fit, financially well off, and spending your old years traveling instead of being in a nursing home eating pudding and sitting in a wheelchair? Sorry not sorry. I liked it when Ashton says "have you ever been to a party and headed for people your own age ...all these behaviours are ageist , we all do them and we can't challenge bias unless we're aware of it". One of my favourite lines in Ashtons talk is when she says "everyone - all ages, all genders, all nationalities is old or future old and unless we put and end to it ageism will oppress us all". I love Ashtons talk.	Ageism, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/42	7.143
Women are the same bitches who took advantage of ageism when they were younger. They didn't need to pay a mover to switch apartments because they had young men to move stuff for them. They didn't have to pay for dinners or drinks in bars. But THEN as they got older, things weren't handed to them anymore. They hadn't developed their minds in preparation for being on their own. Even Sally Field was complaining about ageism . Well, guess what? Field got her start as Gidget on TV. She was an 18-year- old who looked sixteen and that's WHY she got the part. And she took that part, then the Flying Nun, and moved on to be an A-list actress. It all started with Gidget, and looking young. Maybe Gale Storm wanted the Gidget part but she was too old for it. i love this because the hate that people in america give to becoming older is absolutely ridiculous. there are so many other cultures throughout time that have exulted old age bc of the wisdom and experience that comes with it.but then again america is an entitled, selfish, shallow culture, so its kind of to be expected that growing old is talked down upon even though literally everyone ages and there is absolutely no way to escape and you'll only live in fear and disappointment when you look in the mirror and see crows feet and smile lines. speaking of, what is so bad about crows feet? and smile lines? like are you serious people? you're whining because you were joyful. thats just screwed up man. As an enemy of most of the Social Justice Workers ideas I have to say that her speech wasn't bad at all. She said that illness and real problems older people must face are true, but besides of that we shouldn't feel worse just because of the age . I understood is as a message: don't let that nocebo works. A lot of people are absolutely healthy and their body is still in a good shape, but they feel old just because they know they are 40 or 50+. And they start to behave like old , ill people. This is what this woman mentioned: as long as your body can work properly (and sometimes it's possible to the end of the life), don't let your spirit feel old and don't behave like you will die soon. Her speech is imho reasonable.	Age, Old, Woman	Age - General, Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	5/140	3.571
What a load of garbage. This is a perfect example of SJW philosophy. Just tell yourself something until you feel better about yourself even if it's not true. This talk was well-organized, clearly articulated with telling examples, and backed by data from reputable sources. No doubt, the topic and the clear, energetic delivery will make some people uncomfortable. And, I suppose it's human nature to be more motivated to comment on a talk one dislikes or that strikes a nerve. Ironically, the negative comments, with their personal attacks, lack of logic, and knee-jerk bias, actually support the presentation by demonstrating just how prevalent and serious the problem of ageism is. alwaysuseless I'm not saying it doesn't exist I'm saying it shouldn't concern anyone and I think it is even positive in some scenarios. I think we should treat people of differ age differently it doesn't cause harm and the behavior is based mostly on physical and mental condition of the average person of that age .	Age, Mental	Age - General, Physical Identity - Physical (and Mental) Impairments	3/55	5.455
Remember, just because some SJWs hijacked all the "isms" and argue that "all straight white males are pretty much all isms", does not mean that they don't exist at all. Don't let exaggerations like that fool you into thinking a pervasive issue like ageism does not deserve attention. I might disagree with the SJWs in how to then address the issue, but I would never argue that it does not exist or is not important.To suggest ageism doesn't affect behavior is silly. Why do you think anti-aging products exist? I don't think they are some sort of crime against humanity like some people seem to, but I do think it's a symptom of an underlying beauty standard disfavoring the old . The fact that people are prepared to pay top dollar for such items shows that these impacts are not so esoteric after all. People really do care, the impact is real and measurable. After all, a beauty standard is largely a cultural construct; other cultures have had vastly different ideas about beauty than the current Western culture.	Ageism, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/178	1.685

Ralph Schraven Very nice comment. I don't deny ageism doesn't exist and it certainly has a huge impact. All I'm saying is that when we compare a young person and old person in most cases the old person is gonna be slower, less attractive, less fit. So our stereotypes are best on our observation of the world. I'm not saying someone should be treated differently because of their age I'm saying it's natural to assume these things. I'm also not saying that we don't have a problem with what media tells us about who is beautiful and who's not.	Age, Ageism, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	4/99	4.04

I enjoyed this speech a lot. I agree with the point that culture shapes how individuals look at aging. In Western cultures, older individuals are not seen as valuable members of society anymore. In other cultures, growing old is an honor and younger individuals hold them in reverence for their knowledge and wisdom. Aging in America is seen as a loss of life, in a way... all we see are anti-aging everything BUT an anti-aging diet, but that's another conversation. I will piggy back another poster in that the sociological construct of ageism is created; however as we age , processes change...its a biological fact. Not everything is ageism , just like not everything is racism , sexism or homophobia . There is an overuse of -ism's in American society now. Sometimes, facts hurt... but that does not negate the reality that they are facts. I've read a lot of the comments that have been posted here...Applewhite is just bringing awareness to something that is very, very real, despite all the possible faults in her way of delivering her message. I'm from Colombia. Discrimination against old people is deeply rooted on all of those prejudices we all have against old age , imparted by the same media that has affected how we view gender, race , etc. We see aging as an impairment, a disease that needs to be isolated even, and as part of our culture, this view on age DOES affect how they feel, their productivity and generates more issues in their health. While they do get financial benefits, seats on the bus, etc., it's about how they're "othered". Please don't dismiss her message. Well there are something right. But different age usually behave differently. From generation of experience. To many things. And it's scientifically proven that aging makes life harder to sustain. Before medical care, people life are shorter.And that's all across cultures. And what about telomerase shortening which correlates with aging and correlates with many disease? If we cure things coming from aging. We can cure death. But again aging might just mean chronological aging. In this case it's real. But equity over equality guy! Aging makes you irrelevant and your dreams impossible to achieve. I'm 30 and pretending to be 20 because everyone my age is boring and over-the-hill. It's the youth that have potential! The peak age of human life passes before you know it. You thought you would live until 80, but didn't recognize how awful things get by 30 already. You only really live through your 20's then its just some crappy end-game content where you're sore and heartless and lost the color of life.You're only as old as you think you are, so never grow up or be adult. Personally as a young women I've experienced many times older women treating me well, like a dummy, treating me like I'm a child and they're more mature and experienced etc and it drives me mad! (especially in the workplace). Maturity isn't dependent on age , but life experience, and that I've got plenty. Is this considered ageist behavior?	Age, Ageist	Age - General	2/57	3.509

No, it's just a silly thing to do. Making an -ism that encompasses whole society out of individual behaviour (though it is common , but it is not a problem) indicates a logical fallacy. You don't extrapolate one case on everybody. You live in society, therefore nobody owns you anything in the first place. People will not accept your subjective point of view at all cases, but this speaker implies that their feelings are more important than what people want to say. This is dumb narrative, noone cares about what you think and you should no care either. It's this simple. Clouds are not cotton candy, and rivers are not milk. You are not child anymore, but a part of human community that can be harsh, disrespectful and rude. The world this woman is talking about is an impossible utopia. Rio, I understand your perception of being treated like a child. It is not appropriate to treat you like that. Also, I agree that maturity is based on life experience. How much of that do you really have? Have you watched your parents die, yet? Have you raised a child? Have you had 15 different jobs in 10 different cities? Have you visited 10 different countries? Have you battled a chronic illness? Have you held your spouses hand while they died? Have you lost everything and had to start over with little more than the clothes on your back? Most " old " people have all of the above. Including me.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/109	0.917

I dont think the problem lies in lack of perspective, I just think that she shouldnt take this "issue" (ill provide my reason for putting that in quotes in a moment), and cloak it in lies about capitalism, sexism , racism , etc. And thats exactly what it is. She lies about things such as the effects of age on the human body and reinforces it with popular SJW beliefs. The fact is, aging DOES have negative effects on the human body. Its not a social construct, and its not just a market that these so called big pharmaceutical companies have pushed on people. It's science. As people age , the telomeres that act as a cap for the end of a chromosome begin to shorten with each replication as a person ages, causing each new cell to be more damaged than the last. Now Im not going to try and tell you that the nullment of her argument makes it ok to dehumanize old people, but frankly, I dont think that happens too much anyway. If a person is going to dehumanize someone, theyre going to do it to just about anyone, black , white, old , young, republican, democrat, you name it. " Ageism ", racism , sexism , all just convenient mediums of dehumanization. So really, this woman is not preaching to the young white males of the world as she may think, but rather, she is preaching to the irrational people of the world (no those are not interchangeable) and those people arent going to change. And finally, this woman thinks that she speaks on behalf of ALL elderly people, when in fact, I know that my own grandparents, on either side, would be appalled to be victimized like this. They are all independent DESPITE what old age has done to their bodies. my grandfather for example, is 72 years old and still works 4-6 12 hour days per week. I dont think I could have more respect for that. I hope you read the whole thing with an open mind, and if you did, I also have some respect for you. I believe ageism exists in this country in a different form than she describes, for example you are not allowed to drive a vehicle until you are 16 despite your responsibility and capability. Another example would be that you are not allowed to vote until you are 18, despite your level of education and understanding, and the final example would be that you can't join the military until you are 17 despite you physical and mental capabilitys. Lol, yes, I'm American, but I wish my state, California, could secede from the union. The election of Crazy Clown Trump was the last straw. Of course, you would never have guessed that I would have watched Salatut Elämät. But why is it shockingly bizarre? Because it was your favorite show? :-) Or because it's so obscure and/or shallow? I liked the character Elias and especially how he handled Lari's bullying when they first met. I hadn't thought about the dubbing and other "pampering" that Germans get. Of course, my German friends are all fluent in English. Which means I start out speaking German with them and end up speaking English. It's so much easier for everyone.Is this English exam for gymnasium, university, or a job? (Lykkyä tykö!) If you can converse as well as you write, you're probably at the C1 or even C2 level. I don't know whether English is your first language, so in case it's not, you should know that "ask" is a fair question, and "task" is a presumptuous demand. In any case, I'll assume you didn't intend to be rude. I didn't exactly say Trump should cause the secession of California. That's stronger than my personal interest in California's secession, heightened though it is by Trump's election. Of course, secession would have several advantages and some disadvantages to California and its citizens. However, I haven't researched this carefully, because it's not realistically possible for any state to secede. I was voicing my frustration with the fact that the U.S. is not a democracy but a republic. Specifically, the Electoral College, not the people, elect the president. We got George W. Bush with 47 of the popular vote as president, instead of Al Gore with 51, and Donald Trump with 46 instead of Hilary Clinton with 55. In practical terms, George W. Bush was elected by the Supreme Court 5 to 4, by its decision to stop the recount of votes in Florida.This has nothing to do with my feelings. Come to think of it, your snide and belittling comment that "it doesn't count that he [Trump] hurt my feelings" suggests that you were being deliberately rude. So please troll somewhere else. Someone once told me that I would never get anywhere in life because I was dreaming big, young in age , and my race . Well let me just say that I've proven them dead wrong. Not even 20 yet and I've managed to not only lengthen my resume long enough to be shocking, I've gotten myself a great part-time job that pays more than minimum wage at a reasonable time length. I'm moving on in life to university, putting in my part to take care of my parents while they take care of me, and most of all I'm far more happy than that person who put me down when I was "too young".I'm not just another person who "stuck lucky" and I definitely am not privileged. I'm someone who has hustled hard and earned my keep. It's not age , race , or anything that makes a person successful, it's the work they're willing to put into what they do.People are fascinating in that way. When we put in enough effort, or even have just enough support to push forward, the boundaries are erased and limitations can be farther than the sky can reach. We see it everyday, we just don't seem to notice it every time it happens.	Age, Race	Age - General, Ethnicity - General	4/209	1.914

Rather stupid to compare two eras in science and development of society, considering that back then church was in charge of ideology. Even if we consider only the principal part, people fought back then with scientific facts and not their feelings. So your point plays against yourself.And our perception builds on our subjective view. If I see a man, that wants to be addressed like a woman, I would keep addressing to him like a man. If it's an actual man, but very feminine, I would address to him as a woman, simply because my subconsciousness says that's a woman. I do not deny the existence of these people, I simply want them to understand that they are a part of society and not society itself. They can not change the basics civilizations have been built upon. Up to this point, I don't see advances to reconcile people. Some people mature physically or mentally earlier than others and then arent given "rights" and abilities because they're too "young." OK Chal Fish, here's what I did, I watched the video again with a pencil in hand and tallied every time she made a comment about ageism from the perspective of an older vs a younger person and here are the results:younger: 2, older: 39.I only found one place in the video where she clearly said it goes both ways, at 1:41. Counterbalance that against the snarky quip she made towards young people at 7:30. The rest of the video is entirely biased, talking about ageism from the perspective that it's a phenomenon that negatively impacts people as they get older, that ageism is discrimination against older people. This wasn't even remotely close to being an even-handed presentation.She's full of it, just talking her book. When she starts talking about all the privileges that older people have, I'll start listening. Maybe then she could investigate what happens when politicians start talking about taking those special privileges away in the interests of fairness (which is what she should call for if she wants to truly fight for age-based equality). I've seen it first hand. It's us oldies who protest the most and fight tooth and nail to keep our special privileges. That's not true.On average, older people have higher medical expenses, sure. However, there are a lot of people in there 60s and 70s who are much more active and healthy than others in their 20s. Intelligent, profit oriented companies don't turn away older people just based on their age .On the other hand, there are certain fields where you prefer people who are just starting in the workforce, aren't negatively influenced by prior employers, that is also true, but this account for a minuscule percentage of jobs.Generally speaking, how you maintain your body's health (lifestyle, diet, exercise, mental and physical hygiene) matters way more than how long have you used your body for. rick, if ageism is created simply to "maximize profit", then it IS a social construct, and a economic construct, and a political construct as well. Aside from that, ageism goes far beyond the workplace. Many Americans just assume older people are less capable, "pathetic", simply because of their age . Since 30 to 50 percent or more fertilized eggs are naturally aborted with normal menstruation, your notion that at conception one must treat a fertilized egg as if it had all the moral equivalence of a fully formed human child is so extreme as to be laughable. "a woman must be free to make when it comes to child bearing."No person "MUST" be free. That is pseudo-reasoning at its best. A person might be allowed to be free or justifiably free. But there is no compulsion of nature that forces a mandate for a person to be free. All person give up their freedom to function as sole actors in moral and ethical decision making the moment they enter into a community of others. A person is free to make moral decisions that affect no one else solely when they live utterly independent and devoid of all interactions with all others. That "complexity" you mention has no value because those whom she affects in her decision making have no legal authority for redress when her decisions harm them physically, sexually, intellectually, and/or emotionally."fertilized eggs are naturally aborted with normal menstruation"Acts of nature have no moral conviction. This is a red herring. And the correct term would be miscarried not aborted. This is a straw man you conflated into the red herring.Nothing in what you stated is valid ethical or moral reasoning. It is only self-serving argument for a feminist lobby intent on maintaining a practice which is ethically more repugnant than slavery. Slavery denied human beings liberty which denied them the pursuit of happiness. Abortion denies identifiable human beings life which denies them liberty which denies them their choice to pursue happiness.You have an option. Either 1) Homosexuality is an abnormal result of genetics resulting in the sexual identity of the person being driven by genetic outcomes, or 2) homosexuality is the result of experiential training on a mind that is tabula rasa.
