Before I say anything I want to make clear that I don't lean right nor left to me both are extremes that lead to stagnation. We need globalization, yes. We need unity first as cultures then as nations then as a species, yes. We need the will and strength of one species united to face the challenges the future presents, there is no way around it. But adhering to the right, staying in each and everyone's turf, locking it to the outside world and rejecting all attempts at unification and centralisation, measly as they be (looking at you EU), only results in the stagnation of the country you so love, history has proven this since time immemorial. Also, the left preaching multiculturalism and inclusiveness is just as stagnant as it just widens the gap between cultures and heats up a debate over what is nothing, it is a contradictory movement by its very nature and wether or not they like it humans and cultures will always have some measure of individuality and intrinsic conflict to them no matter how equal the left pretends them to be. In my opinion what we need is a scaling down of globalization and centralisation to more local levels, say continents, more authoritarian governments, a more just legal system, hard prosecution of lawbreakers (regardless of bias), scaling down the influence of big corporations, centralisation of population centres. If united, there is nothing that can stop our species from claiming its birthright. And what is that birthright you may ask? Look around you, marvel at the achievements of your nation, your people, your culture and now gaze to the stars and imagine what our united species could achieve. That is our birthright, nothing less. Sorry for text wall. Niklan Sovin Negative. Europe is not, has not, ever been predominantly pagan. Now, time to educate you. A. Niklan Sovin Negative. Europe is not, has not, ever been predominantly pagan. Little is known about the prehistoric religion of Neolithic Europe. Bronze and Iron Age religion in Europe as elsewhere was predominantly polytheistic (Ancient Greek religion, Ancient Roman religion, Basque mythology, Finnish paganism, Celtic polytheism, Germanic paganism, etc.).But even these was most definitely based on a localized location. Not wide spread. In other words what was practiced in one village was taboo in another village a hundred miles away. The reader also needs to keep in mind that the worlds population was so much smaller then compared to today. During these times the population spread across Europe, Western or Eastern Europe was thin. The Best estimates for all of Europe to be no more than 3 million. Spread all the way from the shores of France to the leading edges of the Russian Federation under the czars. The Roman Empire officially adopted Christianity in AD 380. During the Early Middle Ages, most of Europe underwent Christianization, a process essentially complete with the Christianization of Scandinavia in the High Middle Ages. (Before the spread of Catholicism across Europe, paganism and paganistic teachings was always on a small centralized trajectory. There was never any wide spread one particular pagan religion over or on top of another. Catholics, Catholicism came into being around The notion of "Europe" and the "Western World" has been intimately connected with the concept of "Christianity and Christendom"; many even attribute Christianity for being the link that created a unified European identity, especially since Christianity in the Middle East was marginalized by the rise of Islam from the 8th century, a constellation that led to the Crusades, which although not a spectacular success, if one is speaking militarily only, but it was an important step in the emergence of a religious identity of Europe. At all times, traditions of folk religion existed largely independent from official denomination or dogmatic theology.The Great Schism of the 11th century and Reformation of the 16th century were to tear apart Christendom into hostile factions, and following the Age of Enlightenment of the 18th century, atheism and agnosticism have spread across Europe. 19th-century Orientalismcontributed to a certain popularity of Buddhism, and the 20th century brought increasing syncretism, New Age, and various new religious movementsdivorcing spirituality from inherited traditions for many Europeans. The latest history brought increased secularisation, and religious pluralism.And because of all of this, for the last 100 years Europe and Europeans entered into what we now call a 'religious dark age.' Europeans today not all of course and definitely more so in Western Europe compared to eastern Europe that is having no problems with North African Muslim migration, Western Europeans are adrift pertaining to spiritual matters. Countries that do not stay grounded in a higher belief in God instead of themselves always fall in to moral and social decay. Just look at large areas of America and Western Europe. B. Absolutely. Im 24, voted leave, soon to vote brexit party. Got their leaflet today by chance Used to view myself as "liberal progressive" im now a proud British nationalist, I don't not want to live in a police state. I don't want my ancestry/heritage/traditions/culture influenced or stripped from me, for the sake of political correctness and let's be honest, anti-white racists.I care about free speech and democracy and neither are negotiable. We shouldnt change our society to suit deeply religious immigrants, or be told that because we are white, our culture and pure existence is evil or "problematic"We are entitled to our national and individual identities as Europeans or native Brits, without being demonized.
