If a picture is really important in this day and age, you hang it on the wall or frame it. It could be a wooden frame, a plastic frame, you could keep it on your desk or your meditation space if it makes you happy. Decades from now this will be seen as stubborn and old fashioned, much like letter writing is today(I actually write as a 20 year old to my older relatives), we will be the ones who haven't adapted yet to whatever new thing they do in the future. I just like to think about things like this, I find it charming	Age, Old	Age - General, Age - Over 65s	3/105	2.857

Stupid things old people will say in the future (and even some now). We thought the world was ending in the year 2000, but it didn't. Prince even made a song about it. We thought all computers were going to implode in the year 2000, because of Y2K, but nothing happened. Chris Jericho even made a wrestling nick name about it. I'm 54 yrs old. My great-Uncle Homer (born in late 1895!) used to tell me stories of driving by the Santa Monica pier in his first car, a Model T, at the frightening speed of 35mph oh hearing War of the Worlds on the radio with his family and everyone freaking out because they thought it was real of getting their first television, a black and white one of being in World War I and being in World War II. A few years before he passed, he bought a 'Scooby Doo' van, with an 8 track player in it and mag wheels, and taught me how to drive in it. He was a man that lived thru the first radios, TV's, The Great Depression, two World Wars, Viet Nam, commercial flying and the moon shot, 8 track tapes and MTV No generation before or since has seen the things that HIS generation did. I held his hand as we unplugged the life support system and wished him happy journies as he went on to the next great adventure.	Black, Old	Age - Over 65s, Ethnicity - Black	2/182	1.099

Wowit makes you think indeed. I am almost 40, and I can see that difference, althoughOne thing that always bothered me was the fact that old photos are very mysterious. I have a few of my passed relatives' photos, but not much information to go on from them. Nobody wants to tell me about them in depth, so perhaps having pictures of their detailed life (breakfast they enjoyed, shoe style favorite, endless selfies of different angles, traveling photos) creates an archive of their lives, in a way I always craved to know my relatives in a deeper way. I am looking at this from a glass half full perspective, I believe lol.	Nobody, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	2/113	1.77

taher tufenkeji lmao that's what the media portrays but its so far from the truth. I recently read a study that says that cops are much less likely to shoot an unarmed black man than they are an unarmed white man, this is probably due to the fact that whenever a black man gets shot by cops, people riot and there's a ton of backlash, no one gives a fuck whenever the same happens to whitey. Being Me I've been homeless on and off for the last six years. And while I lack the esteem (and narcissism) to consider myself hot, I don't think I'm unattractive. I'm in decent shape, I take care of myself to the best of my ability, and my hygiene, while not exactly top notch, isn't so abysmal as to make me look like I crawled from a burning dumpster. Hell, in all honesty, I know more fairly attractive homeless people than ones that look like your stereotypical bum (not to say I don't also know a fair amount that look like the cumulative crust under Zoidberg's ass flaps). It's not outside the realm of possibility, not even necessarily uncommon, for a bum to be good looking. It's easier for people to think of all houseless folk as unkempt, haggard, ugly, drug abusing drunkards, I guess, although those are only a part of a much larger demographic consisting of all races, ages, and genders. No skin off my back, though. It always amuses me when such narrow minded, bigoted, or simply uninformed views are proven to be false.	Bum	Social Class - Destitute	2/186	1.075

Will you do better? Just wondering. Before I was a teenager I had a great life living my family, uncles, aunts, grand parents, although my parents got divorced when I was still 6. After that in my teens things got more complicated. Lived with my mother (and three siblings) who had to make it alone as a single parent. I never got into being a rebel teen. I studied hard at school. Literally sitting in the front row in every single class. I focused on studies to get my mind off the constant lack of money in our family. After high school I worked for a year and then went to uni. I studied hard there as well. Same thing sitting in the front row and always taking notes and revising, doing assignments. I never went to parties, didn't drink, didn't do any drugs. After uni I thought I was ready to change the world, lol. Started working in Finance and work quickly puts your delusions away. You find out that nothing is about you. You are not special. You start from scratch doing really simple and boring tasks. Even later on as you progress, nothing at work is challenging intellectually. It's more about how much of the same you can get done, and about resolving differences between people and fixing processes in the team. So more psychology involved really, which they never teach you at school unless you pick it as a subject but even then I wonder how much of it you could put into practise at work. Also in the wider context like the job market you realize how competitive you have to be. Anyway, my point is when you're young it's easy to overestimate yourself and think you're better than the older generation because you are learning a lot of stuff at school and uni, and are up-to-date with all the cool new tech around, and therefore are well on your way to achieving amazing things. But believe me, once you start working and finally have to take on responsibilities on your own in your life, you're opinion of yourself will readjust itself and you will see that achieving great things is not for the majority of people, and your dreams will become more realistic, such as getting a pay increase at the end of the financial year. And trust me just that on its own is no easy thing. Employers will not give you that little increase for nothing or for little. You would have to pull over time during weekends and during the week. Taking on responsibility for tasks and issues at work that have nothing to do with your job role. You will have to demonstrate all that and document it and show how it results in the company permanently saving money each year. Not to mention the company politics with different people in high positions such as managers, team leads, and them hindering your progress because of something you said the wrong way once, or because they want to promote their friends instead of you. Also thinking about starting a business in the current economic conditions? That's going to be harder. I know because I am attempting that too and have family running a business. That doesn't mean you can't achieve great things, it just means it is really hard to do and would require your entire focus, time and effort, and even beyond what you can give. Achieving great things in life is not as easy as you think. Same in relationships. You would date someone. They would most likely reject you at some point for various reasons. You will find out you are not as awesome as you think and not a chick magnet.

You're nothing more than an il-informed ignorant old person. You come from a time when the economy was booming. Your housing, education and healthcare was affordable, and you could easily work, buy a house, and support a family by your mid twenties. These days young people work MULTIPLE jobs, if they want to be able to afford their own shitty place. And if; god forbid you want to study and live on your own, you'll need to rent a shared house with 5 other people just to be able to afford rent. Young people of today work very hard, 10 times harder than you ever did, just to be able to afford to live, and they are rightly so; very unhappy with the world your generation left for them. You're know nothing about world history, if you truly believe that today's generation are entitled, and lazy.	Nothing, Old	Age - Over 65s, Age - Youngsters	3/146	2.055

All these mobile phone obsessed jerk offs, they make me sick. Stop following the crowd people: just get a small group of decent people, turn off the tv, the talent shows, the gossip, turn off your phone, un dye your hair from the silly color you've done it in, turn off cardi h or whoever you listen to and grow up. I'm 27, i like some people in my generation, but only some, there are only a few cool and intelligent people in the world, but most people have the mental agility of bird shit—they're not worth it. I love old people, why?, because they talk to you like a human being, they tell you old stories about their life, they're warm and don't have to put you down with some stupid fucking comment with no regard for you or your life, and they communicate with you properly instead of grunting and texting and wearing skinny jeans and some goofy fuckin shoes. Old people are way cooler than my generation, my uncle is a Buddhist and was a hippy in the 60s, he tried to follow the Beatles to India but him and his pals only got as far as Greece!, he's cooler than any guy i know, you sit beside him and he doesn't even have to speak and you feel good around him, unlike all these girly little try hards. x0xTHLover4Lifex0x I'll answer your first question. And ignore the rest. I.e. not even read it. It's more selfish to not have children because, people who have children generally have an investment in the future, people who don't, by choice, are generally the type who live a child like existence only thinking of themselves and the now, generally when they act concerned with the world, it's to feel superior, not because of any real investment. MsZephyra / People don't become more conservative because of "the privilege of accumulating wealth". I'd even say that poor old people tend to be more conservative than rich old people. The reason old people become conservative is because they realize a lot of their dreams and the things they fought for when they were young, believing it would make the world a better place, ended up with bad results. So as we get older, we tend to be more careful about changing society. Old people become more conservative because life teaches them that the saying, "a bird in hand is worth two in the bush", is quite true.	Old	Age - Over 65s	4/108	3.704
MsZephyra Also most poorer people support progressives policies but dont live long enough to be old liberals. Its the useless rich heirs who never worked a day in their lives who could afford yo be 90 and full of privileged biases who are old conservatives.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/45	4.444
Actually that trend seems to correlate with aging. So the older people are the more confused and conservative they become. The "liberals" of today are actually much closer to the Republicans of 25 years ago than they are to the actual left. Old people will likely always be more conservative and liberals will call themselves left while being closer to center-right. The left will continue to be silenced until they take up arms. Old hippies are the worst old people.	Old	Age - Over 65s	2/7	28.571

maylightbewithyou I'll explain it for you guys from my perspective since I think I'm at an in between point in my life. When you are young you tend to be pretty liberal. What you see today a lot of times is so far left it can't even be considered liberal but it doesn't mean your heart isn't in the right place. Anyways when you're young you tend to be more naive to the realities of life, and think that anyone who disagrees with liberal policies is just a heartless piece of shit. You should be more liberal when you're young. You should have more compassion for people and more caring for others especially the ones you don't know. You have more time to look out for others and do more for the environment etc because you tend to not worry as much about your own future. When you're a kid into your early 20's you tend to think yourself invincible. Life is precious and should be protected at all costs. You think your group of friends will be friends forever and nothing will change as you get older. You think the older ones who disagree with you lack empathy and that they are just bitter old people. And why don't most old people agree with your teachers, professors, liberal politicians etc. Everyone likes being right, and hates to admit when they are wrong. So when an older person agrees with you you think they are the smartest people on the planet "hey, this guy gets it". The reality is as you get older you have been through more. You have learned from mistakes and from the experiences of life and the people who brought you up. You learned on your own that that old heartless bastard across the street or from grandfather weren't so wrong when they said that a lot of people do suck and you can't be so trusting of strangers. You also learn it's not worth helping people who won't even lift a finger to help themselves. You start to question things when people make shitty choices and fuck up yet expect others to help them out of their problems. Especially when they keep making the same shitty choices. If you keep trying to help people and they keep fucking up then they are never going to learn how to fix their own problems. You aren't doing them, and you especially aren't doing future generations any favors by bailing them out all the time. You start to focus more about the people closest to you and less on the rest. It doesn't mean you don't care. It just means you are going to focus on the ones you can help the most. When you're older you have attended the funerals of several friends and family members and you know life is precious and it can end at any moment. That 14-24 year old you that thought he/she was invincible has come to the realization that you aren't. You see the naive younger generation and think "God if they only knew" but you were that age once and you know telling them whats up will probably go in one ear and out the other. Now that you are the same age as the teachers, professors, and politicians you can more easily point out the ones who are full of shit. One of the most wise and decent men I know is a very conservative, but I have argued with him about certain left wing policies and if I make a good enough point he tends to say things like "looking at it from that perspective I see your point" or "I never really thought of it that way". He also hates the republican party. He doesn't like the democrats either but the younger generation needs to understand that conservative

Sara Check well as true as that may be, I gather that the term 'conservative' will mean something entirely different by then. I'm sure they'll be a lot more like yesterday's liberals than you might think, so I certainly won't mind. People won't start out as liberals whilst young today who are generally less religious, less racist, less sexist, etc than your average conservativeand then age magically makes them more of those things. If I had to guess, the liberals who do turn into some of the conservative voter of tomorrow will have many liberal values when it comes to things like social issues, even if they become conservative in their views related to finance. When it comes to your stance on social issues, those generally don't change much as you ageconsidering they are a product more of your upbringing education, rather than your status. Your views on things like taxes, wages, budgets, immigration etc might very well change in accordance to where you are status/financial wise by then though. The older conservatives of today are the way they are simply due to the era of which they were born, the era of which most women knew their place, nonwhites belong in the back of the bus, and gays are mentally ill dirty sinners. Younger people today, especially liberals, hold those opinions less often obviously, so they're far more likely not to have them when they're older whether they start leaning more towards conservative votes/support or not, because at	Age, Racist	Age - General, Ethnicity - General	3/264	1.136
