Next time anyone ridicules a woman scientist, tell them about Emmy Noether. Symmetry is the basis of conservation in Physics, discovered by a woman ...	Woman	Gender - General	2/24	8.333
He does eventually address sexism . This kind of thing also happens to men, but probably affects women more. Apparently the man who discovered fractals wasn't taken seriously till much later. I do hope things are a bit more equal now and people of both genders get ignored and cheated out of credit in equal measure.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/55	1.818
I think this is more to do with something other than sexism , like perhaps covert narcissism.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/16	6.25
Jocelyn bell did nothing of science, don't lie She was using the invention of a man, then she saw something through it she could not understand. The man you try to diminish was the inventor, and could have let anybody, ANY PERSON, even you, to watch through it, and it had NOT been your discovery either. Oppression myths. I've done two things that would get me a cookie more or less out of sympathy. I came up with my own set of primes, and I found a way to chart numbers in my special triangle. I'm still working on that one. I found the thought after reading a book by Linus Pauling. He didn't highlight it, but I think he was thinking of it when he wrote down other findings. I'm not very smart. I'm 30 and as intelligent as a high school senior .	Senior	Age - Over 65s	1/86	1.163
Hardly a lesson in sexism and more a lesson in life about others taking credit for your work. This happens all the time to both sexes.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/26	3.846
There are similar nobel prize stories involving male scientists junior and senior . And many dogma breaking discoveries are always dismissed at first irregardless of gender . So this has little to do with sexism .	Gender, Senior, Sexism	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	3/33	9.091
It's not about sexism Dr. Kaku, it happens to every junior from any authoritative senior belonging to any gender on any side.	Gender, Senior, Sexism	Age - Over 65s, Gender - General	3/22	13.636

Example 1: Adding massive amounts of strange and unobservable matter to the universe, at the time without any evidence, just so you can get rid of a problem certainly must've been seen as a very controversial idea. I doubt the reactions had much to do with the sex of the scientist who made such a bold claim, but rather with the boldness of the claim.Example 2: A professor rips off one of his graduates, now that has never ever happened to a man, right? surearrowThere is nothing wrong pointing out what's wrong with society. And there is nothing wrong talking about politics especially if it affects science or if scientific findings affect society. Policies affects science especially if the government want to suppress climate change by reducing funding to its research or if a religious conservative government reduces funding to science (see Canada's Harper government and Erdogan's Turkish government). Ok this is much more a history of dark matter than of sexism .	Sexism	Gender - General	1/13	7.692

I feel compelled to be devil’s advocate here. In the 1940s, a lowly graduate student observed the antagonistic effects of microorganisms in the soil. Day and night for weeks and months, Albert Schatz grew and observed microbes isolated from the soil in the search for potentially useful antibiotics. Once he observed a promising result, he worked painstakingly to isolate and test the effectiveness of this antibiotic. He told his supervisor (Selman Waksman), who promptly took care to pocket the royalties, public recognition and also the Nobel Prize. Waksman traveled all over the place to present ‘his’ work. Listen to the description of Jocelyn Bell’s work in the video, and you will find both cases eerily similar. But, of course, Schatz’s stolen work is not possibly a case of sexism. But if his story had been unchanged except for his gender, it would almost certainly stand as a modern example of sexism. I am not saying that sexism wasn’t prevalent during the time the video and I have described, but let’s just hold on to our horses first, and analyse each case by its merits. Often, scientists are just too eager for credit, and loose sight of fairness in the process.I hope this comment doesn’t get lost amongst the thousands of others. If you found this comment reasonable, please upvote it. (That sounded a lot more pedantic than I hoped... I;’m just really passionate about the history of science and especially the rise of modern medicine) PS read Experiment Eleven: Deceit and Betrayal in the Discovery of the Cure for Tuberculosis by Peter Pringle for details on the Schatz story. It’s an easy read and gives insight into the student supervisor dynamics of the time.	Gender, Sexism	Gender - General	4/285	1.404
+Bryanna O what was in the video was not examples of sexism. It was just examples of some girls being ripped off. It happens to men as well.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/28	3.571
lol video titled: history of sexism, video contents: explanation of dark matter.....	Sexism	Gender - General	1/12	8.333
Those stories aren’t examples of sexism, but rather examples of scientists with fewer credentials being laughed off by other scientists with more credentials! There are plenty of examples of this happening to male scientists, such as Wagner when he postulated the idea of plate tectonics, Frank Whittle when he invented the jet engine, Louis Pasteur with the idea of germ theory, Stewart Goodwin with Helicobacter pylori and a whole bunch of other examples! If there is sexism in science, that you have to show that women’s ideas are unjustly ridiculed at a higher rate than men’s ideas!	Sexism	Gender - General	2/97	2.062
yes, but what does this have to do with sexism? perhaps she just got ripped off for a little while. happens all the time.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/24	4.167

Of course. And Einstein stole his ideas from his wife and actually he was a woman . Regardless, what about the thousands of much brighter male scientists whose ideas were ridiculed? What about Boltzmann who committed suicide because of that? What about male scientists who were burned at the stake by the inquisition? It seems to me like the sexism is the other way around if the yardstick of sexism in science is how much a sex suffers for being ridiculed. But I do not believe this story about the genius female who was ridiculed because she was female. It sounds too much like feminist propaganda, too artificial, too convenient to the ideologically driven in order to be true. At worse she was ridiculed because her ideas seemed outrageous, no other reason. Now in the academia people are afraid to call the ridiculous ideas of a woman ridiculous because then they get in trouble with the politically corect establishment. The same with blacks and other protected groups that cannot be touched, criticised, even looked at in a way that can be construed funny. How many more billions of dollars have to be wasted, how many really talented male scientists will have to be discarded before the obvious, the reasonable, the factual will be recognized, namely that women cannot do science. NguyenDynasty not really, life dosent have to be made out of matter. It just has to follow the rules of life1. Composed of cells; if no cell, no life. (for this reason, viruses are not considered to be alive.) 2. Organization; both on a molecular and cellular level. 3. Metabolism; all living organisms must use energy of some sort. 4. Response to Stimuli; simple or complex actions in response to environment. Adaptation would fit under this topic as well. 5. Reproduction; living things must be able to reproduce, not for the individual, but for the continuation of life. 6. Growth; not all organisms must grow or develop, through cell enlargement or replication, but it is common in most living things.(Answer byXxNannon-ChanxX)	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/123	0.813

They don't really mind coming out as assholes and they don't need company to feel alright.Most people confuse sociopathy with psychopathy and that's where my fun begins. That was in the sixties, people were more sexist then. I'm sure the prof stealing was stealing the credit for the good(?) research since he knew she wouldn't speak up.I think they do it to men too, but you hear about it more if it's a woman. (I'd love to hear statistics about that)Choose your prof carefully (not just on prestige) and ask around the prof's lab how much credit is given to students. Also, log your work (and conclusions!!!!) properly.	Woman	Gender - General	1/83	1.205

I'm just not sold on dark matter. It spawned when we realized there simply wasn't enough gravity in the universe to hold galaxies together, and we predicted those galaxies were held together with black holes. Just look at all the problems we've had with black holes, especially lately. We know next to nothing about them. It seems every year the idea of a black whole is fizzling apart. Isn't it far more likely that we vastly misunderstand gravity, black holes, and the forces? Instead we create this force that is completely undetectable, that we know nothing about, and governs all the problems of the universe that we don't understand. It reminds me a lot of the debate when light was discovered to travel in a vacuum and many people thought there was an "ether" that made up most of space to allow electromagnetic waves to travel. I'm no physicist. I'm a random self educated physics enthusiast, but something just doesn't add up.	Black, Nothing	Age - Youngsters, Ethnicity - Black	6/162	3.704

Im disappointed with kaku, was he even thinking before presenting this as an example for sexism in scientific community ? I think he was just trying to tap out some fame from modern day sentiments. Even einsteins relativity was a joke to many noble winning laureates until recently. Although I tend to agree that sexism is ingrained in academia, I don't think this example (as it was described here at least) provides any evidence of sexism . It is common for established researchers to take the main credit for findings made by inexperienced and unknown students, regardless of the gender . One might speculate that Michio Kaku was fully aware that it provides no evidence when he said it...	Common, Gender, Sexism	Gender - General, Social Class - Working class	4/69	5.797

She never publicly criticized the Nobel prize committee decision. In fact, in 1977 she said: There are several comments that I would like to make on this: First, demarcation disputes between supervisor and student are always difficult, probably impossible to resolve. Secondly, it is the supervisor who has the final responsibility for the success or failure of the project. We hear of cases where a supervisor blames his student for a failure, but we know that it is largely the fault of the supervisor. It seems only fair to me that he should benefit from the successes, too. Thirdly, I believe it would demean Nobel Prizes if they were awarded to research students, except in very exceptional cases, and I do not believe this is one of them. Finally, I am not myself upset about it – after all, I am in good company, am I not!	Dame	Gender - General	1/200	0.5
To label it sexism because it involves women isn't a good argument for sexism. A thesis advisor took credit for the discovery of pulsars found by his student. That makes him a liar, but to say he is sexist is to assume he wouldn't have lied if his student was a man. People have also dismissed, doubted, or ignored theories put forth by scientists that were men. To claim it is sexism because a female scientist's theory was dismissed, doubted, or ignored is to again claim sexism based solely on the fact that it is a woman being doubted or dismissed. intil intil There is no record of a "Lady Hypathia," so no one knows who You are talking about. There is a record of Hypathia, a prominent Neo Platonist educator and scholar in Alexandria, who was a famous mathematician and Philosopher. But Her story is the exact OPPOSITE of Your bizarre comment. She was world famous and had incredible power, which is the exact opposite of Your comment. Why don't you ENUMERATE all those women that have been DENIED the right to be educated because of their sex . It works both ways Moron. Mhkail Reilly Sexism is a real thing. This was a poor example. But that doesn't mean that women are treated as equals.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/22	4.545

Joey Hauschildt People, are never. and I mean NEVER treated as equals. Humans have a thing called "Same group preference" Studies have shown that if you take a white test subject and test his preference for a bunch of other subjects. He will show preference for whites over blacks. A black subject will show the same preference for blacks.You can even take a bunch of white subjects, and put a "Blue Team" shirt on half, and a "Red Team" shirt on the other half. and blue team members will prefer their own team.This is same group preference. HOWEVER. While females show a very strong same group preference. Males do not as a group. If you make two teams "Men's Team" and "Women's Team" and tell both a man and a woman to choose things. They will show preference for females. almost 100 of the time. Females are the preferred group across the board. This is why I think "Patriarchy" falls flat, because for their to be a "Patriarchy" you have to believe that if you take 100 people, 90 are women and 10 are men. then you say that those 10 are in charge and make ALL the rules. You have to believe that they would turn the 90 women into slaves to do their bidding.History shows this is not the case. Feminists try to compare female rights history to black rights history. Joey Hauschildt Firstly, This has nothing to do with Muslim countries. We are Discussing Michio Kaku and the " Sexism " he experiences at work.Secondly I think you need to research slavery, because what women experience, EVEN in Muslim countries. while horrendous in many cases. is NOT slavery. Please research what slavery is. As I find it deeply and horribly offensive that you would claim women have been slaves for all recorded history. Anyone with a grade school education in History knows slavery involves chains, backbreaking work, and the murder of those who try to escape.Even in black slavery of the united states, there were laws protecting black women from physical abuse, murder, and rape. Yes sociopaths and horrible people did do terrible things to black women, including but not limited to raping and killing them. Just consider the logistics of a legislature which considered a race of people property, that they had no more rights than cattle, literally. Where you could beat them, chop of the front part of their feet, whip them until death, and hang them for the smallest transgression...Consider the logistics of that legislature making laws to protect only the female half from such abuses. It does not matter that the penalty for breaking these laws was a minor fine and a stern talking to. The men were not offered even that protection.women have been a privileged class in "Almost" every civilization in recorded history. I include current day Muslim nations in the "Privileged" class. Give me any examples you have of women having it worse than men. and I will cede the argument to you. If however I can prove that the men in that same area have it worse, well then we will let that have its own implications. I love and respect women, however let's be honest about it, most of then have a lower brain computing power as most men. This can be seen in chess for instance, where top ELOs are around 3k2 IIRC while the top woman has 2k6 (and she's exceptional) while other women top around 2k2. Nevertheless, they don't deserve being fooled and stripped of their discoveries and ideas by ambitious scientists.	Woman	Gender - General	1/69	1.449
Mad NessNo worries, I'm not planning to keep talking to an overly emotional child with very obvious educational & parental issues. Not mentioning how you ironically call my comments "full of shit", while you don't seem to be able to read them, or yours, for comparison. Finally, you don't have to be sorry for being who you are, however life will teach you how to behave properly when you are angry, especially when you are angry for no reason other than being the only one who talks shit. I believe you. I’m sure that is largely or entirely true in the field of science. At least that is the impression I get. It might not have been sexism with her. It’s just a strong possibility that it played a part. Nowadays however I don’t think that would play a part in any ridicule or rejection. You can't know which gender I am based on what I've said. Equal rights and equal opportunity is morally right. I don't agree with either gender being given special treatment. I agree with you on that. So if that is what some people are supporting then that is wrong and not beneficial to our society. Men and women are equally valuable and intelligent so we need a system that brings out the best in both without special treatment or discrimination of any kind from either gender . You're not responding to what I'm saying. Nowhere did I claim Rubin did not face any sexism whatsoever in her career, nor did I say pointing out these things makes a person a sexist. Please re-read my comments.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/38	2.632
Things we know: Rubin's reasons for proposing dark matter were based on sound scientific reasons. The majority of theories are responded to with disagreement not ridicule. Rubin fought sexism among her peers in the Cosmo Club. She was flatly informed by Princeton Uni that women were not accepted on their graduate programmes. These are good reasons to think Rubin faced sexism , and to believe that she did in light of these facts does not make a person a sexist, as you have quite absurdly claimed.	Sexism	Gender - General	2/85	2.353
Vera Rubin made these discoveries in an era when the Cosmos Club barred female members, something she battled against throughout her career. The scientific establishment at the time didn't need to explicitly say they laughed at her ideas because of her sex when they wouldn't allow her to be a member of the Cosmos 'boys club' because she was female. Being dismissive of the struggles women have had to overcome is itself part of sexism . I'm glad Michio Kaku sees that, even if you do not.	Sex, Sexism	Gender - General	2/86	2.326

Yes there is thought to be a supermassive black hole at the centre of every galaxy. I believe this, along with dark matter helps "hold" the galaxy together and maintain structural integrity. Otherwise everything would just fly away from everything else without the gravitational forces that these phenomenon produce. Everything that exists has an effect on everything else to some extent. Everything is interconnected. Life really is a unified field.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	1/70	1.429
Agreed that the title is misleading, as the sexism part was a sort of footnote to an interesting explanation of the dark universe, and that science can be very resistant to foundational challenge. But for all the progressive bravery of renegades like Einstein & Rubin, scientists are humans in human social contexts; their histories are not apart from socio-political dispositions, their own or others'. Some appreciate Kaku's address of those complexities; it can be as interesting as the science.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/79	1.266
Why must Michio Kaku (or the people for whom he speaks) insist on bringing in politics and sexism and the like. His videos are interesting because of his clear, scientific explanations, but infusing another agenda into them is, for me, unforgivable. Besides, as Menegoth pointed out, scientists are generally a cynical bunch, some of whom will use submit the work of others as their own. The title of this video is very misleading.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/73	1.37
black holes are invisible because in order for us to see something you need light to bounce off the object and enter your eyes/telescope. As black holes so freaking massive and their gravity is so strong light, once entered the event horizon, cannot escape it and thus we cannot see a thing.	Black	Ethnicity - Black	2/52	3.846
Black holes are invisible and have gravity, we only detect them from seeing light bend around them, surely they are related to dark matter and energy, especially since haven't some physicists claimed they are potential links to other universes, dimensions, states of time or states of existence? Not quite sure as i'am not up on specific details, but also since they are the current accepted centre of galaxies, surely they are heavily involved in dark matter and dark energy. I wouldn't say that the pulsar story was something that happened because the grad student was female, just simply because they were a grad student. These kind of stories are riddled throughout the history of science, of big names either stealing credit or destroying anything that challenges their models. It's not his fault. The video title is misleading. The question shown at the start is "Will we discover a 'theory of everything' by 2050?" Ironically, it seems that Kaku is the one taking the initiative to talk about the problem of sexism in science.	Sexism	Gender - General	1/45	2.222

true point. not to say there isn't genderism, and there have been females who have contributed for example it was a woman who took the first step towards binary for computers. What do you mean by "elements"?Most scientists, engineers , and really anyone else who does work on the subject accept an element to be a type of atom. I don't care about "ancient elements", those have nothing to do with anything and were based on nothing substantial.Also, I repeat, I don't care how myth is expressed, the difference between myth and poetry is that myth is not necessarily aesthetic and that people actually believe in myths. "In physics when a theory is proven then it is usually declared a fact or also commonly it is relabeled as a law, yes?" No. It's not "relabeled", it gains a new label without dropping the old one of "theory". Theories can be either proven or unproven, theories always being unproven is just a misconception. And every single thing anyone knows is an educated guess (and rightfully so), but we can assign probabilities of guesses being true (never reaching 100 certainty). That's what science does.	Old	Age - Over 65s	1/85	1.176
Okay your kind of right but also kind of wrong. No theoretical is NOT "unproven physics". You have a common misunderstanding of what theoretical physics means. Although theoretical physics MAY INCLUDE unproven and thereful unjustifiable if beleived theories, it may still also include proven theories. But ignoring your misused of the word and just focusing on what you MEAN, yes, you're right. Theories that are unproven should not be assumed true. (whether thats string/M theory or god).	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/77	1.299
And by the way, you keep implying that theoretical physics is "assumptious unproven" physics. The scientific meaning of the word theory is more along the lines of "explanation". For example, einsteins theory of relativity is undoubtly proven fact, but just because it's proven we don't stop calling it a theory. It's still technically "theoretical physics". You have a common misunderstanding of what it theoretical physics is.	Common	Social Class - Working class	1/66	1.515
Actually B is more like: all the energy in the universe was concentrated in a single, infinitely-hot point and then for some reason it started to expand and cool down. Once it cooled, complex designed-like features emerged. You know like the blob of steam. When it cools down it looks more ordered until it starts to look like snow-flakes. Crazy stuff, you know. P.S. and don't ask where that point came from.
